Whereupon their Lordſhips ordered, That the Lord High Steward do pronounce the ordinary Judgment of Death upon the Lord Viſcount Stafford, as the Law hath appointed in Caſes of High Treaſon.

And a Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons from their Lordſhips, by Sir Timothy Baldwin and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker,

We are commanded by the Lords to acquaint this Houſe, That their Lordſhips are going preſently into Weſtminſter-Hall to give Judgment againſt William Viſcount Stafford.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

The Committee of Commons appointed for the Management of the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, with the reſt of the Commons, went into Weſtminſter-Hall, to the Court there erected; to be preſent when the Lords gave Judgment of High Treaſon againſt him, upon the Impeachment of the Commons of England.

After a ſhort time their Lordſhips were adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, coming in their former Order into the Court there erected; where being ſeated, and the Lord High Steward being on the Wool-ſack, attended by Garter principal King of Arms, the Uſher of the Black Rod, eight of the Serjeants at Arms kneeling with their Maces, the ninth making proclamation for ſilence; which being done, the Lord High Steward gave Judgment upon the Priſoner as followeth.

L. H. Steward. 'My Lord Stafford,

'THAT which your Lordſhip hath ſaid in Arreſt of Judgment, hath been found by my Lords upon due conſideration had of it, to be of no moment at all. It is no Eſſential part of any Tryal, That the Priſoner ſhould hold up his Hand at the Bar; there is no Record ever made of it when it is done; the only uſe of it is to ſhew the Court who the Priſoner is, and when that is apparent, the Court does often proceed againſt him, though he refuſe to hold up his Hand at the Bar: therefore the omiſſion of that Ceremony in this caſe is no legal Exception, as all the Judges have declared.

'And as to the Proviſo's in the Statute of the 13th Year of this King, their Lordſhips do find that they are in no ſort applicable to this caſe, foraſmuch as the Proceedings againſt your Lordſhip are not grounded upon that Statute, but upon the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. And yet if the Proceedings had been upon the latter Statute, the Proviſos therein could have done your Lordſhip no ſervice at all.

'My part therefore which remains, is a very ſad one: for I never yet gave Sentence of Death upon any Man, and am extremely ſorry that I muſt begin with your Lordſhip.

'Who would have thought that a Perſon of your Quality, of ſo Noble an Extraction, of ſo conſiderable Eſtate and Fortune, ſo eminent a Sufferer in the late ill Times, ſo intereſted in the preſervation of the Government, ſo much obliged to the Moderation of it, and ſo perſonally obliged to the King and his Royal Father for their particular Favours to you, ſhould ever have entered into ſo infernal a Conſpiracy as to contrive the Murder of the King, the Ruin of the State, the Subverſion of Religion, and, as much as in you lay, the Deſtruction of all the Souls and Bodies in three Chriſtian Nations?

'And yet the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons amounts to no leſs a Charge, and of this Charge their Lordſhips have found you guilty.

'That there hath been a general and deſperate Conſpiracy of the Papiſts, and that the Death of the King hath been all along one chief part of the Conſpirators Deſign, is now apparent beyond all poſſibility of doubting.

'What was the meaning of all thoſe Treatiſes which were publiſh'd about two Years ſince againſt the Oath of Allegiance, in a time when no Man dreamt of ſuch a Controverſy? What was the meaning of Father Conyers's Sermon upon the ſame Subject, but only becauſe there was a Demonſtration of Zeal, as they call it, intended againſt the Perſon of the King? which the Scruples ariſing from that Oath did ſomewhat hinder.

'To what purpoſe were all the Correſpondencies with foreign Nations? the Collections of Money among the Fathers abroad and at home? What was the meaning of their governing themſelves here by ſuch Advices as came frequently from Paris and Saint Omers? And how ſhall we expound that Letter which came from Ireland, to aſſure the Fathers here, that all things were in a readineſs there too, as ſoon as the Blow ſhould be given?

'Does

'Does any Man now begin to doubt how London 'came to be burnt? Or by what ways and means 'poor Juſtice Godfrey fell? And is it not apparent 'by theſe Inſtances, that ſuch is the frantick 'Zeal of ſome bigotted Papiſts, that they re'ſolve, no means to advance the Catholick Cauſe 'ſhall be left unattempted, though it be by Fire 'and Sword?

'My Lord, As the Plot in general is moſt manifeſt, 'ſo your Lordſhip's part in it hath been too too plain. 'What you did at Paris, and continued to do at 'Tixall in Staffordſhire, ſhews a ſettled purpoſe of 'mind againſt the King; and what you ſaid at 'London touching honeſt Will, ſhews you were ac'quainted with that Conſpiracy againſt the King's 'Life which was carrying on here too: And in all 'this there was a great Degree of Malice; for 'your Lordſhip at one time called the King 'Heretick and Traytor to God; and at ano'ther time you revil'd him for miſplacing his 'Bounty, and rewarding none but Traytors and 'Rebels.

'And thus you ſee that which the Wiſe-Man 'forewarn'd you of is come upon you, Curſe not 'not the King, no not in thy Heart: for the Birds of 'the Air ſhall reveal, and that which hath Wings 'will declare the matter.

'Three Things I ſhall preſume to recommend 'to your Lordſhip's Conſideration. In the firſt 'place, your Lordſhip now ſees how it hath pleaſed 'God to leave you ſo far to your ſelf, that you 'are fallen into the Snare, and into the Pit, into 'that very Pit which you were digging for others. 'Conſider therefore, that God Almighty never 'yet left any Man, who did not firſt leave him.

'In the next place, think a little better of it 'than hitherto you have done, what kind of Reli'gion that is in which the blind Guides have been 'able to lead you on into ſo much Ruin and Deſtruc'tion as is now like to befall you.

'In the laſt place, I pray your Lordſhip to con'ſider, That true Repentance is never too late. A 'devout penitential Sorrow, join'd with an hum'ble and hearty Confeſſion, is of mighty Power 'and Efficacy both with God and Man.

'There have been ſome of late, who have refus'd 'to give God the glory of his Juſtice by acknowledg'ing the Crimes for which they were condemned; 'nay, who have been taught to believe, that 'tis 'a mortal Sin to confeſs that Crime in publick, for 'which they have been abſolv'd in private; and ſo 'have not dar'd to give God that Glory which o'therwiſe they would have done.

'God forbid your Lordſhip ſhould reſt upon 'Forms; God forbid your Lordſhip ſhould be 'found among the number of thoſe poor miſtaken 'Souls, whom the firſt thing that undeceives is 'Death it ſelf.

'Perhaps your Lordſhip may not much eſteem 'the Prayers of thoſe whom you have long been 'taught to miſcall Hereticks; but whether you 'do or no, I am to aſſure your Lordſhip, That all 'my Lords here, even they that have condemned 'you, will never ceaſe to pray for you, that the End 'of your Life may be Chriſtian and Pious, how 'tragical ſoever the Means are that muſt bring 'you thither.

'And now, my Lord, this is the laſt time that 'I can call you my Lord; for the next Words I am 'to ſpeak will attaint you.

'The Judgment of the Law is, and this Court 'doth award, That

YOU go to the place from whence you came; from thence you muſt be drawn upon a Hurdle to the place of Execution: When you come there, you muſt be hang'd up by the Neck, but not till you are dead; for you muſt be cut down alive, your Privy-Members muſt be cut off, and your Bowels ript up before your Face, and thrown into the Fire. Then your Head muſt be ſever'd from your Body, and your Body divided into four Quarters; and theſe muſt be at the diſpoſal of the King. And God Almighty be merciful to your Soul.

Priſoner. My Lords, I humbly beſeech you give me leave to ſpeak a few Words: I do give your Lordſhips hearty Thanks for all your Favours to me. I do here in the preſence of God Almighty declare, I have no Malice in my Heart to them that have condemned me; I know not who they are, nor deſire to know; I forgive them all, and beſeech your Lordſhips all to pray for me. My Lords, I have one humble Requeſt to make to your Lordſhips, and that is my Lords, That the little ſhort time I have to live a Priſoner, I may not be a cloſe Priſoner as I have been of late, but that Mr. Lieuteuant may have an Order that my Wife and Children and Friends may come at me. I do humbly beg this favour of your Lordſhips, which I hope you will be pleaſed to give me.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I believe I may, with my Lords leave, tell you one thing further, That my Lords as they proceed with Rigor of Juſtice, ſo they proceed with all the Mercy and Compaſſion that may be; and therefore my Lords will be humble Suitors to the King, that he will remit all the Puniſhment but the taking off your Head.

Priſoner. (Weeping) My Lords, your Juſtice does not make me cry, but your Goodneſs.

Then the Lord High Steward broke his Staff, and the Lords adjourned into the Parliament Chamber, and the Commons returned to their Houſe, and the Priſoner with the Ax borne before him with the Edge towards him (it being carried contrarily during his Tryal) was ſent back to the Tower.

His Majeſty afterwards ordered the Lord High Chancellor to iſſue out under the Great Seal of England the following Writs for Executing the ſaid late Viſcount Stafford; the firſt being to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to deliver him on the 29th of December 1680. between nine and eleven a clock in the Forenoon, at the uſual place without the Tower-gate, to the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex; and the other being for them then and there to receive him into their Cuſtody, and to lead him to the uſual place upon Tower-Hill, and there to cauſe his Head to be cut off, and ſever'd from his Body: Which Writs were in Form following.

There were two Writs to the Sheriffs both alike verbatim, one delivered in London, the other in Middleſex.

Whereupon the Sheriffs doubting whether that was a ſufficient Authority for them to execute the Priſoner by Beheading only, the Sentence of Death being otherwiſe given; petitioned the Lords in Parliament to take the Premiſes into conſideration, and to make ſuch Order as ſhould be agreeable to Right and Juſtice, as by the following Petition appears.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Temporal in Parliament aſſembled; The humble Petition of Slingsby Bethel Eſq; and Henry Corniſh Eſq; Sheriffs of London and Middleſex:

Sheweth,

'THAT your Petitioners have received a 'Writ under the Great Seal of England, 'reciting, that Judgment had been given by your 'Lordſhips againſt William Viſcount Stafford, for 'High Treaſon, and divers other Crimes and Offences, upon the Impeachment of the Commons 'in Parliament aſſembled, and commanding your 'Petitioners to cauſe the ſaid Viſcount Stafford's 'Head to be ſever'd from his Body upon the '29th Day of this inſtant December, notwithſtanding any Judgment, Law, Ordinance, or Command to the contrary:

'That your Petitioners have not as yet received any Command from your Lordſhips for executing the ſaid Judgment.

'May it therefore pleaſe your Lordſhips to 'take the Premiſes into Conſideration, and 'to make ſuch Order therein, as ſhall be 'agreeable to Right and Juſtice. And your 'Petitioners ſhall always pray, &c.

Upon which Petition, the Lords did declare as followeth.

Die Martis 21 Decembris, 1680.

'UPON Application from the Sheriffs of 'London and Middleſex, making ſome Scru'ples concerning the Execution of the late Lord 'Viſcount Stafford, which were found by this 'Houſe to be unneceſſary, this Houſe do de'clare, That the King's Writ ought to be obeyed.

The ſaid Sheriffs likewiſe made Application to the Houſe of Commons upon the aforeſaid Matter, who made the following Reſolve.

Die Jovis 23 Decembris, 1680.

RESOLVED, &c. That this Houſe is content that the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex do execute William late Viſcount Stafford, by ſevering his Head from his Body only.

The Proceedings of the Court of Kings-Bench in the Caſe of EDWARD FITZ-HARRIS Eſq; in Eaſter-Term, 1681.

Eaſter-Term, xxxiii. Car. Secundi Regis, in Banco Regis.

ON Wedneſday, April the 27th, 1681. the Grand Juries for the County of Middleſex were ſworn, and after the Charge delivered by Mr. Juſtice Jones, his Majeſty's Attorney-General deſired, That ſome of that Grand Jury which ſerved for the Hundreds of Edmonton and Gore (that for Oſwolſton Hundred, being immediately adjourned for a Week) might be preſent at the ſwearing of the Witneſſes, upon an Indictment for High-Treaſon, to be preferred againſt Edward Fitz-Harris Priſoner in the Tower of London, which was granted; but the Grand Jury being under ſome Scruples againſt receiving of the Bill, deſired the Opinion of the Court therein, which Mr. Juſtice Jones, alone, thought not fit to give, but ordered them to attend next Day when the Court was full.

And accordingly on Thurſday April 28, the ſaid Grand Jury came to the Bar, and Mr. Michael Godfrey (Brother to Sir Edmondbury Godfrey) who was their Foreman, addreſſed himſelf thus to the Court.

Mr. Godfrey. My Lord, I have an humble Requeſt to make to the Court on the behalf of my ſelf, and another on the behalf of the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex, of which I am Foreman. This Gentleman, Mr. Ward, I did beg of when I was ſworn, to chuſe another Man that was fitter for the Service, as being more experienced, but he would not; and I beg your Pardon if I ſhould commit any Failure for want of Experience. But I deſire before we proceed upon this Indictment before us, that this ſame Fitz-Harris may be examined about my Brother's Death, of which I ſuppoſe he may know much, becauſe in the printed Narrative he does ſpeak of one De Puy, who was a very active Man about that Murder; and how ill a Man ſoever he hath been, we do hope he hath ſo much Truth in him, as to tell what he knows of that horrid Murder. Therefore I pray your Lordſhip, that you would grant an Habeas Corpus to fetch him before your Lordſhip to be examined upon that Point, before we do proceed: that is all as to my ſelf. My Lord, as to the Jury, we do all of us humbly preſent this Paper, and deſire it may be read in Court.

* Sir Francis Pemberton.

* L. C. Juſtice. What is it? a Petition?

Cl. of the Crown. It is not ſubſcrib'd by any body.

Jurors. But we do all own it, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is it? Read it.

Cl. of Crown. We Michael Godfrey, &c. being ſworn to ſerve in the Grand Inqueſt for the Hundreds of Edmonton and Gore, in this County of Middleſex, &c. and being yeſterday ſent for into the Court of King's-Bench, by a Meſſenger from the ſaid Court, to be preſent at the ſwearing of ſeveral Witneſſes produced on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, to prove the Truth of ſome Indictments, then in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown; and obſerving that Sir William Waller, Smith, and others were ſworn to give Evidence againſt Edward Fitz-Harris, now Priſoner in the Tower, who in the late Parliament at Oxford was impeached by the Honourable Houſe of Commons in the name of themſelves and of all the Commons of England; of which, we the ſaid Michael Godfrey, &c. are part, and as Jury-men, be his Judges alſo.

We therefore humbly deſire the Opinion of this honourable Court, whether it be lawful and ſafe for us, the ſaid Godfrey, &c. (in caſe an Indictment of the ſaid Fitz-Harris ſhould be brought before us) to proceed to examine any Witneſſes in reference to the ſaid Indictment, or any way to meddle with it, or proceed upon it, notwithſtanding the ſaid Impeachment, and Votes purſuant to it by the ſaid Honourable Houſe of Commons? And this being a great point in Law, and of ſo great Conſequence for us to undertake in a point of Right, not ſettled by Conference, and remaining yet undetermined in the High Court of Parliament:

We therefore humbly deſire the Opinion of this Court upon the whole Matter, whether legally and ſafely we may proceed upon, to find the Indictment of Fitz-Harris, or no?

Mr. Godfrey. My Lord, we do humbly deſire the Reſolution of the Court in this Matter, as a thing of weight; for we are between too Mill-ſtones, as we apprehend it, and ſhall be ground between them.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, we do not apprehend ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, be pleaſed to ſpare me one Word: This Indictment was tender'd to this Grand Jury yeſterday, and this Gentleman was againſt accepting the Bill till he had your Judgment, and ſo were two more; but for all that, the Body of them carried it (all but theſe three) to hear the Evidence: whereupon Mr. Sollicitor and my ſelf did go on upon the Evidence, and ſpent ſome time in opening it to them, and it was all given to them; and truly, the Gentlemen did ſeem to be abundantly ſatisfy'd what an horrid Villany it was, and we did think they would have found the Bill: but it ſeems they have prevail'd to put theſe Scruples into the others heads.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, we will not now inquire into that. Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſeem diſſatisfy'd in this Matter, and deſire the Opinion of the Court in it, whether you may lawfully proceed to find this Indictment or not? We did hear yeſterday of ſome Scruples you made to my Brother Jones when you were ſworn, and he ſat in Court to give you the Charge, which he thought not fit then to anſwer, but left it till to-day: truly truly we would have all things fairly and clearly done, that we may underſtand how we go all along in this Matter. Your Scruple is this; Here was, you ſay, an Impeachment offered againſt Fitz-Harris by the Commons to the Lords, and that Impeachment was of High Treaſon, which was not received, and thereupon there was a Vote of the Houſe of Commons that he ſhould not be try'd by any other Inferior Court: You deſire now to know whether you may inquire concerning this Treaſon, notwithſtanding theſe things that have paſſed thus?

Mr. Godfrey. Yes, My Lord.

L. C. J. We are very ready and willing to ſatisfy any of the King's Subjects in any Matters in Judgment before us, that they may ſee there ſhall be nothing but fair Proceedings in all Caſes: We do tell you it is our Opinions, that notwithſtanding any thing of this matter that you ſuggeſt in the Caſe before you, it is fit for you to inquire upon the Indictment, and you are bound to enquire by virtue of your Oaths, if an Indictment be exhibited to you; you cannot, nor ought to take any notice of any ſuch Impeachment offered to the Lords, nor of any ſuch Votes of the Houſe of Commons afterwards, if any ſuch there were, for they will not excuſe you (who are ſworn to inquire of the Matters given you in Charge) in caſe you do not your Duty: and therefore if you have Evidence enough given you, to ſatisfy you that the Indictment is true, you are to find it. And likewiſe we ought to proceed according to Juſtice in Caſes that are brought before us. Neither you nor we can take notice of theſe Things, in caſe there be any ſuch as you ſuggeſt; nor will they excuſe us before God or Man for the breach of our Oaths, if we ſhould do the contrary. And this we declare to you, not only as our Opinions, but as the Opinion of all the Judges of England. For when we did hear there was a Scruple made by you the Gentlemen of the Jury, becauſe we would make the way fair and clear, all the Judges did aſſemble to debate the Matter for your Satisfaction; not that we were diſſatisfy'd at all in it our ſelves, but that it might appear to you and the Kingdom, that there is nothing but Fairneſs uſed in this Caſe, as in all others: and all the Judges, Nemine Contradicente, were all of Opinion, that you are not to take notice of any of theſe things; but if the Indictment be exhibited, and you have Evidence enough, you ought to find it. This we have endeavoured for your Satisfaction, to make your way clear.

Jurors. We humbly thank your Lordſhip.

[Then the Jury went away, and afterwards found the Bill.]

On Friday, April 29, 1681. Sir Tho. Stringer, the King's Serjeant at Law, moved for an Habeas Corpus, to bring up the Body of Edward Fitz-Harris, to be examined by the Court about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey. The Court granted the Writ, and ſaid, he ſhould be arraigned upon the Indictment againſt him, and then they would examine him.

Saturday, April 30. Edward Fitz-Harris was brought with a ſtrong Guard to the King's-Bench Court.

Mr. Serj. Stringer. Your Lordſhip hath been pleaſed to grant an Habeas Corpus for Fitz-Harris, and he is brought up and attends here.

L. C. J. We will ſend for Mr. Attorney, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I beg this of your Lordſhip, That you will be pleaſed to ſtay a little, I know not how he comes to be brought up here; Mr. Attorney it ſeems ſays, he knows nothing of it.

L. C. J. Well, well, ſend for Mr. Attorney, Brother, and hear what he ſays.

[Which being done, and Mr. Attorney come in, the Priſoner was brought to the Bar.]

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, I would humbly move he may be brought into Court to be examined, before he be arraigned.

L. C. J. Why ſo?

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, We would have him examined concerning Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death.

L. C. J. What matters it? That may be done after, as well as before.

Cl. of Crown. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have been a cloſe Priſoner theſe ten Weeks, and have not had the Liberty to ſee any one in the World: I deſire I may have Liberty to ſee my Friends, and ſpeak with them, before I do anſwer to any thing.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. My Dear, plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court; here's a Plea drawn by Counſel for you.

L. C. J. You had beſt conſider well what you have to do.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I deſire this Paper may be read by the Clerks.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. No, no, that cannot be, till you have anſwered to your Indictment.

Cl. of Crown. Pull off your Glove, and hold up your Hand.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I deſire leave to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

L. C. J. You ſhall have it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I deſire this Plea may be allowed.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Hear your Indictment firſt, and plead afterwards.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, let us thus far direct you: Your holding up of your Hand, and hearing the Indictment read, will not hinder you from any manner of Plea, which you may have to make afterwards; but you can plead nothing before.

Cl. of Crown. Pull off your Glove, and hold up your Hand; (which he did.) And then the Clerk of the Crown read the ſubſtance of his Indictment to him in Engliſh. And then ſpeaking to him, ſaid, How ſayeſt thou, Edward Fitz-Harris, Art thou guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, and haſt been now arraigned, or Not Guilty?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I offer this Plea to be read firſt, before I anſwer.

L. C. J. That Plea? Take his Plea: Let us ſee what it is. We take it to read it now.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Not to allow it.

L. C. J. Only to ſee what it is.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, as for this Pleading here, we uſe not to receive ſuch Pleading as this without a Counſel's Hand to it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I deſire your Lordſhip to aſſign me Counſel.

L. C. J. Who would you have aſſigned Counſel?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Sir William Jones, Sir Francis Winnington, Sir George Treby, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Wallop, and Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. Here are a great many you name: we will not enjoin any Counſel to ſerve you further than they are willing themſelves. As for Sir William Jones, one of them you deſire, he does not practiſe now in Weſtminſter-Hall, and therefore we cannot aſſign you him, unleſs he pleaſe.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Then I deſire Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Wallop.

L. C. J. Let them be aſſign'd of Counſel for him. We do aſſign you them for Counſel. And now, look you Sir, you had beſt conſider how you plead this Matter. You will do well to think of it, leſt it be more fatal to you than you expect; therefore we will give you time to plead the Matter you reſt upon, let it be what it will: We'll give you time to have Advice upon it, and you ſhall be brought hither again on Tueſday-Morning by Rule. And in the mean time things ſhall ſtand as they do. Mr. Attorney will conſider upon the putting in of your Plea, what is fit to be done upon it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I humbly deſire the Liberty to ſee my Wife and Friends in the mean time.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, why may not he ſee his Wife, ſo it be done in the Preſence of ſome Perſon entruſted by the Lieutenant, to ſee that nothing be done that is prejudicial to the King?

* Mr. Att Gen. I cannot oppoſe it, my Lord.

* Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I deſire my Counſel may come to me.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, we will admit Counſel to come to you, or elſe it will do you no good to aſſign them; all we can do, ſhall be done.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with Submiſſion, I conceive, you will not allow any body to come to him, to be alone with him; that would be the Way to prevent the diſcovery of the Practices he is accuſed of: I hope, if your Lordſhip ſhew him Favour, you will do the King Juſtice.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg that any of thoſe that have been named may come to me.

L. C. J. Yes, theſe four. And Mr. Attorney, they are Gentlemen of fair Credit and Reputation in the World; we have no Suſpicion that they will do any thing unfairly: what we can reaſonably do for any Man in his Condition, we muſt do.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I am not againſt that, but I would have all done ſafely and ſecurely for the King.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have one thing more to beg, the Time your Lordſhips have ſet is ſo ſoon, that they cannot come to me perhaps.

L. C. J. 'Tis long enough, Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. If I cannot get them to come to me in that time, what ſhall I do?

L. C. J. You muſt do what you can, we can't enjoin them to come to you.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Motion of his, I fear, is deſigned to put off his Tryal.

L. C. J. It ſhall not, Mr. Attorney. It is true, 'tis a buſy time, the middle of the Term; but they will ſure find time to diſpatch this Buſineſs within the time we have allotted. On the other ſide, ſome time they muſt have to conſider of it: I do therefore tell him it may be fatal and peremptory to him, for ought I know. Indeed if we would inſiſt upon it, we might compel him to be ready preſently, but that we will not do in this Caſe.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Pray my Lord, give me till Thurſday if you pleaſe.

L. C J. I know it is time enough for Counſel to draw up a Plea between this and Tueſday.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. To-morrow is Sunday, my Lord, and they can't come to me then, ſo I ſhall have but one Day.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, 'tis Time enough; we muſt not waſte the Term; for as we would ſhew you all the Favour we can in Equity and Juſtice, ſo we muſt not deny the King Juſtice neither. And you hear Mr. Attorney ſay, that theſe Things (if they ſhould delay the buſineſs too long) would be prejudicial to much of the King's Buſineſs. It may be, that this delatory Plea may ſpend ſo much time of the Term, that we cannot try it; and therefore if we do give you a juſt Favour, you muſt not grow upon us.

Mr. Att.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Fitz-Harris knows this Plea hath been well adviſed on: There went a whole Club to the making of it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. How ſhould I know? I never ſaw nor heard of it till now. I have had the ſevereſt Meaſure in the World; I have had no body ſuffered to come to me.

L. C. J. Do not complain of Severity, Mr. Fitz-Harris. I do not believe any ſuch thing hath been uſed towards you.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Pray my Lord, give me a little longer time.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, what if we do this? He giving you the Plea upon Tueſday, he may come up upon Wedneſday Morning to put it in.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot oppoſe it, if your Lordſhip think fit ſo to order it.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. 'Tis fit you ſhould have it to ſee it, Mr. Attorney, beforehand.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And have ſome reaſonable time for Conſideration what to do upon it.

L. C. J. Well, delivering of the Plea on Tueſday Morning to Mr. Attorney, we do give you till Wedneſday to bring it hither; and then you ſhall come by Rule again.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope, I ſhall have the Liberty to ſee my Wife this Day.

L. C. J. Yes, at ſeaſonable Hours, when there may be ſome body by, to ſee that nothing be done to the King's Prejudice. And your Wife muſt do this, ſhe muſt ſubmit to be ſearched, that ſhe carry nothing with her that may be prejudicial. And with theſe Cautions we will admit her to come to you.

Lieut. of Tower. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give us a Rule, to let his Wife and Counſel come to him?

L. C. J. We do make ſuch a Rule.

Cl. of Crown. My Lord, we will make it part of the Rule.

Lieut. of Tower. We deſire ſuch a Rule for our Diſcharge.

L. C. J. Sir, this is our Rule, and we have declared it to this purpoſe. Then as to your Matter, Brother Stringer, this we will do; Let the Lieutenant of the Tower keep Mr. Fitz-Harris ſafely till we return out of the Exchequer, and then we will examine him.

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, we think it will be a ſhort Buſineſs and ſoon over, if you pleaſe to do it firſt.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I may ſee my Wife in the mean time, I hope.

L. C. J. Do you inſiſt, Brother, that we ſhould examine him preſently?

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, Mr. Godfrey deſires it.

L. C. J. Then we will preſently.

Lieut. of Tower. Muſt his Lady ſpeak with him?

L. C. J. Yes, after he is examined. Lieutenant of the Tower, bring Mr. Fitz-Harris into our little Room, where we will take a Clerk and examine him.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris, to her Husband, (the Court being juſt riſen.) My Dear, do not confeſs any thing about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, nor the Plot, for you will be betray'd; ſpeak only to little things.

[Then the Priſoner was carried away to be examined, and after that to the Tower.]

On Monday, the Second of May, Sir Francis Winnington and the other three Gentlemen aſſigned of Counſel for Mr. Fitz-Harris, came to the Bar, and moved the Court for an Explanation of the Rule concerning themſelves, and the Buſineſs they were aſſign'd for.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I am to move your Lordſhip in a Caſe, wherein I am with three others of the Gentlemen that attend this Bar, aſſigned of Counſel for Mr. Fitz-Harris; and that which I would beg for my ſelf and them, is this: There is one thing we deſire may be explained a little in the Rule. I humbly apprehend your Lordſhip gave leave to the Counſel, who you ſo aſſign'd, to come to Mr. Fitz-Harris, and entruſted them with the Liberty of ſpeaking with him alone; but by the penning of the Rule, we apprehend that the ſame Reſtraint is put upon them, that is upon other Perſons, to have ſome body at their being with him.

L. C. J. The Lieutenant ſent to me on Saturday about it, and I told him, it did not extend to you.

Sir Fran. Winnington. We think it may have a Conſtruction either way; but we deſire it may be made plain, as you meant it.

L. C. J. We tell you, it is plain, and it was ſo intended.

Sir Fran. Win. Therefore we taking it that your Lordſhip pronounced and meant it ſo, do deſire it may be ſo expreſſed. We are ſatisfy'd that it was your Lordſhip's Intention; we deſire the Clerk may make it plain and intelligible in Words. And there is this further in it, my Lord——

L. C. J. We declare it now to you, it was ſo meant and intended.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, there is this further in it: We four have met, and we deſire as much as may be to expedite this Matter, as far as we can, for our own Reputation, and doing our Duty to the Perſon we are aſſigned of Counſel for. But truly ſo ſoon as is appointed by your Lordſhip, it is impoſſible for us to prepare things ſo, as to be ready by Wedneſday Morning. The Plea I never ſaw, nor did I ever hear of it, till it was brought and read here; but ſince that, I have not ſeen it till this time. The Rules were brought but laſt Night to our Chambers, there is no Sollicitor in the Cauſe that may attend us. The Indictment I have not ſeen that we are to plead to, and truly I think the courſe is to have a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. We deny that, Sir Fran. Winnington.

Mr. Williams. It is impoſſible for us then to get ready in this time. I humbly move you will aſſign ſome convenient time. I know your Lordſhip will not put an hardſhip upon us that are of Counſel, to plead ſuch a Matter ſo quickly. 'Tis a Matter of Difficulty, and there are not many Precedents in it; and therefore it will require more care than ordinary.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, We ought to preſent things to the Court as they are in Fact, that we may not lie under any Reflection from the Court, nor any body elſe. You made a Rule on Saturday, that I ſhould be of Counſel for him, (which I ſubmit to) but I knew not of this till afterwards. I never ſaw the Plea, nor any Paper in this Cauſe as yet: The Rule was left at my Chamber this laſt Night, and when I ſaw it, Mr. Williams and we got together in the Hall this Morning: We could not do it till juſt now, and we come now to wait upon the Court, to acquaint them how the Matter ſtands. I was not in Court, when you gave gave your Directions about this Matter; but when I find what the Nature of the Caſe is, I ſhall be ready to do my Duty to the Court, and to him who is upon his Life. It is a mighty Cauſe, it is a Cauſe that may-be, if we do not acquit our ſelves as we ought, have reflection upon our Poſterity, if we do not do it as well as we can. Therefore we deſire ſome reaſonable Time, that we may have Copies of the Papers and Things concerned in this Cauſe, as the Court ſhall direct. And we are aſſured your Lordſhip is ſo well acquainted with the uſual Method in ſuch Caſes, that you will give us all the Favour in it you can.

Mr. Wallop. For my part, my Lord, the Notice I had was but very lately; I was by, indeed, when this Perſon Fitz-Harris did deſire Counſel, and your Lordſhip aſſigned me amongſt the reſt; but nothing of the Order was brought to me till this Morning: ſo that I know nothing of the Matter leſs or more, than what I heard upon the reading of the Paper here on Saturday. I do not deſire Time for Time-ſake, or for Delay; but we think the Nature of the thing is ſuch, as will require great Conſideration, and we deſire convenient Time to prepare it for the Court.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Francis Winnington, you muſt conſider here the Nature of your Caſe: This is an Indictment of High Treaſon, and there is nothing I ſee, that is ſo greatly conſiderable in the Caſe, but the height of the Crime. 'Tis an extraordinary Crime indeed, if he be guilty of it, (for I ſpeak not to prejudice your Client, but of the Thing itſelf.) 'Tis a Treaſon of a very high Nature: And then what have we to conſider in this Caſe? We might have taken your Client at advantage here, and it had been no Injuſtice if we had made him to plead immediately, as he would ſtand by it: And we are not to conſult your Leiſure, but your Client's Cauſe: he hath pitch'd upon you for his Counſel; we have given him three days time to plead as he will ſtand by it, Saturday, Monday and Tueſday, and he is to come with his Plea upon Wedneſday. We have appointed for Conveniency-ſake, that you ſhould give a Copy of the Plea to-morrow Morning to Mr. Attorney; but we do not tie you ſo peremptorily to that Copy, that you may not vary in Words from that Form. Give him but the ſubſtance of the Plea, and we will not tie you to the particular formal Words. Peradventure Mr. Fitz-Harris could not have expected three Days time, in courſe of Law, upon ſuch a Crime, to put in ſuch a Plea, when he tells us, he will plead ſpecially to the Juriſdiction of the Court. But we have done it in this Caſe, to ſhew, that all the Fairneſs that can poſſibly be uſed, ſhall be uſed. On the other ſide, we muſt not ſpend all our time ſo, as to let the Term ſlip for his neglect of waiting upon you. Therefore if he will delay to ſend to adviſe with you, he muſt ſuffer for it. Suppoſe he did not come to you till to-morrow, what can we help it?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. There is no Sollicitor, my Lord, to go to the Counſel.

L. C. J. Well, we muſt not ſpin out the Term to pleaſe him: He muſt take more care; I believe he would by Dilatorys be glad to put it off all the Term. If Mr. Attorney gives Conſent for more time, well and good.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I hope your Lordſhip will give leave for a Sollicitor, without your Lordſhip's leave none will dare to venture. And I had the Rule ſo very late——

Cl. of Crown. They had it at 3 of the clock in the Afternoon, as ſoon as it could be drawn up.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. That Copy was brought to the Lieutenant of the Tower, and he ſent it away immediately.

Cl. of Crown. Another Copy they had from me that Evening.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I never ſaw my Husband in the Tower till yeſterday in the Afternoon, and I am an ignorant Perſon, and know not what to do in it without a Sollicitor. As ſoon as I could get Copys of the Rule writ out, I carry'd them to theſe Gentlemen.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I think it will be very hard upon us that are of Counſel, to be ſo ſtraitned in point of Time; for my part, the Rule was left under my Door the laſt Night, and I had it not till this Morning: It will be a mighty hard Matter for us to get the Plea ready, without a ſight of the Indictment. Things muſt be averr'd to be the ſame, which we cannot, unleſs we ſee what is there alledged. This Man hath been kept cloſe Priſoner, and no-body ſuffer'd to come at him to inſtruct him; and we have not ſo much as Copies of any thing that we muſt make uſe of. We have no Concernment, my Lord, in this Matter, but what is aſſign'd us by the Court; and we do not know by any Papers, if there be any, how we ſhould put it into Form: and that is it, my Lord, which may lie heavy upon us; if this Man's buſineſs ſhould miſcarry for want of putting it into due Form, the blame will be upon us, who are aſſigned his Counſel. Therefore if your Lordſhip pleaſe, under theſe Conſiderations, to give us time and leave to ſee the Indictment we are to plead to, we may be the better inabled to do our Duty.

Sir Fran. Win. Really, my Lord, I ought to deal clearly with the Court; without a Copy of the Indictment, I know not how we ſhall be able to plead as we ſhould do.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I do really move, not in favour of Fitz-Harris, but for my own Reputation; I cannot put my Hand to a Plea of this Conſequence, without time to conſider very well of it, and unleſs, in truth, I can ſee the Indictment, and compare the Plea with it, to put it into form fit for the Judgment of the Court. And if theſe things cannot be granted, I deſire to be excuſed.

L. C. J. Why, Gentlemen, ſee what you ask: Where do you find any Precedent of a Man indicted for High Treaſon, that would plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court, that had more time given him than is in this Caſe?

Sir Fran. Win. We do not know what his Plea will be, my Lord, till we have ſeen it and conſidered it.

L. C. J. Your Client told us all, and we know all of us very well, that it is to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and can be no otherwiſe.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Any thing elſe you may give in Evidence upon, Not Guilty. And it would be conſidered on your Tryal.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, it may happen to be not ſo properly pleadable to the Juriſdiction of the Court; we know not what it will be till we have ſeen the things neceſſary to draw it into Form. It is true conſequentially, it is the Concern of our Client; but the ground of our Motion at this time is for our ſelves. I did apprehend by the Rule, his ſpecial Plea was to be admitted, if he tender'd one, let it be what it will: We muſt conſider many things in a Caſe of this nature; and at laſt, whether it will be to the Juriſdiction, or what 'tis, we can't tell as yet. And till we have ſeen the Nature of the thing, and what is neceſſary to prepare it for the Court, I cannot venture to give it its proper Term. But our Time is ſo ſhort, if your Lordſhip will afford us no longer, that we know not how to be ready for it. Your Lordſhip does ſpeak of Mr. Attorney's being attended with the Subſtance of the Plea, not tying us to the Form in the Copy deliver'd to him. Mr. Attorney was here upon Saturday, when this Matter was firſt ſtarted, and he knew the Subſtance then: We know not what it is more than by Report. It is a Plea that ſo rarely happens, that we muſt be cautious in what Form we put it. 'Tis, as your Lordſhip hath been pleaſed to ſay, an horrible Treaſon, that in the Indictment is ſpecify'd. We muſt not ſpeak, nor do not mitigate the Heinouſneſs of the Crime; nor do we ſpeak it becauſe it is Term-time, and may hinder our other Buſineſs: We ſhall all of us, I am ſure, not at all conſider our own Time, or Loſs in the Matter; but it being of ſo great weight, we deſire reaſonable time to do our Duties: we name no time, nor dare do it; we ſubmit that to the Court. But, my Lord, under favour, for the Copy of the Indictment, we do conceive 'tis neceſſary that we ſhould ſee a Copy of it; and when the Court is pleaſed to admit the Party to give in a Special Plea to the Matter he is accuſed of, and aſſign him Counſel to plead it, I take it to be very rational and conſonant to Law, that we have a Copy of the Charge.

L. C. J. Sir Fran. Winnington, for you to come and ſay theſe things here, methinks is very ſtrange: I think you can ſhew us no Precedent, that ever ſo long time was given to any Man to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court, nor that ever a Copy of the Indictment was granted in High Treaſon; and for you, becauſe of the greatneſs of the Treaſon, therefore to go about to make us believe, that it is more reaſonable that a Copy of the Indictment ſhould be granted in this Caſe than in another, that the Greatneſs of the Crime ſhould be meritorious, and deſerve a Favour of the Court, not granted in other Caſes, is a thing extraordinary.

Sir Fran. Win. I do not preſs it that way, I pray I may be underſtood aright; upon what appear'd the other Day, upon the nature of the Plea, I preſent it to your Conſideration, Whether or no, when you have been pleaſed to admit a Special Plea, you will not let us ſee that which we are to plead to?

L. C. J. No, it was never thought of ſurely.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. No, it hath been conſtantly denied in Caſes of Felony and Treaſon, and ſo you will find the Practice to have always been. But I'll tell you what hath been done ſometimes; They have granted ſome Heads out of the Indictment, that ſhould enable the Party to fit his Plea to the Charge, and that was done in Wittypole's Caſe, upon a Plea of Auter forti acquit. They gave him the Times, and ſome other Circumſtances, to fit his Plea to his Caſe; but never was there a Copy of the Indictment granted.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord Coke, in his Preface to the third Report, declares, That it was the antient Law of England, and ſo declared by Act of Parliament in Edward III's time, That any Subject may, for his neceſſary Uſe, have acceſs to Records and Copies of them, be they for the King or againſt the King; and that the Practice to the contrary is an Abuſion.

L. C. J. So then, Mr. Wallop, you take it, that we are bound when any Man is indicted of Felony or Treaſon, or any capital Crime, if he ſay he muſt have a Copy of the Record, we muſt grant him a Copy of the Indictment: if you think ſo, the Court and you are not of the ſame Opinion.

Mr. Wallop. I inform the Court what I have read and ſeen, and where 'tis to be found.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, it may be neceſſary, for ought we know, for him to plead over to the Fact laid in the Indictment, Not Guilty, as ſometimes it is requiſite for the Party to do. Now if we ſhould miſtake for want of having what is neceſſary, and thereby preclude him of the Advantages he might have had if the Plea had been rightly drawn, for ought I know, it will lie upon me for ever. My Lord, I do it merely out of Caution, and for my own Reputation ſake: If any legal Advantage ſhould be loſt by my Unwarineſs, it will be a perpetual Reflection upon me; and therefore I am ſo earneſt in this Caſe. And, my Lord, I can tell you what was done in a Caſe wherein I was of Counſel; it was not a Caſe of Treaſon indeed, but it was Murder, the next Crime to it; it was the Caſe of King and Thomas: Thomas was indicted of Murder in one County, and found guilty of Manſlaughter; and afterwards was indicted for the ſame Murder in another County, and being to plead this Matter, I did inſiſt upon it, that we ought to have a Copy of the Indictment. There was ſome Debate about it, but at laſt we had a Copy, and we alledg'd there, as here, it was impoſſible to plead without it; and the Cauſe was removed hither into this Court for Judgment.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. The firſt Indictment you might have a Copy of, for you were to plead the whole Record.

Mr. Williams. Nay, we had a Copy of that to which we pleaded.

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, you tell us, you may peradventure have occaſion to plead over when you know 'tis High Treaſon that you are indicted of, in framing and publiſhing a treaſonable Paper. Can't you direct your Client to plead over without a Copy? Certainly what you alledge in that, for a Copy of the Indictment, is Non Cauſa pro Cauſa.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What prejudice will it be to your Client to plead over?

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, we only offer theſe Things for our ſelves, and we hope we ſhall not be preſſed to do ſuch a thing as this, without having reaſonable Time to conſider and deliberate of it, and without having what is neceſſary in order to it.

[Then Mr. Attorney being ſent for, came into the Court.]

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, theſe Gentlemen that were aſſign'd of Counſel for Fitz-Harris, do move the Court here, and ſay, they would have longer Time to draw up his Plea, for they muſt make uſe of ſeveral Copies of Papers, and they cannot ſo ſoon obtain them, nor find out thoſe Records they muſt uſe, or other things as ingredients to this Plea, in ſo ſhort a time; and they ſay likewiſe, that they deſire a Copy of the Indictment. Now, in truth, they ought to have given you notice of this, that you might have been here likewiſe to hear what they ſay: If you do conſent to give them longer Time, we ſhall be ready to do it; but without it, we ſhall not be willing to delay it.

Mr. Att.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think your Lordſhip and the Court gave them a very juſt and reaſonable Time, when you allowed them four Days; and theſe Gentlemen are miſtaken, if they think they are aſſigned as Counſel to all Events. They are only to draw up a Plea upon that Matter that is alledg'd by the Priſoner, and to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

Sir Fran. Win. No, my Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's pardon: The Rule is to plead the ſpecial Matter without more ſaying.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, under favour, it is as I ſay, and ſo is the Courſe of Law; for the Priſoner ought to acquaint you with the Points he deſires his Counſel to be heard to: And in this Caſe, Fitz-Harris did acquaint the Court before he would plead, that he had ſomething to object to the Juriſdiction of the Court; and ſo his Wife directed him when ſhe gave him the Paper. I ſuppoſe ſhe had other Advice upon it; for ſhe could not draw it up in that Form it was, her ſelf: and he did acquaint the Court, he had Matter to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and concluded ſo in the Paper that was read. And thereupon, according to his Prayer he had Counſel aſſign'd him, theſe Gentlemen. I conſented to it, as it was juſt I ſhould; but that they ſhould think, that they are to adviſe him in other Matters than that particular upon which they are aſſign'd, I know they know their Duty better than to offer at any ſuch thing. Now ſince then there is but one ſingle Point, the Juriſdiction of the Court and nothing elſe, for they are not to adviſe in other Matters; I think it was more than ſtrict Juſtice, nay, it was a very great Favour, for all Men ought to be ready to plead ſuch Pleas immediately.

L. C. J. Yes, in ſtrictneſs, we might have required him to plead as he would ſtand by it, preſently.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Law is, that he muſt have all ready, in Poigne, to make it appear that what he avers in his Plea is ſo; therefore you needed not to have given him any longer Time: But becauſe all the World might ſee the Court and King's Counſel dealt fairly in this Matter, and did not mean to take advantage of any thing that look'd like a Surprize, I conſented to that time that your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſet: And as for the Copy of the Indictment, I know not any reaſon they have to deſire it; for they are not to adviſe in that, what Defence he ſhall make, but only upon this Matter he hath alledged.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, what Mr. Attorney tells you, is ſo, and we do expect that you ſhould conform your ſelves to it: We have given you three Days time, which is ſufficient for ſuch a thing as this. And Mr. Attorney, we told them thus, when we did direct them, That they ſhould deliver you a Copy of the Plea to-morrow Morning. We are not ſo critical with them, as that we will not receive their Plea, if it be variant in Form from that which they deliver to you. That that we intend by it, is this, That they ſhould deliver you a Plea, the ſame in Subſtance as that which they do plead here: If they would alter it in the Form, we can give them leave to do that without any Prejudice.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will never pinch them in Form, I think I have Matter enough.

L. C. J. I tell you truly, I do believe ſome Friends of his had Counſel to draw up this Plea for him.

Mr. Att. Gen. A great Cabal, no doubt of it, my Lord!

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I deſire that Counſel may be aſſigned in my place.

L. C. J. We aſſign'd him thoſe that he requir'd, excepting Sir William Jones; and we did not deny to put in Sir William Jones's Name becauſe we would not aſſign him, but becauſe he hath declined the Bar, and does not practiſe here.

Mr. Williams. We do not draw in the Name of Sir William Jones, or decline him: we ſubmit to your Order about our ſelves; but we deſire that Perſon that did draw this Plea, may be added to us.

L. C. J. If his Wife deſire it, and will name him, it ſhall be ſo.

Mr. Williams. I deſire to be put out, and he put in.

L. C. J. Sir, he underſtands what he would have, ſure! and we can't diſcharge you, upon any ſuch account.

Mr. Wallop. Here are many Particulars and many Averments, which cannot ſo ſuddenly be ſet right, as the time allotted.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, there is not half thoſe Gentlemen aſſigned that I writ to my Husband to ask for: I directed him eight.

L. C. J. Who elſe would you have?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. There was in the Paper Sir William Jones, his Majeſty's late Attorney-General, Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams late Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, Sir George Treby Recorder of London——

Mr. Pollexfen. Your Lordſhip may eaſily perceive by this Gentlewoman's Carriage, how we are like to be inſtructed in this Cauſe, when nobody follows it but ſhe.

L. C. J. Do you deſire Sir George Treby ſhould be added?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Yes, I do.

L. C. J. Let it be ſo then.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. And Sir William Jones; I will do what I can to get him to come.

L. C. J. We will not enjoin him; but if he pleaſes, we leave him to his Liberty.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why, Miſtreſs, you are got into the hands of Gentlemen that are as learned and able in their Profeſſion, as you can have; you need no more.

L. C. J. Do you deſire Mr. Smith?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then add him.

Mr. Pollexfen. We deſire that there may be leave for a Sollicitor, one that may carry Papers in the preſence of the Lieutenant.

L. C. J. We have Confidence in you, but not in other perſons; therefore we muſt conſider of that: But what think you of it, Brothers? We may permit, I think, one to come from the Counſel to him, with that Caution.

Judges. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Let the Papers then be inſpected before by the Lieutenant of the Tower, and be from one of the Counſel; and ſo they have liberty to do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no need of any Papers, my Lord——

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, do not oppoſe that: Let them have liberty to carry any Papers that any of their Counſel, theſe Gentlemen we have aſſigned, ſhall ſend to him or any from him to them; ſo as the Lieutenant may have firſt the ſight and peruſal of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no great harm in that, though I ſee not that they will need any Papers.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Yes, their Plea to the Jurisdiction must arise upon Fact, which may be out of some Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are assigned, Gentlemen, but to one Point, the Jurisdiction of the Court; remember that.

Mr. Pollexfen. Your Lordship is pleased to say, That we may vary in Form from what we delivered to the Attorney-General; and Mr. Attorney is pleased to say, he will not pinch us as to Form: How shall we be secure no advantage shall be taken of the Form?

L. C. J. 'Tis only as to that particular. You shall not be tied up to the Form you deliver to him. What Advantages there may be concerning the Form of the Plea you bring hither, we will see shall not be taken.

Sir Fran. Win. Will your Lordship please to afford us no longer time?

L. C. J. When you are to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court in a Case of High Treason, and such a Treason as this is, what reason is there that so much time as is granted already, should be given you?

Sir Fran. Win. Shall not we have a Copy of the Indictment neither?

L. C. J. You will offer things that are not to be granted to you, ad captandum populum, that you may say you are hardly used, and mightily straitned in this Case.

Sir Fran. Win. No, my Lord, we do not offer it for any such end.

Mr. Att. Gen. Gentlemen, remember you have not liberty to plead any thing but to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

Sir Fr. Win. We must submit to what your Lordship orders in it.

[Upon Wednesday the 4th of May 1681. Edward Fitz-Harris was brought from the Tower to the King's-Bench-Bar.]

Cl. of Crown. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand: (which he did) Thou hast been indicted and arraigned for High Treason; How sayst thou, art thou guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, and hast been arraigned, or not guilty?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I have made a Plea, my Lord, which I desire may be received and allowed.

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, I desire to be heard a few Words.

L. C. J. Would you not have the Plea read?

Mr. Wallop. I have but a few Words to say before it be read, if your Lordship please, for our selves, or at least for my self. According to the best Instructions we have had, we have drawn up this Plea, and I pray it may be entred so. But, my Lord, I humbly conceive we have not had, or for my own part I have not had those Instructions that were fit to direct me in this Case. It is a special Plea, and of a Matter that rarely happens; and the nature of this special Plea is, that the Matter contained in the Indictment and in the Impeachment, is one and the same Matter. Now I have not yet seen, nor could I come at a sight, though I desired it, of the Impeachment, nor of the Indictment: But I humbly conceive, that by the Law, as this Case is upon a special Plea, the Prisoner ought to have a Copy of the Indictment. And I do not say that every one may demand a Copy of his Indictment, to find Faults; but upon a special Plea, and particularly upon this, I humbly conceive he ought to have a sight and a Copy of his Indictment.

L. C. J. What, would you not have your Plea receiv'd?

Mr. Wallop. Thus, my Lord: If we can have no further Instructions, nor can by any other means come to a sight of these Things, then it is the best Plea we can make in such a Case, and I avow the Plea; but if any thing should fall out amiss to the Prisoner for want of such a sight, I pray it may not lie upon me.

L. C. J. Read the Plea.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we humbly pray, being assigned of Counsel for this Gentleman Mr. Fitz-Harris, that this Plea may be received.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, have you been attended, according to the Rule of Court, with this Plea?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is the reason of that?

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is no more in effect, than what was offered four Days ago, when Counsel was allowed him. I sent last night late to them for a Copy of the Plea: Indeed yesterday at Noon they sent me this Note, That Fitz-Harris intends to stand upon his Plea, that he stands impeached in the House of Peers. I sent to know of them whether they would plead this to the Jurisdiction, or in Abatement, or in Bar: They declared, they would not plead to the Jurisdiction, but now I see 'tis to the Jurisdiction.

L. C. J. It is so; and that he proposed to plead at first.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is true too, my Lord: But thus they sent me word.

L. C. J. And as a Plea to the Jurisdiction, so it concludes.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have done all that is possible for us to do in this Case. The Court directed us to attend Mr. Attorney with the Substance, and so we have done; but the Form, we had liberty to do as we pleased in.

L. C. J. You need not go about to excuse it that you have not done it; we charge you with nothing.

Mr. Williams. I don't go about to excuse it; we don't take it as a Charge upon us.

L. C. J. All we ſay is this: If Mr. Attorney had had it, peradventure he might have conſidered of a Replication by this time, or what he would do concerning it; but if he hath not had time, we cannot expect it from him.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, I only beg one word as to Matter of Fact, and 'tis material as to our ſelves to urge it. We did ſend ſeveral Meſſengers to get, if it were poſſible to be obtained, a Copy of the Impeachment in Parliament. We ſent to the Houſe of Lords Clerk to get it, but they that went down, tell us the Clerk is not in Town; or elſe we had ſent Mr. Attorney the whole Plea at that time.

L. C. J. I only ask the Queſtion, to ſee whether Mr. Attorney hath had time to think of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think I need not any time in this Caſe.

L. C. J. Pray go on, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do pray your Judgment upon it; for 'tis a Plea that is inſufficient: nay, 'tis no Plea to bar you of your Juriſdiction. Firſt, I obſerve that whoſoever will plead a Plea to the Juriſdiction, if he have any Record to plead, muſt have it in poigne, muſt produce it in the Court, or at leaſt muſt produce a Copy ſworn, that the Court may ſee there is nothing dilatory in the Caſe. And for this Matter, it will appear upon Examination to be a plain frivolous Plea; for there is no ſuch Matter depending as this Plea alledges. But I ſpeak of it as a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court; and ſuch an one as will plead ſuch a Plea, he muſt have the Record ready, to ſhew it to the Court, and by the Courſe of Law ought to have it ready to aſſert to the Court, that they have not Juriſdiction: So then 'tis certainly naught. That is the firſt thing. Another thing is this, with Submiſſion; I ſay, They have pleaded no Record at all, nor any Impeachment at all, as this Caſe is; for the Notes that I have taken, my Lord, are, They ſay he was impeached by the Commons de alta Proditione; but that is naught: He ought in his Plea to have ſet forth his Impeachment, and for what Crime particularly; for either an Indictment or an Impeachment de alta Proditione, or Felony, or any other Crime, is naught, the Law allows it not. He ought to ſet forth, and muſt not aver upon a Record, but ſet it forth in hæc verba, or in the ſubſtance of it; and ſo ought to plead the Record intirely as it is. And for thoſe neceſſary Averments that cannot otherwiſe be made, the Law allows of them. But in this Caſe he cannot come and aver upon this Record; for he hath ſet forth the Impeachment not as it was, but only barely de alta Proditione in general, which the Record muſt ſhew, ſo as the Court may judge of it, and it muſt not be intended. But as they have ſet it forth, in this Caſe there is nothing of Treaſon ſpecify'd in the Record averred, that can intend this to be the ſame; and, my Lord, ſo are all the Precedents. Whoſoever pleads a private Act of Parliament, muſt plead it as it is, not in general that it is for the ſame Matter; for I take it then 'tis naught: and we are in your judgment, that this is no Plea to the Juriſdiction upon that Point.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Do you think it prudent to argue it this time, or will you take a Day? Pray conſider of that a little.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think Delay is very dangerous and miſchievous in this Caſe.

L. C. J. We can give you as ſhort a Day as you pleaſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. But to ſatisfy the Court, the Clerk will be ready with the Journals, to ſhew that the Fact is not as they plead it.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, we muſt go on in a legal and formal way, when we have a Plea put in; therefore whether you will not take time for a Day or two to conſider of this Plea: you had the Subſtance of it, but nothing concerning the Manner of the Pleading; they would not tell you whether they would plead it in Abatement, or in Bar, or how: Therefore whether you will not take time to conſider of this pleading for a Day or two, pray conſider with your ſelf.

[Then the King's Counſel conſulted one with another.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, not only for what I have already offered, but for many other Reaſons, we can ſee this can be no way a Plea to the Juriſdiction of this Court; for upon any Impeachment or Indictment, the King hath Election to proceed upon which he will: and if there were ten Indictments for one and the ſame thing, if none of them are come to a Judgment, the King may proceed upon which he pleaſes, as in that Caſe of Ireland yeſterday; though the Party were arraigned and ready to be try'd in Ireland, yet the King might, if he pleaſed, try him here, and the King hath ordered it ſo to be. But, my Lord, I take it, that this is not only apparently a falſe Plea, but a frivolous Plea in itſelf, being to the Juriſdiction of this Court: For there was never any thing of a Crime ſo great, but this Court of King's-Bench, which hath a Sovereign Juriſdiction for Commoners eſpecially, could take Cognizance of it; and I put it upon that, my Lord. Never was ſuch a Plea pleaded to your Juriſdiction; and therefore we pray your Judgment upon it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, before we come to that which is the Queſtion, if there were ſuch a Plea pleaded to the Juriſdiction as they would have this to be, we humbly pray the Judgment of the Court, whether this be any ſuch Plea at all as can bear any Debate: For it will not be a Queſtion now, how far an Impeachment depending is a bar to your Juriſdiction, but the Queſtion is, firſt, whether this be ſuch a Plea? For, my Lord, I do take it, No Man can plead any Record in another Court, any Indictment or Acquittal upon it, by pleading it in this Form as this is pleaded, by ſaying generally, that ſuch a time in ſuch a Court, he was indicted for the ſame Offence and was acquitted; yet thus this Plea is, and no more. But he that will plead auter foitz acquit, muſt plead that ſuch a time he was indicted in ſuch a Court, and ſet forth the Indictment and all the Proceedings of that Court upon that Record, and then 'tis proper for Judgment; ſuch a Plea is formal, and requires an Anſwer, and it will be proper for us to give it an Anſwer: and when ſuch a Plea is put in, we ſhall either demur to it, or give it the Anſwer that it requires, of null tiel Record. But this does not require any particular Anſwer, becauſe it ſets forth no Record at all that we can anſwer to: for it is not ſufficient to ſay in general, that he was indicted and acquitted, or impeached, and then aver that it was for the ſame Offence; but he ought to ſhew forth the Impeachment, and ſet forth in the Plea the Record, that upon it you may paſs a certain Judgment. Therefore we hope you will ſet this aſide, as not being at all formal, or requiring any Anſwer to it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, If you pleaſe to conſider in this Caſe what is the Queſtion, and what what not. At preſent 'tis not the Queſtion whether if a Man be impeached of High Treaſon by the Commons before the Lords, and this Impeachment ſtands unreverſed in the Court of Parliament; I ſay, 'tis not the Queſtion whether this Court have Juriſdiction over this Man for that Offence, but the Queſtion is, Whether he hath put in ſuch a Plea before you as will put that in queſtion? Under favour, 'tis not ſufficient for him that will plead a particular Record, in bar or other way, and make uſe of it that he plead it in general Terms, but he muſt ſet forth that Record as it is; he muſt not give you the Title only, or ſay, he was indicted for ſuch a thing generally, but he muſt ſo ſet it forth to the Court, that if Iſſue be taken, the Court may by comparing the Record with the Plea, judge whether it be the ſame Matter or no. Now when he pleads he was impeached for the ſame Treaſon, he muſt ſet forth what that was, that it may appear it was for the ſame Treaſon; and if that be particularly ſet forth as it ought, upon null tiel Record, the Queſtion will be, Is there ſuch a Record or not? Now if he comes and ſays he was indicted or impeached, and not for what in particular; the two things that upon the Iſſue are to be compared, are not made ſo fit for your Judgment. In our Law, my Lord, if a Man will plead, he need not ſet forth a general Act of Parliament; but if he will plead a particular Act, he muſt ſet forth the Matter of it, to bring his Caſe under the Judgment of the Court; and whether this be ſo pleaded or no, we ſubmit it to you.

L. C. J. Pray let me ſpeak two or three Words to you: Do you ſpeak it againſt our receiving of the Plea?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we hope you will not admit ſuch a Plea.

L. C. J. That will be hard. Pray then conſider with your ſelf, whether if it be an inſufficient Plea (for we'll ſay nothing at preſent to that) and if the Plea be ſuch that no Iſſue can be taken upon it (admitting it were ſo) whether you ſhould not demur to it, before you demand our Judgment, that we may have ſomewhat upon the whole before us to judge upon? And I ſpeak it to you, Mr. Attorney, to this purpoſe, that you may conſider, whether you ſhall think fit to demur to this Plea, or whether you ſhall think convenient to take Iſſue upon it, or to reply to it; that it may come judicially for our Opinion: for in a regular way, if a Plea be admitted, it muſt be either demurred to, or reply'd to. Pray conſider of it in this Caſe, and we will give you time to conſider if you pleaſe.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Under favour, my Lord, if a Plea be apparently vitious when it is upon Record, we need not demur to it, nor take Iſſue; for elſe the miſchief will be, we ſhall admit all that is well pleaded to be true.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I do confeſs that according to the uſual Courſe and Practice, if there be a doubt upon a Plea that is read, whereon any Point in Law may ariſe, you do put the Party to demur or take Iſſue: but according to the common Courſe of this Court in common Caſes, and much more in extraordinary Caſes, and eſpecially in capital Caſes, and moſt of all in a Caſe of High Treaſon, ſuch as this, if it do appear to the Court and your Lordſhip, that the Plea is in its nature a frivolous Plea, you do uſually refuſe to admit ſuch a Plea, and give Judgment upon it. Now we would acquaint your Lordſhip with our Apprehenſions in this Caſe, and we would pray you to conſider what the danger may be upon us to demur, if this Plea be frivolous, as it appears to be: For whether an Indictment in this Court, or an Indictment in another Court be for one and the ſame Offence, and ſo a bar to the Juriſdiction, we are not ſo much as admitted into the Queſtion of that, as this Plea is. Whereas according to the Courſe in other Pleas, we pray you would be pleaſed to ſee the Inconvenience, if we ſhould be put to demur to it; for then we do admit by this Demurrer, that this Impeachment is for one and the ſame thing; and we humbly conceive, my Lord, that is a little dangerous. How then will it be poſſible for you ever to judg, that the Impeachment (which in Fact is otherwiſe) and the Indictment is for the ſame thing, unleſs you will put them to purſue the common Methods, how it was in the Houſe of Lords, by ſhewing forth the Record? And what can we do otherwiſe (it being apparently againſt the common Form of Pleas, and manifeſtly for Delay only) than pray the Judgment of the Court, which we hope will be to reject this Plea?

L. C. J. Brother Jefferies, you need not be afraid, that you ſhall be concluded by this Demurrer, that there is ſuch an Impeachment in the Lords Houſe for the ſame Offence: there will be no colour for it. And Brother Maynard, formerly I confeſs, when they pleaded Pleas Ore tenus, and took their Exceptions Ore tenus too, they would demand Judgment of a Plea preſently; and ſo it was in the Biſhop of Wincheſter's Caſe, 3 Edw. 3. where there was an Indictment againſt the Biſhop here in this Court, for going away from the Parliament at Shrewsbury, without the leave of the Lords: There Shard comes in, and pleads Ore tenus this Matter, and ſays, this is a thing that concerns the Lords in Parliament, of which they have Cognizance only, and ſo prays the Judgment of the Court preſently, Whether they have Juriſdiction of the Cauſe or no? and he pleads it in Abatement. There they overruled him preſently without any more to do, becauſe their Pleadings were not as now they are; now they are grown into a formal Way, all entred upon Record, or at leaſt written in Paper: and what ſhould be the Reaſon why you ſhould not do according to the common Courſe of the Court, I leave it to you to conſider of it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It is very true, my Lord, antiently the Courſe was ſo, my Lord, and the Law was ſo too, to plead Ore tenus, but pleading in Paper is the ſame thing; and the Courſe of the Court hath been, when they ſaw it in Paper to be a frivolous Plea, to give Judgment preſently: and you have the ſame Privilege upon this account, as they had when Pleas were by Word of Mouth. If there be a Demurrer, it may hang longer than is convenient this Cauſe ſhould do.

L. C. J. Do not ſpeak of that, Brother Maynard; as to Delay, you ſhall take as ſhort a Day as you will.

Mr. Att. Gen. I have looked upon all the Precedents, and could never meet with one Demurrer where the Plea was to the Juriſdiction: but I pray your Judgment upon the firſt Matter, whether whoſoever pleads to the Juriſdiction, ought not to have the Record in poigne to juſtify his Plea? In a Plea in bar indeed it may come in by Mittimus, but in a Plea in Abatement, the Party ought always to be ready with thoſe Matters, that are to out the Court of their Juriſdiction; and beſides, the Court is to maintain their own Juriſdiction, the King's Counſel have nothing to do to aſſert that, but they ought to avoid all things that may be to the King's Prejudice, and therefore it ought to be by the Judgment of the Court in this Caſe ſet aſide. But I do think you will never find a Demurrer that was to a Plea to the Juriſdiction.

L. C. J. Pray conſider of that.

Mr. Att. Gen. But if it appear to be a frivolous Plea in the Form or in the Matter, you will not put us ſure to demur.

L. C. J. If you do inſiſt upon it, that you won't demur, nor do nothing, we will give Judgment; but we will take time to conſider it, if you won't demur, nor take Iſſue, or reply.

Sir Fran. Withins. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare me one Word? As it hath been obſerved to your Lordſhip, this is a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court; and if they do plead a Plea of that nature, the Court always expects the Plea ſhould be ſubſtantially good, otherwiſe it is not to be received. Now it is not ſubſtantially good here; for it ſays, that Fitz-Harris was impeached of High Treaſon: now ſuch an Impeachment is nought, for no body can be impeached of High Treaſon generally. It ought to come and ſet forth the particular Acts that make up the Treaſon; for the calling of a thing ſo, does not make it ſo: Therefore they that would plead this Plea, muſt come and ſhew that there is an Impeachment that hath ſuch Matter in it as does amount to Treaſon; ſo that then it being a naughty Plea in the Subſtance of it, and the end of it to put this Court out of a Juriſdiction, we hope for that Reaſon you will not receive it.

Mr. Sanders. One Word further, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, on the ſame ſide for the King. As for this Plea that he hath pleaded here, if it had had ſubſtantial Matter in Law, whereupon to ground a Debate, we ſhould not preſs your Lordſhip not to receive it, but we muſt get off of it as well as we could; but when it is manifeſtly pleaded merely for Delay, and it ſo appears to your Lordſhip upon the reading of it, and that there is nothing of Subſtance in it, then we hope you will not receive it, nor put Mr. Attorney to demur to it, or take Iſſue upon it. Now for the Plea, the Caſe is thus: Here is an Indictment for Treaſon againſt Mr. Fitz-Harris, for conſpiring the Death of the King, compaſſing of it, and declaring ſuch his Intention by a venomous Libel. Now he comes and pleads to out this Court of their Juriſdiction; and what does he plead? He ſays he was formerly impeached of High Treaſon in the Parliament, that is all he ſays concerning the Impeachment; then he does come and make an Averment, without ſhewing more that this High Treaſon, and that for which he was impeached, is the ſame; and takes upon himſelf to judge, whether the Court will or not, and will not ſubmit it to the Court, which certainly is not the right way of Pleading. If Mr. Fitz-Harris ſhould come and plead auter foitz acquit, That he had been tried at another time for the ſame Offence and acquitted, he ſhould not have ſaid generally he had been formerly indicted and acquitted, and this for the ſame thing; but he muſt have ſhewed the Record, and then averr'd upon the Record, that it was for one and the ſame Crime. For ſuppoſe in this Caſe, which would have appeared perhaps to be ſo, if he had done as he ſhould have done, ſhewn that there was ſuch an Impeachment, whereby he was impeached of High Treaſon, and which Impeachment did charge him with Treaſon for levying War againſt the King, and then have made a Concluſion as he does now, with an Averment, that the Impeachment and the Indictment was for one and the ſame Offence: Under favour, notwithſtanding his Averment, the Court would have adjudged them not to be the ſame; for if ſo be the Treaſon do not appear upon the Record to be the ſame, his Averment will ſignify nothing; why then his Pleading now thus inſufficiently for want of the Record, will be better for him than if he had pleaded it ſufficiently. Why then if he had now pleaded, that there is a Record of the former Impeachment, and ſet forth the Record, and then averred this was for the ſame, Mr. Attorney might take Iſſue either there was no ſuch Record, or ſaid it was another Treaſon, and traverſed it that it was not for the ſame; and ſo there would either have been one Tryal by the Record, or the other upon the Fact, by the Country. But now as he hath made it, this Tryal both upon the Record, and upon the Fact, is only triable by the Country, not by the Record. For if Mr. Attorney take Iſſue that there is no ſuch Record, then all the Record is, that he was impeached for High Treaſon, and then a Record of Impeachment for any High Treaſon would ſerve the turn, which if it be not for the ſame, it ought not: ſo then the Iſſue of null tiel Record could not be taken. Why then now, my Lord, as to the Fact; If Mr. Attorney take Iſſue, that it was not the ſame Treaſon, then the Record muſt be try'd, that is, whether there was ſuch a Record that does contain an Impeachment for the ſame Treaſon for which he ſtands indicted; this I ſay, muſt be try'd by the Country. And if he have pleaded it ſo, that matter of Record upon Iſſue muſt be try'd by the Country, for that Reaſon his Plea is naught; and if that be ſo, then the Court may be ſatisfy'd, that 'tis apparently pleaded only for Delay, becauſe he would not come to the principal Matter, and plead Guilty or not Guilty, which is the Matter of Fact moſt proper for the Country. I rather hope he is not Guilty than that he is: but if he be Guilty, 'tis the moſt horrid venomous Treaſon as ever was ſpread abroad in any Age. And for that reaſon your Lordſhip will not give Countenance to any Delay. And therefore we pray the Plea may be rejected, and he may anſwer over.

Mr. Att. Gen. He hath not pleaded prout patet per Record.

L. C. J. Yes 'tis prout patet in Rotulis Parliamenti. He does ſay that he was impeached of High Treaſon by the Commons, before the Lords, as appears by the Records thereof amongſt the Records of Parliament.

Mr. Att. Gen. I did not truly remember that, but I beg your Pardon if it be ſo, for I had not a view of the Plea till now; but I am ready thus far to ſatisfy the Court, 'tis a pure falſe and frivolous Plea. And then with Submiſſion I offer it to your Conſideration, whether you will give any time, or preſently reject it.

L. C. J. We will give them no time, that is ſure. But the Queſtion is, whether time ſhould not be taken, not in Favour of the Priſoner, but of the King and of the Court?

Mr. Att. Gen. I am ready to make out, if it were neceſſary, that there is nothng of all this true, 'tis all Fiction that is pleaded, and nothing in the Record to warrant it; I have a Copy of the whole Journal, and of the Tranſactions in the Houſe of Lords, the Book is cloſe by and ready to be ſhewn: but when 'tis a frivolous Plea, I hope there will be no need of that trouble.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Attorney, whether we can take notice of the Journal Book now, you had beſt conſider, as this Caſe ſtands.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. They ought to have it here ready, they ought to have it here in poigne.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. There have been very many good Arguments urged by you, upon which perhaps the Plea will be judged inſufficient; but the Queſtion is, Whether you are now in any ſuch Form as we can paſs Judgment upon this Plea, or no? Therefore it being offer'd to you to conſider of it, what you will do in it; ſure it is reaſonable you ſhould conſider of it, and when you are agreed, then you may ask our Judgment.

L. C. J. We cannot put you to it to give a final Anſwer to bind the King: therefore let it ſtand as it is; we will conſider of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, I'll demur immediately.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And we pray they may join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If they do not mean it for delay, now Mr. Attorney hath demurred, I ſuppoſe they will join in Demurrer immediately.

[Then the Clerk of the Crown drew up a general Demurrer, which Mr. Attorney ſigned, and it was read in the Court by the Clerk of the Crown.]

Mr. At. Gen. We pray they may join in Demurrer.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we that are aſſigned of Counſel for this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, (that your Lordſhip may be ſatisfy'd, and all that hear us, that we do not deſign or deſire to delay one Minute in this Cauſe) do declare, that we will join in Demurrer with them immediately.

[Then the Clerk drew up the Joinder in Demurrer, which being ſigned by the four Gentlemen of Counſel with Mr. Fitz-Harris, was alſo read in Court.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment; here is an Indictment for framing a treaſonable Libel——

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we hope we ſhall not be put——

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, hear what I pray. My Lord, I deſire your Judgment, that the Plea may ſtand over-ruled for a plain fatal Error in it. This is a particular Indictment for the framing a moſt pernicious ſcandalous Libel againſt the King, and the Government, for Treaſon in that particular; and I think there is no Perſon does doubt, but that this is a Matter within the Juriſdiction of this Court to try: There is no difficulty in that. What do they do to out this Juriſdiction? They come and plead, that Fitz-Harris was impeached de alta Proditione, that's all they plead of High Treaſon in general, to out the Court of a Juriſdiction, of a particular Treaſon, for framing a malicious traitorous Libel; and this is a particular Treaſon upon the Statute of the 13th of this King. Now they have pleaded no particular Treaſon upon that Statute they were impeach'd for, nor upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. which hath a general Clauſe of a declaratory Power, and it may be he was impeached upon that, and we ſhall not intend it otherwiſe, that being the general Law, the other but a particular Law for this King's Life. Now in all Pleas to the Juriſdiction, they ought to be the ſtricteſt and moſt certain of any Pleas whatſoever. And as I offered before to you, ſo I do now again, they ought to be ready with the Record to juſtify their Plea: but this in ſhort I inſiſt upon, that to out a Court of its Juriſdiction for a particular Treaſon, 'tis not a good Plea, by ſaying he was impeached or indicted generally of High Treaſon, and no Averment can poſſibly help it. For it appears by the Impeachment 'tis not for the ſame, and 'tis rather to be intended that it was not; but the Impeachment being general, that they went upon a declaratory Power, in the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. which reſerves to them the Power of declaring Treaſon at large, and not upon that which may be tried here in an inferiour Court upon a particular Statute: I ſay, my Lord, they ought to have pleaded it certainly, which they having not done, 'tis fatal; and I pray your Judgment upon it: and I hope they are ready to make good their Plea.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, that which we do ſay to it, is, That this Plea is neither good in Matter nor Form; and if it had been pleaded never ſo formally, perhaps we would have demurred to it: but as now it is pleaded, it is not formal, and therefore we pray it may be over-ruled. The Exception we take to it in point of Form, we think is fatal; for there is no Man that pleads an Indictment or an Impeachment in another Court, but muſt ſet forth the Indictment in the Plea, which is not done in this Caſe, and we take that to be fatal to it: For a Man that will plead auter foitz acquit, muſt ſet forth the Indictment, and all the Proceedings of the Court upon that Indictment; this is the conſtant Pleading in all Caſes, and particularly in Vaux's Caſe, the 4th Report. Whoever will plead auter foitz acquit, muſt ſet forth the Record, before it will require an Anſwer to be given to it.

L. C. J. What do you ſay to it, Gentlemen, for the maintaining of your Plea?

Mr. Williams. This is that we ſay, my Lord: We hope your Lordſhip, and the Court, in this Caſe, will not tye us up preſently to come and argue this Matter. One thing I would mention, becauſe it hath been ſaid there was never ſuch a Precedent; I think, to this purpoſe, the Precedent of Elliot's Caſe is very full in it. Mr. Attorney is pleaſed to ſay, he never found that any Plea to the Juriſdiction did ever require a Demurrer, but was over-ruled or allowed by the Court preſently; but that Caſe is plain to the contrary upon that very Matter. It was an Indictment brought againſt Elliot, for ſome Miſdemeanours committed by him in the Houſe of Commons; this being pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court, the Attorney-General at that time ſaid it was not to be received, that was the Matter he inſiſted on then, that it ſhould be rejected: but the Court did then, as you do now, over-rule the Attorney in it, and put him to demur.

L. C. J. We have done the ſame for you.

Mr. Williams. Then, my Lord, here is a Precedent that Mr. Attorney hath not ſeen: Now for Time, the Court in that Caſe did not tye the Counſel up to argue the Plea preſently, but gave them time till the next Term. We ask not ſo hard a thing of the Court, as ſo long a time in this Caſe, only here is a Man's Life in queſtion; 'tis indeed for Treaſon, and ſo it is of conſequence to the King; and there is alſo the Privilege of Parliament conſequently concern'd in it. What time your Lordſhip and the Court ſhall think reaſonable for us to be ready in, we leave it to your Lordſhip; we deſign not to delay at all, only we deſire a reaſonable time. Your Lordſhip did in the Caſe of Plunket give him time for his Tryal till next Term, which is as high a Treaſon as this, I am ſure.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. You would have People think you have ſtrange Meaſure in this Caſe, that you have not the ſame Time given to you that was given to Plunket: Pray conſider you object theſe things as tho the Court were hard upon you, to tye you up in point of time. Is your Caſe like Plunket's? Pray give us leave to clear our Accounts as we go along: He is brought from Ireland hither, is indicted for what he did in another Kingdom, and it is by Law he is ſo indicted indeed; but he being kept cloſe Priſoner, and not knowing what time he ſhould be brought to a Tryal, he deſires time to ſend for his Witneſſes, who are to be brought over to clear him of the Treaſon. Could we in Juſtice deny it him, or could there be a ſhorter time than next Term given him, when his Witneſſes are in another Kingdom, and it would be a Fortnight or three Weeks before, poſſibly, he could have his Witneſſes here? This I mention, becauſe you will needs make uſe of ſuch a Caſe, that is no more like yours, than any thing that is the fartheſt different from it; yet you will have the Caſe to meaſure with your Caſe.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I know it is in the diſcretion of the Court; and as your Lordſhip did what was juſt for Plunket, ſo you will to this Perſon: I know you will do what is right to every body. We are Counſel aſſigned by your Lordſhip, and we doubt not but your Lordſhip will be juſt to us, and give us a reaſonable time to argue it.

L. C. J. Look you by the way, Mr. Williams, I muſt tell you, when we aſſigned Counſel to Mr. Fitz-Harris, we expected that Counſel ſhould conſider the Plea, ſo as to be able to maintain it, when they come to plead it here; for that reaſon we gave him time to plead it, ſo as he would ſtand by it: What needed we elſe to have aſſigned him ſo much Counſel in ſuch a Caſe as this is, but that he ſhould be ready? and why you ſhould now hope that we will give you a longer time for Argument in ſuch a Caſe, I ſee not. Conſider, whether in Diſcretion you think longer time ought to be expected upon ſuch a Plea as this is.

Sir F. Win. My Lord, we will not take upon us to preſcribe, nor to mention any time in particular, we leave that to the Diſcretion and Judgment of the Court; but this, I think, we may pray, according to the Duty we owe to our Client, upon your Lordſhip's aſſigning us of Counſel. We could not foreſee, till to-day, what the King's Counſel would do; whether Mr. Attorney would take Iſſue upon us of null tiel Record, or upon any of our Averments. We could not foreſee whether he would demur to us, or not. I know your Lordſhip will be as favourable to us as you can; not having thoſe Papers, or Sight of thoſe Records that were neceſſary, and would have expedited this Matter, our time was all ſpent in forming of the Plea, and we could not prepare particular Matter in Law to defend it. We are as ready as can be expected, and we have been as induſtrious to prevent any delay, as any Perſons could be in our Condition; therefore, it may be, we have had a general Conſideration of the Plea: But now we ſee where the Doubts do lie upon it; 'tis a Matter of Law pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court. I do not indeed love to cite Precedents upon what is plain; but withal, I do not love to ſay things upon a ſudden are plain, without Conſideration: but this I will ſay, as 'tis now upon this Demurrer joined, it is a Caſe well worth our taking care of, and yours too; I muſt ſay it with your Lordſhips leave. Therefore, if in the Caſe of my Lord Hollis, which was but upon an Information, and that but for a Miſdemeanour, and tho it was a Plea directly to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and certainly they came prepared, for they were all at liberty, and had reſort to all Papers and Books before the Plea pleaded, which we could not have; yet the Court was pleaſed to aſſign them time, and give them a large time, I hope we ſhall have ſome reaſonable time. I do not ſpeak it, that we ſhould have ſo long time; but I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip, that we may do our Duty to the Court, and to our Client, that we may have a little time. It is true, it is a great and a horrid Treaſon; but it is as true, here is the Life of a Man concerned in it: we do not affect delay at all, but hope you will not deny us what time is reaſonable.

L. C. J. Look you, I'll tell you; you might, if you had pleaſed, have entitled your ſelves better to have had time to ſpeak to the Plea, if you had pleaded over to the Treaſon; then we could have given you time to have ſpoken to it, and not delay'd the King at all: but you have thought fit not to plead over. I muſt confeſs, I did expect you would have pleaded over, as you might have done, and I thought you would; therefore having not done it, it is in our Conſideration, whether we will give you time, and what time we will give you.

Mr. Wallop. It is under your Lordſhip's Favour, according to the uſual Courſe of modern Practice. I have been an unprofitable Attendant here near forty Years, and, for my part, I did never yet ſee ſo ſwift a Proceeding as this is now; it is as ſwift as Lightning. It is a very extraordinary thing, we might well conceive, that nothing more ſhould be expected from us, than what is uſual, and that we ſhould not be put out of the ordinary Proceedings. Antiently indeed, as your Lordſhip did obſerve the other day, they pleaded Ore tenus, and then the Proceedings were very quick: now indeed it is otherwiſe; modern, and what we may call antient Practice too, hath made an Alteration from that Method: and we humbly pray, we may not proceed, but according to the rate of modern Practice. My Lord, whereas they are pleaſed to call it a frivolous Plea, I believe it is a Plea of the greateſt Import that ever theſe Gentlemen came here about, whatſoever they are pleaſed to ſay. But your Lordſhip knows, the Life of a Man is the greateſt Favourite in Law; and that to be a moſt antient and wiſe Rule, De morte Hominis nulla eſt cunctatio longa. And ſince we could not reaſonably expect to be thought to come provided in this Caſe, we humbly pray, that your Lordſhip will allot us ſuch a reaſonable time as your Lordſhip ſhall think fit.

L. C. J. Come, let me propoſe this to you, will you plead over?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I will give you an Anſwer to that, We cannot do it. When we were together, we did conſider, whether if we ſhould plead over, it would not deſtroy the Plea, and we were of opinion that it would deſtroy the Plea: we cannot plead over, but we give up the Juriſdiction. It is as indifferent and light to me, as any body, to be forced to argue it now; but as to the Matter of it, I believe, no body can ſay, they ever ſaw many Inſtances of the like nature: Therefore, pray my Lord, let us not go on ſo haſtily with it, for we could not foreſee, what ſince we know, how it would be with us. I did not think they would have demurred, but now 'tis come to that,

that, we must make the best of it. We have pleaded this Plea; if you will not be pleased to give us leave and time to be prepar'd to argue it, you must take it as we are able, since we can't have time to make ourselves able.

L. C. J. Certainly, Mr. Pollexfen, in favorem vitæ, it would not hurt the Plea, to plead over.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, if your Lordship please to favour me a Word in this Case; I hear several things urged, particularly instancing in modern Practice. If that Gentleman will shew that in any Case the King and the Court were so indulgent to give four Days to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, then he will shew me something of modern Practice, which I know not; but if that Gentleman will remember modern Practice in a great Nobleman's Case, for whom he was of Counsel, it was told him, if he would debate the Point of Law, he must do it presently: They never would give him time to prepare for his Argument, there was no such modern Practice then. I would desire him to give me one Instance, that when Gentlemen are assigned of Counsel to plead a Matter to the Jurisdiction, and deal so with the King's Counsel as they have dealt with us, not to let us see the Plea till now; the modern Practice hath been to give them any time. For them to say, that they could not foresee what we would be at; could they not foresee the Points of Law? Could they not foresee a plain Case? But they do not take off the great Matter, that he that doth plead to the Jurisdiction, ought to have the Record ready in his Hand; but, my Lord, we lay our Thumb upon that which is our Exception, they have pleaded no Impeachment of any Crime, that can appear to be the same with that for which they are indicted, that is the Point. Is there such difficulty? Did not these learned Gentlemen think? Could they not foresee that we should look into their Plea, that it should be legal? Therefore I did and do pray your Judgment. If they had pleaded, and set forth the Record truly, as it is, and as it ought to be set forth, in case they would have any Benefit by it, we would have given them another Answer; but if it be done purposely, as it is done with Artifice, I am bold to say, for these Gentlemen know how to plead a Record as it ought to be, and how this ought to be pleaded to, to out the Court of a Jurisdiction of a particular Crime. They say the Life of a Man is concerned, and so is the Peace of the Kingdom concerned too, in the Life of as great a Traytor as ever was try'd in Westminster-Hall. For if his Treason had taken effect, certainly the Kingdom had been very near embroil'd in Civil Wars by this time; therefore the whole Peace of the Kingdom depends upon his Life, and it depends upon the clearing of the whole Matter. And I challenge them again, if they can shew me any Instance of the like nature. That of Elliot's Case that was mentioned, it was an Information; and to Pleas upon Informations there have been Demurrers, but to Indictments found by twelve Men, we do not meet with any Demurrer any where to a Plea to the Jurisdiction. But I pray your Judgment, that he may plead in chief; for 'tis but a Respondes ouster, and if these Gentlemen desire to take time, I hope you will not delay the King by giving countenance to such a plain imperfect Plea; and for those high Matters they talk of, that will be the Consequence, they can never come in question upon this Plea.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have but one short Word to that which is now in question. Our Exceptions to the Plea, we offered and opened before; the Question is now, whether they shall have time to argue this Plea: And the Arguments they use for longer time, is, the Life of a Man, and they could not be prepared on a sudden, because they knew not what we would do. For the hasty Proceedings that have been in this Case, which they clamour of, I think they have little reason to speak so, since that hath been done in this Case, that never was done in any other. He hath had three Days time to consider, whether he will plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, which never was done to any, and so great a Favour, that he is scarce entitled to any farther Favour. Does any Man believe that they are not prepared? Do not Gentlemen, when they consider of a Plea, consider upon what Grounds they plead? And does not that let them into the whole Matter, where the weak parts of the Plea are, and what may be objected against it? I am sure that these Gentlemen are of that Consideration, that no Man does believe they would put in this or any Plea, without having considered beforehand what to do. And then, when they have put in a Plea upon great Consideration, no Man is to think that they are unready to maintain it. Our Exception is short, and they do but talk in general Terms that they are unprepared; and they have no reason to expect this Kindness from the Court, especially since they used Mr. Attorney at this rate: they gave him not the Plea, but only a Note to tell him they would do that which they said four Days before, and no more. If they had done regularly, they should have brought Mr. Attorney the Plea, and left a Copy with him, and desired him to consider of it. But we do not pretend we are surpriz'd for all this Usage, we see the Plea here, and we see the Faults of it, and we have demurred to it, and tell them our Exception; sure they are better prepared than 'tis possible for the King to be, yet we are ready; and we hope you will grant them no longer time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Will your Lordship be pleased to spare me one Word: I wonder at what Mr. Wallop seems now to urge concerning the Life of a Man that is concerned in this Case; 'tis true, the Life of a Man is concerned, which is a dear thing to the Law, but certainly the Life of the Government is more dear to the Government, and all Courts of Justice, than the Life of any one single Person: And I am sure this one Person hath done as much as in him lies to strike at the Life of the Government, in case this be true that is laid to his charge. Now to make this Case like to Plunket's the other day, is strange; I think your Lordship hath given an account of that. For hath he pleaded to the Fact, Not Guilty, as Plunket did? We that are of the King's Counsel would in common Charity hope, that he is not guilty; but I am sure, if he be guilty, no Englishman can think that he deserves to live: why then should we be so fond of a Man's Life, that hath been guilty of such a Fact as this? For example sake, surely, if that be the thing in question, we ought to have speedy Justice executed upon a Man that deserves no Mercy. Your Lordship was pleased to take notice of another Circumstance in the Case of Plunket: He was indicted, he was arraigned, and was to have had his Tryal in Ireland, and was to fetch his Witnesses from thence; all these things were in that Case. He desired time to consider what he should plead; but your Lordship finding an Indictment found against him, according to the Rules of Justice, over-ruled that Matter he ſuggeſted, and made him plead, Not Guilty, before ever you admitted him to debate any thing of that Fact. And then it appearing to your Lordſhip to be in another Kingdom, and that it was impoſſible, in regard of the Hazards of the Winds and Seas, to get over his Witneſſes in a little time, your Lordſhip gave him time; but you gave him as ſtrait a time as could be conſiſtent with the Rules of Juſtice, and as his Caſe would bear. Now, my Lord, this being offered in a Caſe of that Expectation, which the Caſe before you ſeems to have, we deſire the Diſpatch of it as much as we can. In caſe the Man be innocent, God forbid but he ſhould be acquitted; but if he be guilty, God forbid he ſhould live a Minute.

L. C. J. Surely you don't take the Caſe, Gentlemen, to be a Caſe of ſo much Difficulty, as to deſerve long Conſideration; we did expect truly, that you would have been ready to have maintain'd your Plea.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we do not deſire any long time, be pleaſed to give us a day, or two, or three, as you pleaſe.

L. C. J. 'Tis ſaid, 'tis in a Caſe wherein the Life of a Man is concerned; 'tis true, here is the Life of a Man, of whom, till he be found guilty, we ought to have Conſideration, as we would of any other whatſoever: For we have no reaſon to conclude him guilty, till we hear him, and we are to be indifferent till we hear the Evidence; therefore, notwithſtanding the Indictment, we ought to weigh his Life as we would another Man's, till he be found guilty. We in ourſelves do not ſee there is any ſo great matter of neceſſity for time to conſider of this Caſe; yet I muſt tell you, ſince they pray it, Mr. Attorney, we are inclinable to give them a day or two's time to conſider of it, and ſee what they can ſay to maintain this Plea. But then, Gentlemen, if we do ſo, you muſt take notice we will call you to plead preſently after our Judgment upon the Plea.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have nothing to do with the Fact of this Caſe, we are only to ſpeak to the Plea.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray how then is your Life in queſtion upon the Deciſion of this Plea?

L. C. J. Brother, they do not ſpeak as to this Plea, that it hazards his Life, but the ſubjecta materia, upon the Deciſion of it, ſuppoſing Judgment be againſt the Plea. Therefore, Mr. Attorney, we do think fit to give him till Friday Morning, and he ſhall be brought hither then again by the Lieutenant of the Tower; then we will hear theſe Gentlemen: and if they do not ſhew us any conſiderable Matter to maintain the Plea, they muſt expect Judgment preſently.

Mr. Att. Gen. That certainly will be too long a time; pray, my Lord, they ought to have been ready now: If they will be pleaſed to be ready to-morrow Morning, I pray it may go off to no further time.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. There is a neceſſity, my Lord, I think that it ſhould be ſo, for there is a long Tryal at the Bar here on Friday.

Mr. Williams. That is a very ſhort time indeed.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You muſt be ready to-morrow Morning.

Mr. Williams. Unleſs, my Lord, you will give us a little more time, you had as good give us no time.

L. C. J. It ſeems the Buſineſs of the Court is ſuch, on Friday Morning you can't be heard.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Either it muſt be to-morrow Morning or Saturday, and that is Exchequer-Chamber Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I believe they are not in haſte.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we would give them a reaſonable time, but yet we would do nothing that might make unneceſſary Delays in this Caſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray, my Lord, let it be no longer than till to-morrow, and that is more than ever was given in ſuch a Caſe. I know it was deny'd in my Lord Stafford's Caſe, they would not give the Counſel any time, but would make them argue preſently.

L. C. J. As to that, Mr. Attorney, every Caſe ſtands upon its own Bottom.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, we have your Direction for to-morrow Morning.

Sir F. Win. No, no, my Lord, we hope not ſo.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, to accommodate you, the Court does think fit thus to do: we will be here on Saturday by ſeven a-clock in the Morning. On Friday we can do nothing, for there is a long Tryal at Bar, that will take up our time; but on Saturday we will be here by eight a-clock ſitting, and expect you to be here by that time: and we cannot afford you then long time to argue in, becauſe it is an Exchequer-Chamber Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Judgment be againſt the Plea, they muſt plead preſently then, that we may not loſe the Term for a Tryal.

L. C. J. You muſt take notice of that, by the Rules of the Court they muſt do it, Mr. Attorney. If our Judgment be againſt them, the Courſe of the Court is ſo, we can't rule it one way or another.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But then they ought not to pretend they have no notice, their Witneſſes are out of the way, and ſo hinder the Tryal.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. No, no.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I deſire I may have theſe Lords come to me; my Lord of Eſſex, my Lord Salisbury, my Lord Mayor, your Lordſhip, and Sir Robert Clayton, to perfect my Diſcovery. I have ſomething to diſcover to your Lordſhip and them.

L. C. J. Your Diſcovery of what, do you mean?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Of the Plot, and of the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey.

L. C. J. We did examine you about the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Your Lordſhip went away in haſte, before I had told all I could ſay.

L. C. J. We asked you ten times, whether you had any more to ſay, and you ſaid, No.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I was in Confuſion and Conſternation, I ſcarce knew what your Lordſhip ſaid to me.

L. C. J. We were not in haſte, we asked you often that Queſtion.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. It was haſte to me, becauſe I was not provided of the Queſtions you asked me.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. To ſome of the Queſtions we asked you, you anſwered readily and freely; but to ſome we could not get a poſitive Anſwer by any means.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he told me he was not in England then, and that he knew no more than what he had diſcovered.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Did I ſay ſo, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, you are the Man.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I can bring twenty Witneſſes, I did not tell you ſo; and I can bring 500 Witneſſes, that I was in Town then.

L. C. J. Lieutenant of the Tower, take your Priſoner, and be here before Eight a-clock on Saturday Morning.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, now I deſire we may have a Copy of the whole Record.

L. C. J. Not of the Indictment, but of the Plea and Demurrer, you may.

Sir Fran. Win. But, my Lord, I hope you will let the Indictment be read upon Saturday, becauſe Mr. Attorney had fixed his Exception upon part of the Indictment, which is the Libel that he calls the particular Treaſon, and I deſire it may be in Court.

L. C. J. It ſhall be, and if you have any occaſion of Reference to it, we will look upon it; we are all upon our Oaths, and muſt take heed that no Prejudice be done to the King, as well as to ſee the Priſoner have no unfair thing put upon him.

[Then the Priſoner was carried back to the Tower.]

On Saturday the 7th of May, 1681. Mr. Fitz-Harris was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, about eight of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Williams. MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am aſſigned of Counſel for this Perſon, Mr. Fitz-Harris, the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I will only briefly acquaint them with what our Exceptions are, that they may apply themſelves to them.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, all our time is ſtrait enough for this Matter, for we are all of us to be by and by with all the Judges in the Exchequer-Chamber; therefore we pray this of you, we will abridge no Man's ſpeaking what is material for his Client, but we deſire you will keep to the Matter, and the Points in queſtion between you, and ſave our time as much as you can.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the reaſon, my Lord, why I would lay my Finger upon thoſe Points, that will be the Queſtions between us. Now the Exceptions I take to the Plea, are theſe: This is a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and ſome of our Exceptions are to the Form, and one is to the Matter. To the Form, my Exceptions are theſe: Firſt, we ſay, that the general Allegation that he was impeached de Alta Proditione, is uncertain, and too general; it ought to have been particularly ſet out, that the Court might judge, whether it be the ſame Crime, and it is not helped by the Averment. And the next Exception I take to it, is, here is no Impeachment alledged to be upon Record; I mentioned this the laſt time, and looking more ſtrictly into it, I find 'tis ſo as I ſaid: For they come and make a general Allegation, that Fitz-Harris, ſuch a time, was impeached, Impetitus fuit, by the Commons before the Lords, Quæ quidem Impetitio in pleno robore exiſtit, prout per Recordum inde, &c. Now, my Lord, there is no Impeachment mentioned before: And quæ quidem Impetitio, is a Relative Clauſe, and if there be no Impeachment mentioned before in the Plea, then there is nothing averred upon the Record, to be continued or diſcontinued; for Impetitio does not actively ſignify the Impeaching, or paſſively the Perſon impeached, but it ſignifies the Indictment or Impeachment, that Inſtrument which contains the Accuſation, and which is to be and remain upon Record. Therefore, when they come and ſay, he was impeached, and afterwards alledg'd, Quæ quidem Impetitio remains upon Record, that cannot be good. If a Plea ſhould be Inditatus fuit, and afterwards they ſay quod quidem Inditamentum, &c. it cannot be good, for the Relative there is only illuſive. Theſe are our Exceptions to the Form. For the Matter of it, 'tis a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court; and with Submiſſion there the Point will be, whether a Suit depending, even in a Superior Court, can take away the Juriſdiction of an Inferior Court, who had an original Juriſdiction of the Cauſe, of the Perſon, and of the Fact, at the time of the Fact committed. What uſe might be made of it, as a Plea in Bar, might be of another Conſideration; but whether this be enough to make it amount to ſuch a Plea, as will take away the Juriſdiction of a Court, that had an original Juriſdiction, that's the Queſtion before you. Theſe are the Exceptions I take, and do inſiſt upon: And I deſire, my Lord, the Counſel will apply themſelves to theſe Exceptions, to anſwer them; and when we have heard what they can ſay, I hope to give them an Anſwer.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I am aſſigned of Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar, Edward Fitz-Harris, who is indicted here for High Treaſon, and hath pleaded a ſpecial Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court: And I muſt crave leave to ſtate his Caſe upon the Indictment, the Plea to the Indictment, and the Demurrer to the Plea. And the Caſe, my Lord, upon the whole Record ſtands thus: He was indicted this Term, by one of the Grand Jurys for this County, of High Treaſon. As to the Indictment, it cannot be expected I ſhould ſtate the Parts of it, it being an Indictment I never ſaw. To this Indictment thus preſented, Fitz-Harris hath pleaded thus, That he ought not to be compelled to anſwer to this Indictment, becauſe that before the Indictment was found, at a Parliament held at Oxford, the 21ſt of March laſt, he was impeached by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, of the Houſe of Commons in Parliament aſſembled, in the name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, of High Treaſon; and that this was before the Court of Lords in that Parliament. He ſays further, that this Impeachment is remaining in full Force and Effect, before the Lords in Parliament, prout per Recordum inde int' Record. Parliamenti remanens plenius liquet & apparet. Theſe are the Words of the Plea: And then he avers, that the High Treaſon mentioned in the Indictment, and the High Treaſon ſpecify'd in the Impeachment, are one and the ſame. And he further avers, that he is the ſame Fitz-Harris named in that Indictment, and mentioned in the Impeachment. And after the Averments, he concludes, to the Juriſdiction of the Court; whether upon all this Matter, they will proceed any further againſt him, upon this Indictment: and demands the Judgment of the Court to that purpoſe.

Upon this Plea, Mr. Attorney hath demurred generally, and we that are of Counſel for the Priſoner, have join'd in Demurrer with him. Now in this Caſe, which thus comes before you, for your Judgment upon this Plea and this Demurrer, I take theſe things to be admitted.

Firſt, That the Priſoner ſtands impeached, by the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, of High Treaſon. Secondly, That the Impeachment thus made by the Commons, in the Name of themſelves ſelves and of all the Commons of England, before the Lords in Parliament, for Treaſon, is now in being. Thirdly, which I omitted in the opening of the Plea, that this was done ſed in Legem & Conſ. Parliamenti, and being ſo, remains in plenis ſuis Robore & Effectu. And more particularly this Plea does refer to the Record, for the Parts and Circumſtances of the Impeachment, prout patet per Record. inde inter, &c. So that it does refer the Impeachment itſelf to the Record, and tells you this is among the other Records of that Parliament; all this is admitted by the Plea. Fourthly, And, moreover, that this Treaſon, for which he ſtands impeached before the Lords, and the Treaſon for which he ſtands indicted before this Court, are one and the ſame Treaſon, and no way diverſe; and ſo they are the ſame numerical thing, and there is no manner of difference: And that this Perſon Fitz-Harris now indicted, and the Fitz-Harris impeach'd, are one and the ſame Perſon, and no way diverſe. And withal, my Lord, it appears plainly upon the Record, that this Impeachment was depending before; the Indictment found for the Parliament was the 21ſt of March, and it appears by the Record this is only an Indictment of this Term. And another thing I muſt entreat you to obſerve, my Lord; it does not appear but that this Parliament is ſtill in being, for any thing to the contrary in the Record, and as I take the Caſe, then it muſt be admitted ſo to be.

So then I take the Plea to be in ſubſtance thus, tho Mr. Attorney was pleaſed to except to both the Subſtance and the Form; but in Subſtance the Caſe is thus: Here is a Perſon impeached in Parliament, by the Commons in Parliament, for High Treaſon, before the Lords in Parliament, and for ought appears that Parliament ſtill in being, and this Impeachment ſtill depending; then here is an Indictment for that very Treaſon: whether your Lordſhip now will think fit in this Court to proceed upon that Indictment, is the Subſtance of the Caſe. I ſhall ſpeak to the Form by and by.

My Lord, by the way I think it will not be denied, but that the Commons in Parliament may impeach any Commoner of Treaſon before the Lords in Parliament; I take that to be admitted. And I do not find that Mr. Attorney denies it, or makes any doubt of that; for I think that was the Caſe of Treſilian and Belknap, who were impeach'd in Parliament by the Commons before the Lords: I am ſure my Lord Chief Juſtice Vaughan does, in his Reports in Buſhell's Caſe, ſay ſo; and upon that Impeachment of the Commons, one of them was executed, and the other baniſhed, in Parliament. My Lord, I cite it not merrily, but I cite it as Authority. Indeed I do not go ſo far as to cite the Parliament Roll, it was in the time of Richard II. I have not ſeen the Roll of late, truly, but I am ſure 'tis upon the Roll, and there 'tis to be found.

Since then Impeachments of Commoners will lie in Parliament, here then, my Lord, will be the queſtion, Whether this Court may proceed upon an Indictment for the ſame Offence the Parliament was for. And here I ſhall diſtinguiſh upon Mr. Attorney: He does allow the Parliament to be a ſuperior Court; but admitting that he ſays, tho it be ſo, yet the inferiour Court having original Juriſdiction of the Perſon and the Cauſe, it may proceed, notwithſtanding an Indictment in the ſuperiour Court: and, ergo, he does infer that this Court may proceed upon an Indictment, notwithſtanding an Impeachment in Parliament.

My Lord, I will compare a little the Caſe of an Indictment and an Impeachment, and ſhew how manifeſtly they differ. I do take the Caſe of an Impeachment not to be the Caſe of an Indictment, and ſo the Principle that Mr. Attorney hath taken is wrong, and the Ground of that Argument wrong. I cannot ſay 'tis like the Caſe of an Appeal, but I may ſay the Caſe of an Appeal is like the Caſe of an Impeachment. For in an Appeal of Murder, tho the Indictment be capital, and the ſame that is given upon Criminals proſecuted for the King, yet it is at the Suit of the Party, as in this Caſe 'tis at the Suit of the Commons, and ſo 'tis an Intimation of, and analogical to, and bears the Reſemblance of an Impeachment in Parliament; I will not compare an Impeachment to an Appeal, but I will ſay an Appeal imitates an Impeachment. And 'tis as plain as can be, becauſe Appeals are proper to Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall, and 'tis at the ſuit of the Party, the Proſecution and all the Proceſs is ad inſtantiam partis, ſo is an Impeachment at the ſuit of the Commons. An Indictment is found upon the Preſentment of a Grand Jury, who are ſworn ad inquirendum pro Domino Rege pro Corpore Com. and 'tis a Miſtake in the Form, when 'tis ſaid & pro Corpore Com. for it is not for the King and the Body of the County, but for the King for the Body of the County. But now an Impeachment in Parliament is otherwiſe; 'tis not in the Name of the King, but in the Name of the Commons in Parliament, and of all the Commons in England, wherein it ſuits with an Appeal which is at the ſuit of the Party; ſo that 'tis like an Appeal, and not like an Indictment: an Indictment is for the King, an Impeachment for the People. And as it is in its Nature and Conſtitution different, ſo 'tis in the Proſecution alſo, for that is by the Commons of England, they are the Proſecutors in effect; but now in all Indictments they are proſecuted always by the King's Attorney, or by ſome Perſon in the name of the King. We are now arguing upon the Methods and Forms of Parliament, therefore I muſt crave leave to inſiſt upon thoſe Methods more particularly. The Commons they bring up the Impeachment to the Lords, the Commons they proſecute the Impeachment, they manage the Evidence upon the Tryal; and when the Lords have conſidered of it, and have found the Fact, the Commons come and demand Judgment, and Judgment is given at the Prayer of the Commons, and no otherwiſe, and there are no Proceedings by the Attorneys. Indeed there have been Attempts by Attorneys to proſecute Perſons in Parliament, by exhibiting Informations in the Parliament; but what Succeſs they have had, I leave to them to conſider that are concerned, and have read the Rolls of Parliament. But it is not ſafe to alter the old Ways of Parliament, therefore I take it under Correction, that it is out of the Road of Compariſons, when they will compare an Indictment and an Impeachment together; for they do not agree, but differ extremely.

I would then offer you ſome Reaſons why this Court ought not to proceed upon this Indictment. I take it, it does not become the Juſtice of this Court to weaken the Methods of Proceedings in Parliament, as this Court will certainly do: For if you will admit this to be the Courſe that I have open'd, your Proceedings will alter it. When there is an Impeachment depending in Parliament for Treaſon, if your Lordſhips will admit there may be an Indictment here afterwards in this Court, and Proceedings in this Court upon that Indictment, 'tis to alter the Method of Parliament Proceedings, and to ſubject the Method of their Proceedings there to the Proceedings of this Court; and what the Miſchief of that will be, I muſt leave to your Lordſhip. As I open'd it before, the Methods of both Courts are different, and their Proceedings very much vary, I think I need not trouble your Lordſhip with that, we all know it very well in the main. Indictments in this Court are to be tried by a Jury, where a Verdict muſt be given preſently. There is but very little time for giving the Evidence, or for making Obſervations for the Crown, or for the Publick; and in order to bring it to the Tryal, there muſt be an immediate Plea of Guilty, or Not Guilty. Now if the Proceedings of Parliament were ſo ſudden, there might be a great Surprize, and great Offenders paſs unpuniſhed, becauſe the Proſecutors had not greater time to inſpect the Records that might be of avail in the Caſe: Therefore in Parliament 'tis quite otherwiſe, there is time for Deliberation and Conſideration, there are many References, and many Examinations, which are Matters of Deliberation and Conſideration, which take up a great deal of time; but here you are ſtraitned not only in time, but bound up to ſtrict Rules, and ſo are ſtraitned in your Methods and Forms of Proceedings, as Mr. Attorney would here tye us up to the Forms of little Courts: but it is not fit that the Juſtice of the Kingdom, and the High Court of Parliament, ſhould be cramped by the Methods of an inferiour Court, and a Jury. So you will then ſubject the Methods of Proceedings in Parliament to the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall, and what the Conſequence of that will be, is worth the conſideration.

Method

Another reaſon I would humbly offer, is this, my Lord; the Parliament is the ſupreme Court certainly, and this Court is every way inferiour to it, and it will be very ſtrange that that ſupreme Court ſhould be hinder'd by an inferiour: for the higheſt Court is always ſuppoſed to be the wiſeſt; the Commons of England in Parliament are ſuppos'd to be a greater and a wiſer Body than a Grand Jury of any one County. The Peers, who are the Judges in that Court, are ſuppoſed to be the wiſeſt Judges, as the Commons the wiſeſt Inqueſt. Will the Law of England now ſuffer an Examination, Impeachment and Proſecution for Treaſon, to be taken out of the hands of the greateſt and wiſeſt Inqueſt in England? And will the Law of England ſuffer the Judicature upon this Proſecution to be taken out of the hands of the wiſeſt and greateſt Judicature, and put it into the power of a ſmaller number of Judges, or of an inferiour Jury? I do think it does not ſtand, my Lord, with the Wiſdom of the Law, or of the Conſtitution of the Government.

Another thing is this, my Lord, the common Argument in any extraordinary Caſe, there is no Precedent for this way of proceeding; 'tis my Lord Coke's Argument in his Comment upon Littleton, fol. 108. and in the 4th Inſt. fol. 17. in his Comment upon the High Court of Parliament. And he takes occaſion to ſpeak it upon the account of that Precedent, the Caſe of the Indictment againſt the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and of that againſt Mr. Plowden, and he ſays this was never practiſed before; therefore it ought not to be: So he infers, and puts a black Mark upon it, by ſaying 'tis a dangerous Attempt for inferiour Courts to alter or meddle with the Law of Parliaments; for the Words I refer myſelf to the Book, I dare not venture to repeat them upon my Memory. So in this caſe, in regard that it never was done from the beginning of the World till now, the 33d Year of this King, I may ſay, it being without Precedent, there is no Law for it.

My Lord, there is another Miſchief that will certainly follow upon this, and that too runs upon the Compariſon of an Appeal and of an Indictment. In the Caſe of an Indictment 'tis in the power of the Prince to pardon that Indictment, to pardon the Puniſhment, and to pardon the Offence; but in the caſe of an Impeachment, I take it to be otherwiſe, as 'tis in the Caſe of an Appeal. And, my Lord, if your Lordſhip will take this Caſe out of the power of the Parliament, and bring it into this Court, where the Offence may be pardoned, you do by that means ſubject that Offence, and that Method of Proceedings, which would make it, without conſent of the Party proſecuting, not pardonable by Law, to a Pardon: and this may be of dangerous Conſequence to the Publick, that Crimes that are heinous and great in themſelves, mighty bulky Crimes, fit for the Conſideration of a Parliament, be they never ſo great, never ſo dangerous to the Government, yet ſhould by giving this Court a Juriſdiction, and poſſeſſing it of theſe Cauſes, expoſe them to the Will of the Prince; and ſo thoſe Crimes which are impardonable by Methods of Proceedings in Parliament, would become pardonable by Proſecution in this Court.

Now, my Lord, for my Authority, that Impeachments are not pardonable, I would only hint a little to compare it to the Caſe of an Appeal, as Penryn and Corbett's Caſe in 3 Croke, Hill. 38. Eliz. fol. 464. There was an Appeal of Murder; upon which he is found guilty of Manſlaughter, and not guilty of the Murder. Then there was a Pardon pleaded of the Burning in the Hand, or of the Puniſhment: it is not plain in the Book whether the Pardon was after the Verdict or before (that I can't be clear in) but however there was a Queſtion whether the Queen could pardon the Burning in the Hand; however it was there allowed, but there was an Exception. My Lord Coke, who was then Attorney-General, took, that the King could not pardon, if it had been an Appeal of Homicide; and he concurr'd with the Court in that Opinion. But that Appeal being for Murder, and the Verdict of Manſlaughter, they paſſed over the Queſtion, for this Reaſon that I have mentioned, That the Appeal was not for Manſlaughter, it was for Murder; and if he had been found guilty of the Murder, it was not in the power of the King to pardon him, it being at the Suit of the Party: So the Opinion of that Book is, and of the then Attorney-General.

Thus I have ſtated the thing, and the Conſequences of it, and it is not fit for me to dwell upon it: You will conſider of it, I am ſure.

Another thing I would ſay, is this: If your Lordſhip ſhould meddle with this way of Proceeding, it will invert the Law in another thing; for 'tis a Principle with us, That no Man's Life is to be put twice in danger for one and the ſame thing. I will then put the Caſe thus: If your Lordſhip ſhould proceed upon this Indictment, and this Perſon ſhould be acquitted upon it, I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment whether that Acquittal will bind the Lords in Parliament; if that will not bind them, but they may ſtill proceed on the Impeachment, then you invade that common Right which every Engliſhman by the Law ought to have preſerved to him, that no Perſon ought twice to be brought in queſtion for one and the ſame thing.

And ſo, my Lord, you make a Man to run the riſque of his Life twice, by indicting him in this Court, where tho he be acquitted, he may be called to an account again, if the Law be ſo. And if the Lords in Parliament ſhould be opinion, for they are the Judges of that Caſe, that the Acquittal will not be binding to them, then a Man's Life is brought in queſtion twice upon the ſame account.

My Lord, I now come to this, the Time, how unſeaſonable a thing it is, and how dangerous to the Government: I take it to be a critical thing now at this time to make ſuch Attempts as theſe are. There are Lords now that lie under Impeachments of Treaſon, the higheſt Treaſon, I think, that ever was contrived; and upon this Impeachment one Lord hath been convicted and executed. Suppoſe upon the Diſſolution of that Parliament that impeach'd the late Lord Stafford, there had been an Indictment againſt him for one and the ſame Treaſon: and by the ſame reaſon that this Court may proceed, his Majeſty may appoint a High Steward to try by a Jury of Peers. For the Court held before the High Steward, is as much a Court as any Court in the Kingdom, except that of Parliament. I ſay, ſuppoſe the King had appointed an High Steward, and that Lord High Steward had proceeded againſt my Lord Stafford, I think my Lord Stafford had been alive at this day. For in the caſe of Treaſon your Lordſhip knows there muſt be two Witneſſes; and I am ſure there came in freſh Teſtimony againſt my Lord Stafford after the ſecond Parliament after the Impeachment. I appeal to thoſe noble Lords that are here, if it were not ſo; and had it not been for that freſh Teſtimony that came in afterwards, poſſibly my Lord Stafford might have been alive at this time. And the Lords in Parliament, as I obſerv'd in the beginning, when they find an high Crime before them, when they find ſuch a general contagious Deſign to ſubvert the Government, and yet they cannot come to cut off the principal Agents in this Deſign, becauſe perhaps there may not be two Witneſſes in ſtrictneſs of the Law at the firſt, 'tis the Wiſdom of a Parliament to deliberate and to take time. The good Queen who was us'd to ſay, Truth was the Daughter of Time, and Time would produce Truth, Veritas filia temporis. If then there had been any ſuch haſty Proceedings, as in this Caſe, I doubt my Lord Stafford had been now alive. Now then for theſe Lords that are now in the Tower, if your Lordſhips do go on in this way, do you not open ſuch a Gap as may be a ground to deliver them by the ſame Juſtice (I ſpeak it under Correction here, and I only offer it to your Judgment, for I have not had many Hours to conſider of it; but your Lordſhip will think well of it before you give any Judgment; by the ſame Juſtice) the other Lords may be try'd by another Court? This I offer in point of Reaſon, that this Proceeding will be very hard, and is an imprudent thing, if not an illegal Proceeding. My Lord, I am ſure it will have this Effect, it will ſtir up a Queſtion between the Juriſdiction of this Court and the Court of Parliament: for in all probability, if this Perſon ſhould be acquitted, the Commons and the Lords too will look into it. They are a Court that make a Survey of the Proceedings of all other Courts; and they will examine this Proceeding, or at leaſt may do. And if he be found guilty, here is the Power of the Commons in Impeaching, and the Juriſdiction of the Lords in Tryal and Judgment, taken away by an inferior Court to them, and ſo ſtir a Queſtion between this Court and that higheſt of Courts, the Parliament. And what will be the Conſequence of that, the Judgment of that Queſtion will be in the ſuperior Court, for there is no middle Court between this Court and the Parliament to judge of it: therefore I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips.

Theſe are the things which I offer to your Lordſhip in point of Reaſon, whereof ſome go to the Prudence of the thing, ſome to the Reaſon, and ſome to the ill Conſequences that may happen upon it, and I think many to the Illegality of the Act. And now this being ſaid in the general, I come to the particular Exceptions made by Mr. Attorney as to the Form of our Plea.

He was pleas'd to ſay, that this Plea was a plain frivolous Plea, which is his Exception in general; and he gave you three Reaſons for it at firſt, and does now inſiſt upon the ſame for Subſtance.

One was this, and he inſiſted upon it at this time, This Plea does not ſet forth any Record of an Impeachment, nor the particular Matter of it, ſo as this Court may judge of the Reaſon of it; and he compares it to the Caſe of a Plea of auter foitz acquit. If a Man hath been indicted and acquitted, he may plead it in another Court that hath Juriſdiction of the Cauſe, if he be again indicted for the ſame Matter: But, my Lord, firſt of all I take this Plea to be well pleaded in form; and in the ſecond place, if there be any Informality or Defect (which I do not take it that there is, but if there were any ſuch thing) I take it 'tis of another conſideration, which the Court will deliberate before they give their Judgment on.

But I ſay in the firſt place, I take it to be a very good Plea, and that it is good according to the Pleading of auter foitz acquit. In pleading of a general Act of Parliament, we need not ſet forth the whole Act, but refer to the Record; and that will depend upon the Method of Impeachments in Parliament, which I am of opinion, being the general Law of Parliaments, this Court ought to take cognizance of. In the Caſe of auter foitz acquit, there is firſt an Indictment, Proceeding of the Court upon the Plea, a fair Tryal, and a fair Acquittal; and a Record of all this Matter. If now this Perſon come to be indicted again for the ſame Offence, there is a Record for him to plead, that will ſhew forth the whole Matter; and if he does not plead that Record, 'tis his own Default. But in this Caſe here is no ſuch Record to plead, and there is the Miſtake upon which Mr. Attorney hath gone all along. And you muſt in this Caſe be governed by the Rules and Methods of Parliament, which is this; the Commons, in the name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, impeach ſuch a Perſon, and they bring up this Impeachment to the Lords in general, and there they have liberty to preſent Articles in due time, after due Conſideration, which ought not to be done haſtily. All this is no Record, ſuch as may be had in the Caſe of auter foitz acquit: for firſt, the Impeachment of the Commons is no Record; when 'tis brought up to the Lords, there is only an Entry into the Journal for the Lords, that ſuch a day ſuch a Perſon came from the Houſe of Commons, and impeach'd ſuch a one. And you are not to expect the ſame ſtrict Method, and Form of Proceeding, as in other Courts, the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, or inferior Courts. Your Lordſhip in this Caſe muſt be governed by ſuch Proceeding as is in Parliament, and muſt take it as it is; and we have ſaid enough, and as much as can be be in our Case. We have not indeed set forth an Indictment, a Plea, a Venire facias, &c. for there is no such Proceeding in Parliament; but there was an Impeachment by the Commons, in the name of themselves and of all the Commons of England, before the Lords, that it is in pleno robore & effectu, and that it was secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti, prout patet inde inter Recorda remanen. &c. And here is enough. For when we refer you to a Record, that is as much as if we had set forth the Record itself; for we tell you there is such a Record, and we point you to the Place where you may find it. So we take it; 'tis a very full Plea; and if not, 'tis as much as any Man can plead in such a Case, tho it be not pleaded particularly.

And, my Lord, that your Lordship is to judge in this Case according to the Methods of Parliament, I depend upon the Authority of my Lord Coke; I will repeat you some of his Words: Speaking of the Law of Parliaments, he says, and he borrowed it out of Fleta, That this High Court of Parliament propriis suis Legibus,

Et ista lex ab omnibus quærenda, a multis ignorata, & a paucis cognita. But he tells you, and certainly he says true in it, Whoever will be learned in the Law of Parliaments, must repair to the Rolls of Parliament; and give me leave to cite his Opinion, which I hope may be of great weight with this Court: It is in the fourth Institutes, fol. 15. he says, For any thing mov'd or done in the House of Commons, it ought to be determined, adjudged and discussed by the Course of Parliament, not by the Civil Law, nor yet the Common Laws of this Realm, used in more inferiour Courts, which was declared so to be secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti, concerning the Peers, and the like, pari ratione, for the Commons; and that stops this Court in our Case: for so it is said in this Plea, which is the Matter you are to be governed by, that it is secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti. He tells you further, there is no notice to be taken of any thing said or done in the House of Commons, but by the Report of that House, and every Member thereof hath a judicial Place; he takes it out of Henry VII. and so the Book is expressly. And he goes on; this is the reason that Judges ought not to give any Opinion of Matters of Parliament; because it is not to be decided by the Common Laws, but secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti. So he tells you, you are bound by the Methods of Parliament; and I need not press the thing much after his Authority, for he was learned in Parliament-Matters.

But I would crave leave to mention a Case that was lately in this Court, and that was the Case of my Lord of Shaftesbury, who was brought by Habeas-Corpus to this Court, and upon that Habeas-Corpus it was thus returned, That he was committed by Order of the Lords in Parliament, there to remain during the Pleasure of the King, and of the House of Lords; and this for an high Contempt committed in that House. Upon this Return we insisted that my Lord might be bail'd, because it was uncertain, the Pleasure of the King, or the House of Lords; and upon reading the Order, there is no Crime expressed, but only in general for an high Contempt. I speak it not for the particular Case's sake, but to apply the Reason of it to our Case; the Reason then given by the Judges, Mr. Justice Jones will please to remember it, (for it was particularly declared by him) why they could not bail my Lord, was this; he was pleased to say, We in this Court take notice of the Court of Exchequer, and other Courts in Westminster-Hall; and it would be strange, if we should not take notice of the Course of Parliament, and House of Lords. And if you are bound so to do in other Cases, you are bound to do so in this And if without pleading you take notice of the Course of those Courts, you will also take notice of the Law of Parliaments, and Customs of Parliaments. And (that I may make use of it to our purpose in this Case) we need not particularly say, secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti in hoc, instancing in this, and that, and t'other particular: but the Court is to look into it, without my pointing to the particular Law of Parliament. So that, my Lord, here is ground enough before the Court, and I know the Court will look into it before they give Judgment.

The second Exception is this, That it is not said in the Body of the Plea, that Fitz-Harris is impeached for this Treason, but it comes in only in the Averment. Now, my Lord, as to that we must pursue the Impeachment as it is in the Lords Journal. 'Tis for Treason generally there, and 'tis said to be secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti, which goes to all, and there is a Record of it among the Records of Parliament, and Mr. Attorney hath confessed it by the Demurrer.

And that this is the same Treason we do aver in Fact, which also is confessed by the Demurrer; and your Lordship will see by the Records and Forms of Entries in Parliament, (that I may not repeat things over and over again) that this is the Course and Method of Parliaments.

Mr. Attorney hath fancied an Exception of Grammar, an Adjective for a Substantive, but I take it to be as well as any Man can plead in this Case. For what says the Prisoner? The Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses in Parliament assembled, did impeach me, which Impeachment is still in force before the Lords. I take it to be as plain as can be. If they did impeach me, then there was an Impeachment; it can bear no other Sense.

My Lord, another Exception, and which was thought a strong one the other day, and strongly urged, is, That the King may chuse his Court, and they compared it with the other Courts: but there is the mistake that runs all along in this Case. 'Tis no doubt the King may chuse his Court for his own Action and Suit; but the Impeachment is an Impeachment of the Commons, and their Suit is to be tried no where else but in Parliament. And the Case that was the other day cited by Mr. Attorney, for this purpose, is true of the Person that was arraigned for Treason, and had been indicted and arraigned in Ireland, and he may be arraigned and tried here, there is no Question of it; but to say, therefore, that this is a Consequence from that Rule, that therefore he will chuse whether he will proceed in Parliament upon the Commons Impeachment, and put a stop to the Proceeding of the Parliament, by proceeding in this Court, I take to be a great non sequitur.

My Lord, I have offered these Reasons, as to the Form of the Plea to maintain it. Now as to the Precedents, I would a little speak what hath been done in the like Case, where this Court hath taken hold of Causes, and the Prosecution of the Court hath been stop'd by Pleas to the Jurisdiction, and what hath been done upon those

Pleas,

Pleas. What doom they have had, I will hint ſome of them to you.

There was a Caſe mentioned by your Lordſhip the other day, the Biſhop of Wincheſter's Caſe, 3 Ed. III. I dare not ſay I have looked upon the Parliament-Roll, but my Lord Coke tells us, he hath recited the Record, de verbo in verbum: in the 2d Inſtitute, Fol. 15. there are all the Proceedings. It was not an Indictment, for my Lord Coke contradicts that, and ſays, it was a Declaration; there the Record at large ſets forth, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter was attached to anſwer the King; for that whereas at a Parliament held at Sarum, it was ordained, per ipſum Regem ne quis ad dom. Parliament. ſummonitus ab eodem recederet ſine licentia Regis. And that this Biſhop in contempt of the King, receſſit, without leave of the King; I think, 'tis rather an Action than a Criminal proceeding: What ſays the Biſhop to this? He comes and ſays, ſi quis deliquerit erga Dominum Regem in Parliamento aliquo, in Parliamento debet corrigi & emendari, & non alibi in minore Curia quam in Parliamento, &c. What becomes of this Plea? 'Tis ſtrange there ſhould be ſuch an Inhibition, that no Man ſhould depart without leave of the King, and the Biſhop be puniſhed for it; we do not find any Judgment was given, nor would they venture to do it. My Lord Coke hath a Mark upon it; for this very reaſon, it looked as if there was a deſign to weaken the Parliaments, by bringing their Proceedings into Weſtminſter-Hall, but they would not do it, they would give no Judgment for the King, but for ought appears the Plea ſtood.

Then there is the other Caſe of Mr. Plowden, and many more in primo & ſecundo Phil. & Mar. where a great many of them, ſome whereof were Burgeſſes, and they ſubmitted, but he did not. The Information there is this, that theſe Perſons were ſummoned to the Parliament, and departed from thence, without the leave of the King and Queen, tho it was prohibited by them that any ſhould depart: moſt of them ſubmit to a Fine; and if it had reſted there, it might have turned to the prejudice of the Commons as an example.

But Mr. Plowden, he pleads as one that underſtood himſelf, and the Power of Parliaments, and their Proceedings very well, and conſiders the time to have pleaded in: Says he, I continued in the Parliament from the beginning to the end of the Parliament, but he relies not there; but he brings a Traverſe full of pregnancy, and if our Plea be faulty, theirs was 100 times as faulty, abſque hoc, That he the ſaid Edmond Plowden, the ſaid day and year, during the ſaid Parliament, without Licence of the ſaid King and Queen, and the Court aforeſaid, did contemptuouſly depart, in contempt of the ſaid King and Queen, and their Commandment and Inhibition, and to the great detriment of the Common-Weal and State of this Kingdom, &c. All theſe things he pleads, which your Lordſhip knows to be a very ill Traverſe; and yet this Caſe continued all the time of that Queen, and the Court would never give Judgment in it. This was in primo & ſecundo, and yet it appearing upon the face of the Information, that it was a Caſe that concerned the Commons, the Court would not give Judgment for or againſt the Commons as long as the King and Queen lived.

There is a later Caſe, and that is Elliot's Caſe, 5 Car. There is an Information againſt my Lord Hollis, Sir John Elliot, and many more; and there is a Plea put in to the Juriſdiction of the Court; I have a Copy of my Lord Hollis's Plea, and 'tis in a manner as faulty as Plowden's Plea: but the Court in that Caſe does go not upon the Inſufficiency of the Plea, but gives Judgment generally that this Court had a Juriſdiction; the Aſſault happened in Parliament, and the Words were ſpoken there; and upon the Demurrer, they gave Judgment upon the whole Matter. What became of that Judgment? We know very well, it was reverſed, 19 of this King; and pray obſerve the Proceedings in the Reverſal of that Judgment. Judgment was given againſt my Lord Hollis and the reſt of the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, tho there was no proſpect of a Parliament, yet they were obſtinate and would not plead: for they thought the Judgment to be a very hard Judgment, and this being a Plea in abatement, Judgment was given for want of a Plea over. It may fall out in this Caſe, that this Perſon may be obſtinate, and not plead over, if you ſhould give your Judgment againſt this Plea. In Elliot's Caſe they were fined ſeverely, and they continued under this Judgment in Priſon, and in Execution for the Fine a great while; and they were delivered, by what I cannot indeed juſtify in all its Proceedings, I mean the long Parliament: but what was done in 19 of this King, I think is good Authority, which none can ſay but was a Parliament as uſeful to the King and Kingdom as ever could be. In that Parliament the Commons examined this Judgment, I ſpeak becauſe I have it in my printed Book; 'tis in Croke Car. I confeſs, 'tis not in the firſt Impreſſion, but it is in the 2d Edition that I have, and theſe are the Expreſſions in it.

L. C. J. What Caſe is that?

Mr. Williams. 'Tis in Croke, Car. but the Reverſal was in 19 of this King.

L. C. J. Was the Judgment given, do you ſay, 19 of this King? Can a Caſe of that time be reported in Croke?

Mr. Williams. I don't ſay ſo abſurd a thing. If your Lordſhip will have patience to hear me, I'll tell you what I ſay. My Book, which is the 2d Impreſſion of Croke, reflecting upon that Caſe in 5 Caroli, does publiſh the Votes of the Houſe of Commons about, and the Reverſal of the Judgment, in the 19th of this King. There the Proceeding is this; Information is given to the Houſe of Commons, that there was ſuch a Caſe publiſhed, which did derogate much from the Privilege of Parliament, invading the Liberty of Speech; and the Houſe of Commons conſidering the Conſequence, ordered the Book to be ſent for and read, and taken into Conſideration and debated; and upon Debate, the Houſe came to this Reſolution, That the Judgment againſt Elliot and others is an illegal Judgment, and againſt the Freedom and Liberty of Speech: and this Vote they ſend up to the Lords, where 'tis confirmed and reſolved in Agreement with the Vote of the Commons: And by the way, in anſwer to a Paper that is commonly ſpread about by the name of the Obſervator. I ſay, the Commons come to a Reſolution, and paſs a Vote which is not indeed a Law, and when they have done that, they may tranſmit their Opinions to the Lords, and deſire them to concur; then the Lords and Commons have a Conference upon it, and at the Conference the Commons Reaſons are delivered, which the Lords take up with them to their Houſe, and debate them.

them. Then they come to a Reſolution to agree with the Commons. Afterwards, upon this Reſolution of both Houſes they go regularly to work, by Writ of Error to reverſe the Judgment. And if it ſhould fall out in this Caſe, that your Lordſhip ſhould give Judgment againſt the Plea, and this Perſon ſhould be obſtinate, and not plead over, and thereupon your Lordſhip give Judgment of Death upon him; it may come to be a very hard Caſe, if a Writ of Error ſhould be brought in Parliament, to reverſe this Judgment, and it ſhould be reverſed when the Party is dead. Therefore it will be of great conſequence in that particular.

My Lord, I'll mind you of one old Caſe, it was 20 Ric. II. A Perſon there preſents a Petition to the Commons in Parliament; and it ſeems there was ſomething ſuggeſted in the Petition, which did amount to High-Treaſon, as there may be ſome Petition or ſome Complaint againſt a great Miniſter that may contain an Inſinuation, as it were of High-Treaſon; he was indicted out of Parliament for High-Treaſon, and was found Guilty, and by the Grace of the Prince he was pardoned: but becauſe the Commons would not lie under that Precedent of an Invaſion of their Privilege, tho he was a Perſon without doors that prepared the Petition, and no more hurt done to him but the Proſecution; he being pardoned, the Judgment was voided.

L. C. J. Where is that Authority?

Mr. Williams. 20 Ric. II. Ro. Parl. 12. And you will find it in the Argument of Selden's Caſe, publiſhed in Ruſhworth's Collections, Fol. 47. and 48.

And now my Lord, I have done with the Subſtance of the Caſe, with my Reaſons for the Matter and for the Form. In this Caſe here is the Life of a Perſon before you, here is the Right of the Commons to impeach in Parliament before you, here is the Judicature of the Lords to determine that Impeachment before you; here is the Method and Proceedings of Parliament before you, and how far you will lay your hands upon this Caſe, thus circumſtantiated, we muſt ſubmit to you; but I hope you will proceed no further on the Indictment.

L. C. J. Pray, Gentlemen, let us a little direct you not to ſpend our time about that which is not to the purpoſe, or that is not in the Caſe; here is nothing of the Commons Right to impeach in Parliament before us, nor of the Lords Juriſdiction, nor the Methods of Parliament in this Caſe: they are things quite foreign to the Caſe and the matter in hand, which is, whether this Plea as thus pleaded, be ſufficient to protect the Priſoner from being queſtioned in this Court, for the Treaſonable Matter in this Indictment before us. Therefore you ought not to ſpend time in things that are not before us to be conſidered, being out of the Caſe: for we have nothing to do with any Privilege of Parliament, or of either of the Houſes here at this time.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And Gentlemen, there is nothing at all here of any Fact done in Parliament that can be inſiſted on here, nor is there any complaint againſt Mr. Fitz-Harris for any thing he hath done in Parliament. All Mr. Williams's Precedents run to that, but this is for a thing done without doors.

L. C. J. We ſpeak to you to come to the point, which is the duty of all Courts to keep Counſel to the points before them. The ſole matter before us is, whether this be a good Plea to ouſte this Court of a Juriſdiction, which otherwiſe unqueſtionably we have of this matter.

Mr. Williams. 'Tis a hard matter for the Bar to anſwer the Bench, my Lord.

Sir Fran. Wining. My Lord, I ſhall purſue your Direction as well as my Underſtanding will give me leave, and ſave your time as much as I can; but the Court having aſſigned us of Counſel, you will give us leave to uſe our Diſcretion, keeping as near as we can to the points of the Caſe, and to the pleading. But if upon the reaſoning of this Caſe, other Parliament-Caſes fall in, I hope you will give me leave to cite them for maintaining our Plea. The Plea here is to the Juriſdiction, and conſiſts of two Parts First, Matter of Record, which is that an Impeachment is depending in the Houſe of Lords (for ſo it muſt be taken upon the pleading, as I ſhall manifeſtly prove:) The ſecond is Matter in pais (viz.) the Averment, that the Impeachment and Indictment are for one and the ſame Treaſon; and the Plea is made up of theſe two Parts, together with an Averment, that the Perſon is the ſame. The King's Attorney hath been pleaſed to demur generally to us, and I am ſure that if our Plea be well and formally pleaded, all the Matter of fact is confeſſed by the Demurrer.

Mr. Attorney did to my apprehenſion make but one Objection the other day, and he ſtill inſiſts upon it, that here is a Record too generally pleaded, and they compare it to the common Caſe of an auter foitz acquit, upon another Indictment; but I hope to make it evidently appear, that it is in no ſort a parallel Caſe. The matter which I conceive is confeſſed by the Demurrer, is that there is an Impeachment by the Commons of England of High-Treaſon againſt Fitz-Harris lodged in the Houſe of Lords, ſecundum Legem & conſuetudinem Parliamenti: And that the Treaſon for which he was impeached, is the ſame Treaſon contained in the Indictment, to the which the Priſoner hath now pleaded. Upon this Matter of fact ſo agreed, the general Queſtion is,

Whether an Impeachment for Treaſon, by the Houſe of Commons, and ſtill depending, be a ſufficient matter to ouſte the Court from proceeding upon an Indictment for the ſame Offence. My Method will be ſhortly to ſpeak to theſe things.

L. C. J. Pray let us give you ſome Direction; that is not the Queſtion, nor can come in queſtion in the Caſe: you miſtake the points of the Caſe.

Sir Fran. Wining. Why, my Lord?

L. C. J. The Queſtion is, whether you have pleaded ſufficient matter here to out us of our Juriſdiction. It is to no purpoſe to put Queſtions in the Caſe, that are not in it.

Sir Fran. Wining. My Lord, I know the Caſe is very nice and tender on all ſides, and therefore may very well bear an Interruption; however I expreſs my ſelf, my meaning is the ſame with your Lordſhips. The Method that I ſhall proceed in, will be this; I will ſuppoſe the Caſe before you had been of an Impeachment, containing the ſpecial Treaſon for which he is now indicted. I will ſhew in the next place, that as it is now pleaded, 'tis as available as if the Impeachment in the Houſe of Lords had mentioned the particular Treaſon. I ſhall then give ſome Reaſons why it is ſo, and mention one or two Precedents that have not yet been cited. Two of the King's Counſel did agree, that they would not make a doubt of the Plea,

Plea, if there had been a particular Impeachment; and therefore I would, by conſidering what would be the reaſon of that Caſe, apply it particularly to the preſent Caſe. The Houſe of Lords is a Superior Court to this; and is agreed to be the higheſt Court of Record in the Kingdom, Plowden 389. Co. Litt. 109, 110. 9 Co. in Præfat. And then I am within the common Rule of Pleading, according to the differences taken in Sparrie's Caſe, 5. Co. 61, and 62. That a Suit firſt commenced in an Inferior Court, cannot ſtop a Suit in a Superior Court, tho ſubſequent; but a Suit in a Superior Court, may be pleaded to ſtop the proceedings of one that is Inferior. And tho it may be objected here, that the Parliament is determined and diſſolved, and ſo there would be a failure of Juſtice, yet this Objection is of no force; for if once the Suit be well commenced in the Superior Court, it cannot after go down to the Inferior. And what is begun in one Parliament may be determined in another; ſo is the Caſe 4 Edward III. n. 16. of the Lord Berkeley, and thoſe that were accuſed for the Death of Edward II. And tho it was objected there, as hath been here, that by this means there might be a ſtop of Juſtice, by the Diſſolution of the Parliament; yet the ſhort and true Anſwer is, That it is in Law to be preſumed Parliaments will be called frequently, to conſider of the buſineſs of the Kingdom, and redreſs Grievances, acording to the ſeveral Statutes made for that purpoſe, 4 Ed. III. cap. 14. 36 Ed. III. cap. 10. I ſhall labour this no farther, but taking it as the common Rule of pleading, that a Record in a Superior Court may be pleaded to ſtop a proceeding in an Inferior; I ſhall come to prove that this Record is well pleaded, and could not be otherwiſe, unleſs Mr. Attorney would have had us plead what is falſe, this being the truth of the Caſe. For the Commons did impeach Mr. Fitz-Haris generally of Treaſon, as 'tis the Courſe of Parliaments for them to do; and in our very Plea, we alledge, that he was impeached ſecundum legem & conſuetudinem Parliamenti; and ſo Mr. Attorney hath confeſſed by the Demurrer: and if they may prefer an Impeachment in general, according to the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament; why then ſo far it muſt be allowed, that we have pleaded well that he was impeached of Treaſon. It is very true, my Lord, if a Man will plead generally that he was indicted of High Treaſon, it would be ill, becauſe the Court cannot take it otherwiſe than he has pleaded it; and ſuch a general Indictment would be altogether void, and therefore no Averment could make it good, or ſupply that Generality and Uncertainty.

But an Impeachment generally for Treaſon, is good and warranted by the Law and Courſe of Parliament, and ſo confeſs'd by the Demurrer. And ſo your Lordſhip will take it to be, and will give Credit, that all is regular in the Proceedings of that High Court. You will preſume, even in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts (as my Lord Coke ſays, in the 4th Report) that all things are rightly done, when they have a Juriſdiction; a fortiori you will believe the greateſt Court in the Kingdom does proceed regularly. My Lord Coke in the 4th Inſt. Fol. 14. and 15. does ſay what the Law and Courſe of Parliament is, the Judges will never intermeddle with. They always leave it to the Parliament, who are the Superior Judges, and are to determine the matters before them. For they take notice, that the Courſe of a Court, is the Law of a Court, as 'tis in Lane's Caſe in the 2d Report, in the Caſe of the Exchequer. And therefore if a general Impeachment is ſecundum legem & conſuetudinem, which is confeſſed by the Demurrer in this Caſe, then you muſt take it for granted, that the Parliament proceed rightly, and that ſuch a general Impeachment is ſufficient in Law. There is a famous Caſe that ſtrengthens what I ſay, 11 Ri. II. di. Rot. Parl. par. 2. the Caſe of the Lords Appellants. You will find it alſo cited in Ruſhworth's Col. Part 1. in the Appendix, Fol. 51: Treſilian and others were appealed againſt for Treaſon, and both the Judges of the Common and of the Civil Law were by direction of the King called to adviſe of that matter. And they did all declare, that the Proceedings in that Caſe were neither agreeable to Common Law, nor Civil Law. But the Lords in Parliament ſaid, it did not belong to the Judges of the Common Law, or Civil Law to guide them; but that they ought to proceed according to the Courſe and Law of Parliaments, (which are the words of our Plea) and that therefore no Opinion of theirs ſhould out them of their Juriſdiction, or alter the Courſe and Method of their Proceedings. My Lord, this Caſe is very remarkable, but I will go a little further; the Judges in all Ages have been ſo far from taking upon them to judge of the Laws and Cuſtoms of Parliament, that they have denied to anſwer when their Advice has been demanded, and inſiſted upon it, that they were not proper Judges of ſuch Matters, as in 31 Hen. VI. Rot. Par. N. 26. For there among other things the Judges were demanded, whether the Speaker of the Houſe, during the Adjournment of Parliament, might be arreſted: they deſired to be excuſed from giving any Opinion; for ſaid they, in this great matter they ought not to interpoſe, it being a matter of Parliament.

In the great Council primo & ſecundo Jacobi, about the Union of both Kingdoms, the Judges refuſed to give their Opinions upon ſeveral Queſtions put to them; deſiring to be excuſed, for that ſuch things did not belong to them, but were matters fit for Parliament only. My meaning is, to infer from hence, that ſince it is pleaded here to be according to the Law and Courſe of Parliaments, and Mr. Attorney hath acknowledged it, that now your Lordſhip is foreclоſed from further meddling with this Caſe, it appearing upon Record to be a matter whereof you cannot judge.

But the Objection is, that admit the Impeachment ſhould be taken to be according to the courſe of Parliament, yet it is ſo general, that the Court cannot judge upon it: I anſwer, that 'tis evident the Impeachment was not for nothing, 'tis moſt certainly to be preſumed, that ſuch a Body of Men as the Houſe of Commons would not impeach a Man for no Crime. Fitz-Haris avers by his Plea, that it was for the ſame Treaſon, for which the Jury have found this Bill againſt him. Now this Averment makes the matter as clear to the Court, as if the Impeachment had mentioned the particular Treaſon.

Every day's Experience ſhews that Averments, which are conſiſtent with the Record, are good, and are of neceſſity to clear the Fact to the Court; ſo that the Judges may give a Judgment upon it. If the Defendant will plead a Recovery in a formal Action, in bar to an Action of Debt, or other Action; it is not enough for him to ſet out the Record; he muſt aver alſo, that the Cauſes of the Action are the ſame, and that it is the ſame Perſon, ſon, who is mentioned in one Record, and in the other Records; and this ſhews, that the moſt ſpecial and particular are of no uſe without Averments.

My Lord, there is a Caſe that I find directly to this purpoſe, which goes further than the Caſe I did but now put, and that is, 26 Aſſiz. pl. 15. It is alſo mentioned in Stamf. Pla. Cor. 105. Where a Man was indicted for the Murder of J. S. and he pleads a Record of Acquittal, where he was indicted for the Murder of J. N. But he avers, that J. S. in this Indictment, is the ſame Perſon with J. N. in the other Indictment; and that was adjudged a good Plea, and the Party was acquitted, tho the Averment there ſeemed to be a contradiction to the Record. This makes it clear, that if an Averment may conſiſt with the Record, the Law will allow it. In More's Rep. 823. Pl. 1112. the King againſt Howard, it is ſaid, that if an Act of Parliament be certified into Chancery, no Averment lies to ſay this is no Act of Parliament, becauſe the Commons did not aſſent to it; but if it appears in the Body of the Act, that the Commons did not aſſent, as if it was ordained by the King and Lords, and without mentioning any Aſſent of the Commons; there it may be aver'd to be no Act, for this being a matter conſiſtent with the Record, is averrable: And ſo it is agreed in 33 H. VI. Fol. 18. Pilkinton's Caſe.

Now Mr. Attorney has his Election here (as it is in all ſuch Caſes) either to plead Null. tiel Record. and then we muſt have produced it; and if we had fail'd, it had been againſt us, as to the whole Plea. Or if he would not deny the Record (as indeed he could not) he might have taken iſſue upon our Averment, that it was not for one and the ſame Offence; but he has demurred, and thereby confeſſed there is ſuch a Record, and confeſſed the Averment to be true, that he was impeached for the ſame Crime, and that he is the ſame Perſon. And now it is plain to your Lordſhip, that I ſtated the Queſtion right at firſt.

My Lord, I ſhall cite you one Precedent out of Raſt. Ent. Fol. 384, and 385. where a Man was indicted and acquitted before certain Juſtices, and being indicted de novo.——

L. C. J. It is Title Goal-Delivery, is it not?

Sir F. Win. Yes, my Lord, it is. And he pleads, that he was indicted coram aliis Juſticiariis, for the ſame Felony, and upon this Plea the Entry is made, Quia teſtatum eſt hic in Cur. in præfatos Juſticiarios, that the ſaid Party was acquitted of the Felony, in manner and form as he had alledged in his Plea. Therefore 'tis adjudged, that he ſhould be diſcharged and go without delay. My Lord, I do not altogether rely upon this Precedent for Law, but I find it in that Book.

Now, my Lord, I ſhall offer ſome Reaſons in general. Firſt, that when once the Commons in Parliament, in the name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, have lodged an Impeachment againſt any Man, it ſeems to me againſt natural Juſtice, that ever any Commoners ſhould afterwards come to try or judge that Man for that Fact. I ſpeak this, becauſe every Man in England that is a Commoner, is a party to the Accuſation; and ſo we have pleaded by ſuch an Impeachment, a Man is ſubjected to another ſort of Tryal: Magna Charta ſays, that every Man ſhall be tried by his Peers, or by the Law of the Land. And by the Law of the Land, there are ſeveral ſorts of Tryal, ſome by Juries, others not by Juries. This is one of thoſe ſorts where the Tryal is by the Law of the Land, but not by his Peers; for it would be hard that any Man ſhould come to try or to give Judgment upon a Perſon, who hath been his Accuſer before: And in effect hath already given his Judgment, that he is guilty by the Accuſation of him, and ſo ſtands not indifferent. By this means the Tryal by Jury is gone; and the Lords, who are the Peers of the Realm, are Judges in point of Fact, as well as Law. Here is an enormous Offence, againſt which all the Nation cries, for ſo they do in the Impeachment. Then ſays the Law, it is not fit that you ſhould try him, who are Parties, but the Lords are the proper Judges, they ſhall try him per teſtes; and the Commoners may come in as Witneſſes, but not as Judges.

My Lord, another Reaſon is this, that if an Appeal of Death, or any other Appeal were depending before the Statute of 3 H. VII. cap. 1. the King could not proceed upon an Indictment for the ſame Fact, becauſe the King, as the common Parent, does only take care that ſuch Offenders ſhould not go away with Impunity; but the preference was given to the Perſon more particularly concerned, and the King's Indictment muſt ſtay till the year and day were out, to ſee whether they will proceed in their Suits. And ſo ſays my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales, in his Pleas of the Crown, 2442,45. Then a minori ad majus, does the Law ſo regard the Intereſt of the Wife or the Heir, &c. in their Suit, and has it no regard to the Suit of all the Commons of England? For manifeſtly an Impeachment is the Suit of the People, and not the King's Suit.

That's the 2d Reaſon; another Reaſon I ſhall urge, is that which was touched by Mr. Williams. Suppoſe this Man ſhould be tried here and be acquitted; is it to be preſumed that he can plead this Acquittal in bar to the Impeachment before the Lords? My Lord, I believe there is no conſidering Man in England, that has regard either to the Juriſdiction of Parliament, or to the Nature of the Suit, will affirm, that it would be a good Plea; and that he could bar the great Court of the Kingdom from proceeding againſt him, by ſaying he was acquitted by a Jury in Weſtminſter-Hall, after the Suit was firſt well commenced in that Court.

My Lord, I ſay, with reverence to the Court, that ſhould you proceed in this Tryal, it may fall out, that contrary to a fundamental Rule of Law, a Man ſhall be twice put in danger of his Life for one Offence, which by the Law he cannot be; and therefore I urge that as a Reaſon, why you cannot proceed here on this Indictment.

My Lord, I will now mention two or three Precedents, which will prove that this Impeachment is according to the Courſe and Law of Parliaments, tho it may ſeem needleſs, after the King's Learned Counſel have agreed it.

My Lord, I ſhall firſt mention the Caſe of Michael de la Poole, Rot. Par. 18 or 28 H. VI. n. 18. He was a very great Man, and came to the Houſe of Lords voluntarily, and ſaid, there was a Rumour that he was guilty of horrible things.

L. C. J. Where did you take this Caſe, out of Cotton? It is mentioned there: But I have ſeen a Copy of the Roll.

Sir Fran. Win. Yes, my Lord: thereupon the Commons pray he may be committed upon his own Confeſſion, and that the thing being debated in the Houſe, the Lords ſaid we know not what was meant by thoſe Words, horrible things, it may import only Miſdemeanours; if it had been ſaid Treaſon, we had known how to have proceeded thereupon: And thereupon within a few Days after the Commons came and accuſed him of Treaſon. And there 'tis ſaid that the Courſe of Parliament is to find out the Truth by Circumſtances, and ſuch Degrees as the Nature of the thing will bear, and they are not confined to the ſtrict Rules of other Courts. I will not cite any more antient Caſes, tho there are many to be found of general Impeachments; for we are not diſputing what is the Right and Courſe of Impeachments, which is confeſſed, upon the pleading: But we have had ſeveral Caſes of late, the Earl of Clarendon was impeached generally, and the Commons took time to bring in their Articles; and I have had the Experience in three or four Parliaments, wherein we have been pretty well buſied with Impeachments, tho we have had no great Succeſs in them, that tho the Commons may if they pleaſe carry up particular Articles at firſt, yet the Law and Courſe is, for the Lords to receive the general Impeachment, and the Commons ſay that in due time they will bring in their Articles. So it was done in the Caſe of the five Popiſh Lords, ſome particular Member was appointed to go up and impeach them of High-Treaſon in general; and in that Caſe, tho the Parliament was diſſolved before any Articles ſent up, yet afterwards, in the next Parliament, the Articles upon the former Impeachments were ſent up, and received, and my Lord Stafford ſince executed, upon his Conviction upon that Impeachment: yet Indictments were exhibited againſt them, before ever any Impeachment was ſent up by the Commons, and Preparations were made for their Tryals. But from that day to this, there hath been no Attempt to try them upon their Indictments, tho there have been ſeveral Intervals of Parliament.

Our Caſe is ſtronger than that of the Lords; for in the Caſe at the Bar, the firſt Suit was in the Houſe of Lords by the Commons, whilſt in the other Caſe the firſt was the Suit of the King, by Indictment; and yet by a ſubſequent Impeachment that was ſtopped, and the Lords continue yet Priſoners in the Tower. Our time hath been ſo ſhort, that we could not ſee the Copies of Orders, which we might otherwiſe have made uſe of, for maintaining this Plea; we ſent to the Houſe of Lords, but the Officers were out of Town, and we could come at the ſight of nothing there. We have been told the Opinion of the Judges was delivered at Council concerning theſe very Lords, that the Impeachments being lodged in Parliament, no other Proſecution could be againſt them, till the Proſecution of the Commons was determined. So far the Courts below have always been from meddling with the Juriſdiction of Parliament, that even many times in Queſtions upon Acts of Parliament, they have gone up to the Parliament, to know what was meant by it. And I remember it was ſaid by the Court in that Caſe of my Lord of Shaftesbury, where it was agreed by all, that the Commitment was too general, for it was only for a Contempt; whereas the Crime ought particularly to appear in the Warrant, that it being in a Caſe of Commitment, by the Parliament, (at leaſt while that Parliament was continuing) they ought not to meddle with it, nor could they inquire into the Formality of the Warrant.

My Lord, I muſt mention one thing touching the Caſe of my Lord Hollis, which was cited by Mr. Williams, and I have but a word to add: It is in the Appendix to the firſt part of Ruſhworth's Col. and alſo in Coke, Car. fol. 181. It was there pleaded to the Juriſdiction of this Court, that it was a Matter done in Parliament: In our Caſe 'tis pleaded that an Impeachment is depending in Parliament; that was but a Proſecution for a Miſdemeanor, this is a Caſe of High Treaſon. It fell out in that Caſe, the Court here did adjudge, that the Information did lie but upon a Writ of Error; it was agreed by the Lords unanimouſly, that the Judgment was erroneous, and that the Parties ſhould be reſtored to all which they had loſt, by reaſon of it: but if this Man ſhould loſe his Life by your Judgment, what help would there be upon a Writ of Error? The Danger of ſuch a thing requires great Conſideration, and it would be of fatal Conſequence, if the Lords ſhould hereafter adjudge that this Court had no Juriſdiction.

As for Mr. Attorney's Objection to-day, that we have not ſet forth actually, that there was any Impeachment; I do confeſs I was a little ſtartled at it; for the Words of the Plea are, that Edward Fitz-Harris, by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes was impeached, which Impeachment is in force. I do not know how in the World we could have thought of more expreſs Words, than to ſay, he was impeached; and that that Impeachment is in full force, as appears by the Record.

For the other Objection, the other day (for we would mention all, how little ſoever they deſerve an anſwer) that the King may chuſe in what Court he will ſue; it is agreed, when it is at his own Suit: but this is not ſo, but at the Commons Suit, and can be no where elſe proſecuted, than where it now depends. This is the Method and Courſe of Parliaments, we ſay; and that the Method and Courſe of Parliaments is the Law of the Land, your Lordſhip will take notice that it is ſo.

To conclude, as this Plea now ſtands, the Demurrer confeſſing the matter of it, it cannot be over-ruled, without deciding whether the Lords can proceed upon ſuch general Impeachments, and whether the Commons can impeach in ſuch a general Way. We ſubmit the whole to your Judgment: It is a Caſe deſerves great Conſideration, as being of great Weight and Moment; and highly concerns the Juriſdiction of the Lords, the Privileges of the Commons, and the Rights of all the People of England.

Mr. Wallop. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, there are in this Plea three principal Parts upon which it turns, which are expreſly alledged. Firſt, That Fitz-Harris before the Indictment was according to the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament impeached of High-Treaſon, and this I humbly conceive is confeſſed by Mr. Attorney upon the Demurrer. The ſecond thing is, That this Impeachment, be it as it will, general or particular, does remain in full Force and Virtue. This is plainly alledged and demurred to, and ſo confeſſed by Mr. Attorney; for all things well alledged and pleaded, are confeſſed by the Demurrer. The third great Point and Hinge upon which it turns, is this, That the High-Treaſon mentioned in the Indictment, and the High-Treaſon for which he was impeached in the Houſe of Lords, is one and the ſame Treaſon. This we have plainly averred, and this Mr. Attorney hath likewiſe by his Demurrer plainly confeſſed, as we humbly conceive.

For the two former Points there is no difficulty in them, and therefore I ſhall paſs them over. 'Tis this third matter which I take to be the only Point in the Caſe; and if we have well averred it, and can by Law be let into ſuch an Averment: then I hope your Lordſhip and this Court will not pretend to go on in this Caſe. They object, Object, and ſay, becauſe he is impeached of High-Treaſon generally, without naming any particular Treaſon, that cannot be averred to be the ſame, and a Demurrer does never confeſs the Truth of that which by Law cannot be ſaid; but if it may be ſaid, and is ſaid plainly, then the Demurrer confeſſes it.

My Lord, I humbly conceive this matter is well averrable, and we have taken a good Averment, I grant that a repugnant and an impoſſible Averment cannot be taken, as to aver a Horſe to be a Sheep, which is apparently repugnant and impoſſible; and in that Caſe a Demurrer can never confeſs the Truth of that which appears impoſſible to be true. But, my Lord, if there be no Impoſſibility nor Repugnancy, nor Contradiction in the Averment between the matters that are averred to be the ſame, as there is not between that which is but generally expreſſed, and that which is more ſpecially alledged; where all may well ſtand together, and the one includes the other, and needs only ſome farther Explanation; it is not only allowable to aver it, but moſt proper, and in ſuch Caſe only neceſſary. For, quod conſtat clare non debet verificari, in this Caſe it is not neceſſary that it ſhould appear to the Court upon the view of the Indictment and Impeachment, that the matter contained in both, is the ſame; but it is ſufficient, that it be proveable upon an Iſſue to be taken. And ſo much is admitted by the Judges in Sparry's Caſe, Co. 5. Rep. 51. That if there be convenient certainty which may be put in Iſſue, it is ſufficient, and conſequently not neceſſary to appear at the firſt, but upon the event of the Iſſue afterwards to be tried. And if they intend it otherwiſe, I confeſs I underſtand them not. It is true, it muſt appear to the Court, either at the firſt opening, or upon an Iſſue ſubſequent to be found. And, my Lord, if this matter may appear at firſt or at laſt, and the thing is poſſible to be proved, then we are well enough. In Corbet and Barne's Caſe, in the firſt Croke, Fol. 320. A Battery ſuppoſed to be in London, and a Battery ſuppoſed to be in Herefordſhire, were averred to be one and the ſame Battery, which naturally is impoſſible; yet being tranſitory, and therefore ſuppoſable to be done in any County, ſuch an Averment is allowable, tho it ſeemed contradictory, and could not appear to the Court by comparing the ſeveral Declarations to be any way the ſame. And there being a Demurrer for that Cauſe in that Caſe, the Truth of the Averment was ruled to be confeſſed by the Demurrer. And ſo here by the Demurrer, the Truth of the Suggeſtion that the Treaſon in the Impeachment, and the Treaſon in the Indictment is one and the ſame, is confeſſed.

By taking this Averment, we offer them here a fair Iſſue, an Iſſue of Fact triable by a Jury, wherein the Attorney-General might have joined with us, if he had pleaſed; but refuſing that, and having demurred, and thereby confeſſed what we have alledged, it muſt be taken to be true, as if found by a Jury. And, my Lord, That this matter is properly averrable and tryable, I think, 'tis plain; it being a Queſtion of Fact, which is properly tryable by the Country: and if they had taken Iſſue upon that, we might have gone to a Jury, where the matter would have been eaſily proved. For upon Evidence given, the Jury might fairly take into Conſideration the reading of this very numerical Libel ſet forth in the Indictment, and the particular and ſpecial Debates of the Houſe of Commons thereupon. And that upon thoſe very Debates the Houſe voted that Fitz-Harris ſhould be impeached for matters contained in that Libel. And that upon thoſe Votes the Impeachment was carried up to the Lords. This is Evidence ſufficient, that the Houſe of Commons did intend to accuſe him of the ſame Treaſon contained in the Indictment, which proves the Iſſue, that is, that the Treaſon contained in the Impeachment, is the ſame with that contained in the Indictment. Neither is this to put the Intention of the Mind or ſecret Thoughts of the Heart in Iſſue, which is againſt the Rules of Law; but to put them into a way of Proof, which well ſtands with the Rules of Law, which upon the general, or other collateral Iſſue, may well be inquired of by the Jury. As in an Action, quare canem mordacem defendens ſcienter retinuit. Here [Scienter] is not directly iſſuable, but it is proveable, and muſt be proved upon the general Iſſue. So in the preſent Caſe, the Intention of the Commons upon the Iſſue offered by us, and refuſed by the Attorney-General, might, and ought, and would have been proved; and, without doubt, found by the Jury. Neither is this general Impeachment ſuch a notional thing as the other ſide would pretend; but 'tis as if they ſhould ſay, We do charge him to have committed certain Crimes that are Treaſon. Now whether the Crimes they ſay he had committed, and for which they impeached him, are the ſame with thoſe for which he is indicted, is a good and proper Iſſue. And if it appear to the Court to be the ſame, you will certainly your ſelves take off your hands from thoſe Proceedings. This is all I ſhall ſay as to the Averment. And if we can well get over that, I take it, all the reſt is well enough.

But again, they ſay the Impeachment is too general, and no Man ſhall be put to anſwer to ſuch a general Accuſation.

And I ſay ſo too, neither ſhall Fitz-Harris be put to anſwer to it without ſpecial Articles; yet he cannot quaſh the Impeachment for this Cauſe, as he might an Indictment: which ſhews the difference betwixt an Impeachment and an Indictment, which always contains the ſpecial matter, and without which it might be quaſh'd, and made no Record. But here by the Law of Parliament ſuch general Impeachments are held good; and Articles are uſually brought in afterwards, and after thoſe additional Articles, which cannot be in the courſe and way of Indictment; and therefore we muſt take the Impeachment as we find it, and ſince it ſtands againſt us as a Record, tho 'tis general, we may, and muſt plead it in the ſame generality; having no way to make it no Record, as we have in caſe of ſuch a general Indictment.

So then this being an Impeachment according to the Courſe of Parliament; it is well lodged in the Houſe of Lords, where it only ought to be tried, and we muſt plead it as we may, and as we find the Caſe to be. And having averred the Crimes to be the ſame, we have done what we could, and therefore enough.

And that a general Impeachment without Articles is a Bar to any Indictment for the ſame matter, was reſolved by all the Judges, as I am informed, in the Caſe of the Lords in the Tower, who were all indicted for Treaſon, either in the King's-Bench, or before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer. And afterwards [5. Dec. 78.] generally impeached before the Lords in Parliament; and no Articles exhibited till 3. April 79. And yet in the mean time it was reſolved at the Council-Table by all the Judges there attending, that after the general Impeachment, before Articles, they could not be proceeded againſt upon thoſe Indictments, tho the Parliament wherein they were impeached was diſſolved.

And that was a ſtronger Caſe than this of Fitz-Harris: for there the Inferior Court was firſt poſſeſſed of the Cauſe, and yet the general Impeachment cloſed up the hands of the Court. But in this Caſe, the Superior Court the Parliament was firſt poſſeſt of the Cauſe, which cannot be taken out of their hands by the Inferior Court.

There is a farther difference betwixt an Impeachment in Parliament, and an Indictment; that in an Indictment, which is always as particular as Articles upon an Impeachment, you cannot plead auter foitz arraigned, but you muſt plead either auter foitz convict or acquit, as appears in Sir William Wiſhipole's Caſe, Cron. 1. 105. But in an Impeachment in Parliament, the other ſide will acknowledge, that after Articles exhibited, there can be no Proceedings upon an Indictment for the ſame Offence, altho the Defendant in the Impeachment be neither convict, or acquit. Otherwiſe you may bring back all the Lords in the Tower to the King's-Bench to be tried, which Mr. Attorney will not I ſuppoſe attempt.

And it is obſervable in the Caſe of Sir William Wiſhipole, That to avoid the Doubt that the Party there ſhould not be queſtioned, both upon the Coroner's Inqueſt, and the Indictment of Murder; it was ruled by the Court, that the firſt ſhould be quaſh'd as inſufficient: ſo careful were the Judges to avoid double Vexation, in a Caſe, compared with this, of no great import.

I ſhall ſay no more to the Caſe, but only obſerve how ſcrupulous the Judges have been to touch upon a Caſe, where they had the leaſt ſuſpicion of jealouſy that the Parliament had, or pretended to have a Juriſdiction, or were poſſeſſed of the Cauſe. I am ſure I could never get any thing by any Labours of mine in thoſe Caſes. But upon all ſuch Motions they were ſo aware of what might be the Conſequence, that they would always worſhip afar off, and would never come near the Mount, they would ever retire when they came but near the brink of this Gulf.

Now, my Lord, if you retain this Cauſe, in conſequence you charge your ſelves with the Blood of this Man; wherein, if you proceed regularly, and according to Law, all is well. But however, by over-ruling his Plea, you take upon you his Blood one way or other; thro which you muſt wade to come at the Cauſe. And whether it be adviſable to come at it upon theſe terms, I leave it to your Lordſhip's Wiſdom to conſider.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I ſhall not make any long Argument, there hath been ſo much ſaid before me. But I would fain come to the Queſtion if I could; for I muſt confeſs after all, I cannot ſee what the other ſide make the Queſtion. Mr. Attorney was pleaſed to ſay, that both for the Matter and Form he objected againſt our Plea. But if for the Matter it be admitted to me, that an Impeachment in Parliament for the ſame Matter will out this Court of Juriſdiction; I will ſay nothing at all of it, for I apprehend that is not then in queſtion.

L. C. J. No, not at all.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then the Matter ſeems to be agreed, and only the Manner and Form of the Plea are now in queſtion. And for the Manner, they except to it in theſe particulars. Firſt, they ſay, 'tis not alledged that there is any Impeachment upon Record; now I confeſs, Form is a ſubtile Matter in it ſelf, and it is eaſy for any Man that reads other Mens Words and Writings, if he will, to make what Conſtruction he will of them, even Nolumus to be Volumus; but I know the Court will not do ſo. But for an Anſwer to the Objection, I think it is as ſtrongly and cloſely penned as I can tell how to pen any thing, he was impeached, Quæ quidem Impetitio, &c. What can that Quæ quidem ſignify, but the Impeachment that was juſt mentioned before? But what they mean by this, to ſay, this is not the ſame Impeachment, when the Words are poſitive that 'tis the ſame, I muſt confeſs I cannot fathom.

My Lord, there was another thing ſpoken the laſt day, but they have not mentioned it now; if there be any thing ſtirred in it, I hope your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to hear us before you give your Judgment in it, That it was not ſaid to be ſub pede ſigilli; but I know they won't inſiſt upon it, therefore I ſay nothing to that.

But the great Queſtion now is, whether or no this be not too general, the alledging that he was impeached in Parliament, and not ſaying how or for what Crime; tho there be an Averment afterwards, that 'tis for the ſaid Crime? Whether this be not ſo general, as that therefore this Plea ſhould be naught?

Firſt, For this of the Averment, I take it with ſubmiſſion, let the Crimes be never ſo particularly ſpecified in the Record that is pleaded, and in that upon which the Party is brought in Judicature, yet always there muſt be an Averment; and that Averment is ſo much the ſubſtantial part of the Plea, that let the Matter never ſo much appear to be the ſame without an Averment, it would be naught; and it muſt come to be tried per pais, whether the Offence be the ſame or not: for if a Man plead one Indictment for the Murder of J. S. to another Indictment for the Murder of J. S. tho they bear the ſame Name, he muſt aver they are one and the ſame Perſon. For elſe non conſtat to the Court, but there may be two J. S's. Therefore all Averments are ſtill the ſubſtance of the Plea, to bring the Indentity of the matter into Judgment, and are to be tried by the Country: ſo then the Objection to the Generality is not an Objection to the Subſtance, but rather an Objection to the Form on their ſide; becauſe the Subſtance is alledged in the Plea, that it is for the ſame Treaſon: which Subſtance, if Mr. Attorney had thought not fit to have demurred to, but taken Iſſue on, muſt have been tried per pais.

Having thus ſpoken to the Averment, my Lord, let me ſpeak to the general Allegation that he was impeached for Treaſon, and not ſaying particularly what the Fact was.

My Lord, if they admit the Law, that an Impeachment in Parliament does ſuſpend or take away the Juriſdiction of this Court, then they have admitted a great part of the Fact, and then the matter in queſtion will be what Impeachment in Parliament it is that will take away the Juriſdiction of the Court, and there can be be but two ſorts; the one at large, where the whole Offence is ſpecified; the other not at large, but only in general Words, The Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, in the Name of themſelves and of all the Commons of England, do impeach ſuch an one of High-Treaſon.

ſon. Now, my Lord, if ſo be ſuch Impeachment in Parliament be a good Impeachment, then have we, I think, the moſt plain Caſe pleaded that can be, as plain as the Fact, that this is an Impeachment in Parliament; and then this Court is outed of its Juriſdiction.

They that have gone before, have ſaid, which I muſt pray your Lordſhip to remember, that the Court and we are to take notice of the Proceedings in other Courts, as other Courts are bound to take notice of the Proceedings of this; then I would ſuppoſe in other familiar Caſes, there is generally (as 'tis true in Sparry's Caſe) the Writ or the Declaration, which does in all civil Cauſes ſet forth the particularity of the thing in queſtion, yet in ſome Caſes we are ſure it does not do ſo, but the Courſe and Practice of ſome Courts admit general Proceedings. Now whereever that is ſo, the Party cannot mend himſelf by making their Courſe otherwiſe than it is: for he muſt not ſay it is more particular than the Courſe of the Court does make it. Therefore he hath no other way by the Law to bring his matter on, and help himſelf, but by an Averment that 'tis the ſame. I will ſuppoſe a Caſe of ſuch a nature as this; A Man brings an Account in London upon Conceſſit ſolvere, and he does not particularize in the Court any thing what or how his Debt did ariſe; but after he brings another Account or Delivery, a ſpecial Declaration in an Account of Debt: ſhall not I, becauſe the firſt Declaration is in general Words, aver that this is the ſame Matter that he ſued for by the Conceſſit ſolvere, which he now ſues for in this particular Declaration? Or ſuppoſe a Man in this Court does bring an Account for divers Wares and Merchandizes ſold, and does not expreſs any particulars, but that he was indebted, in general words, for Wares ſold; and afterwards he comes and brings another Account, and ſays, it is for ſuch and ſuch Wares; ſo much for Cloth, ſo much for Wine, &c. tho his firſt Declaration be in general, not expreſſing what the Wares were, and the laſt is particular, ſhall not I come and plead in Abatement to the ſecond Declaration, that the firſt and ſecond were for one and the ſame thing? Suppoſe again an Indictment of Barretry be found againſt a Man, which is an Offence that is only general, and hath no particulars alledged in the Indictment; ſhould not a Man that is the ſecond time indicted come and ſay, this is one and the ſame? My Lord, under favour, in all theſe and ſuch like Caſes, the Law muſt be governed by its own Proceedings, and take notice of the Nature of the things depending before the Court. And if ſo be, upon Conſideration of the Nature of the thing, there is as much of certainty ſet forth as the Caſe will admit, and is poſſible to be had, we muſt permit the Party to plead as he can, and help himſelf by the Averment.

Then, my Lord, the Queſtion is, whether an Impeachment generally in Parliament, without particularly ſetting forth for what, be a good Impeachment there or no. If they ſay it is not, then the bottom of the Plea is naught, and all is quite gone; but if they ſay it is, then I have pleaded my matter as it is. For I cannot ſay, that that is particular, or make that particular that is not, and I have done all that is poſſible for me to do in my Caſe. I have pleaded what is in the Record; and as 'tis in the Record, from which my Plea muſt not vary, and I have averred 'tis for the ſame matter, and you have confeſſed it by the Demurrer.

My Lord, I would not intangle the Queſtion, but I muſt confeſs I do not ſee how they can extricate themſelves out of this Dilemma, if they do admit a general Impeachment is a good Impeachment. Then there are freſh Inſtances of this conſiderable in the Caſe, as that which hath been particularized of the Lords in the Tower, and of the Opinion in February of the Judges in their Caſe. For in the beginning of December were thoſe Lords indicted, and after, on the 5th of Dec. the Houſe of Commons taking it into their Conſideration, that there was a Commiſſion going out for an High-Steward, with an intent to bring them to tryal before the Peers; they purpoſely to have the Carriage and Proſecution of this great and horrid Treaſon, and take off the Proſecution upon the Indictment, do impeach the ſame Lords, and there the Impeachment is juſt the ſame as this in our Plea of High-Treaſon; but not of any particular Fact, adding, only of other Crimes and Miſdemeanors, which is as general as can be. Now, my Lord, the Judges did take ſo much notice of it, that tho the Parliament was diſſolved before the particular Articles were carried up to ſet forth the particular Offence; yet in February following (ſome of the Judges are here, and they will rectify me if I be miſtaken) their Opinions being asked about it at the Council-Board, upon the Petition of the Lords, to be either bailed or tried; they were of opinion, that this Impeachment, tho thus general, was ſo depending in Parliament, that they could not be tried. So that I think the Proceedings in Parliament are of that nature, that if you will meddle with what they do, you will take notice of their Method of Proceedings, as you do of other Courts.

Why then, my Lord, if this be ſo, how is it poſſible for us to do better? We have pleaded as our Fact is an Impeachment of High-Treaſon, what would they have had us to do, or wherein is our Fault? What would they have had us ſaid? We were impeached of any High-Treaſon, ſo and ſo particularizing, how can that be? There is no ſuch thing. Then they would have ſaid, Nul. Tiel. Record; and we muſt have been condemned for failing in our Record: then indeed we had been where they would have had us. But having done according to our Fact, if that Fact be ſuch as in Law will out this Court of Juriſdiction, I ſee not how it is poſſible we ſhould plead otherwiſe, or what Anſwer they will give to it.

My Lord, I will meddle as little as I can with what hath been ſaid, they have mentioned that it is a Caſe of an high nature, and this Impeachment in Parliament they will look upon it as the Suit of all the People of England; why then, my Lord, this muſt needs be agreed to me, if this Impeachment in Parliament be in the Nature of an Appeal, ſurely an Appeal does ſuſpend the Proceedings upon any Indictment for that Fact: which is the Caſe expreſly in my Lord Dyer, Fol. 296. Stanley was indicted of Murder, and convicted; after he was convicted, and before any Judgment, the Wife of the Party murdered brought her Appeal, then came they and moved for Judgment: no, ſaid the Court, here is an Appeal brought, and they could not go to Judgment till that Appeal was determined. So the Stat. of 3 H. VII. Ca. 1. and Vaux's Caſe 4 Report.

Fol.

Fol. 30. An Appeal of Murder, the Party convicted before Judgment, the Petitioner in the Appeal did die. Then an Indictment brought, and this Conviction pleaded in Bar of that Indictment, and adjudged to be a good Plea; but then there was a Fault found in the Appeal, upon which the Conviction on the Appeal was void in Law, and they went on upon the Indictment. This is to shew, that if this be of the nature of an Appeal, then ought this Suit first to have its Course and Determination, before your Lordship proceed on this Indictment.

But, my Lord, whether it be of this nature or no, is a matter we know were under great Controversy; and whether your Lorship will interpose in that great Question, or whether it comes in Judgment under this Question, you will do well to consider: for 'tis a matter of Parliament, and determinable among themselves, not in the Courts below, nor have ever Inferior Courts taken upon them to meddle with the Actions of the Superior Courts, but leave them to proceed according to their Laws: and if that be done in any Case, there will be as much regard had in this great Cause to the Court of Parliament, as in others.

Besides the Authorities cited out of my Lord Coke and others, I would cite one more, and that is Cotton's Records, 5 H. IV. Fol. 426. the Earl of Northumberland's Case. He comes and confesses himself to be guilty of an Offence against his Allegiance, the King delivered his Petition to the Justices, and would have them to consider of it; no, said the Parliament, 'tis matter of Parliament, and the Judges have nothing to do with it: the Lords make a Protestation to this purpose, and then they went on themselves, and adjudged it to be no Treason. There is only that one Record more which has been often cited, and that is, Rot. Parliamenti 11 R. II. pars 1. N. 6. In this Parliament the Lords Spiritual and Temporal claimed the same Privilege. My Lord, I only offer these things, with what my Lord Coke says hath been formerly thought Prudence in the Judges to do.

So that I hope, that if the Matter be good, the Form is as good as the Matter can be put into, and therefore we hope you will allow us the benefit of it.

Mr. Attorney. May it please your Lordship, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King, and notwithstanding what hath been said, I take it with Submission, that this Plea is a naughty Plea, as a Plea to your Jurisdiction, and there is no matter discloſed therein that we can take a good Issue upon.

The great Substance of the Arguments of these Gentlemen assigned of Counsel for the Prisoner, is against the Prisoner. For the great matter of their Arguments was, lest this Gentleman should escape (which Arguments in several Instances they have used to support the Plea) but the Prisoner pleads this Plea to the purpose that he might escape. Therefore if these Gentlemen had taken Instructions from him, surely they would have used Arguments to the same purpose that he might escape.

My Lord, they object we have admitted here that there is an Impeachment depending, that we have admitted 'tis for the same matter, and that we have admitted the Parliament to be in being; but no Fact is admitted that is not well pleaded. Indeed if that be admitted that the Parliament is still in being, then it goes very hard with us; and if not so admitted, the whole force of Mr. Williams's Argument falls to the ground. But I say, my Lord, with submission, to this matter, that the Beginning, Continuance, Prorogation, Adjournments, and Dissolution of Parliaments, are of publick Cognizance, and the Court ex Officio will take notice of them, so that they need not be averred. And so is the 41 of the Queen, the Bishop of Norwich's Case. A private Act of Parliament was pleaded, and the Day of the Parliament mistaken; there was a general Demurrer, and it was resolved that it was naught, and Judgment given against the Bishop, tho no Exception was taken in particular, because the Days of the beginning and ending Parliaments are of publick notice; and the Judges take notice, when a Parliament is in being, and when not. That's a sufficient Answer to that matter.

Then for those many Cautions that have been given you, what a difficult thing it is for two Jurisdictions to interfere, Mr. Fitz-Harris is much concerned in that matter, who hath forfeited his Life to the Law, as a most notorious Offender that certainly deserves nothing but Punishment, yet he would fain live a little longer, and is much concerned that the Judicature of Parliament should be preserved. If it be not Law, he shall not be oppressed in it; but if it be Law, fiat Justitia. Certainly no Consideration whatsoever ought to put Courts of Justice out of their steddy Course; but they ought to proceed according to the Laws of the Land.

My Lord, I observe 'tis an unusual Plea, and perhaps they had some reason to put it so. It concludes, si curia procedere vult, I wonder they did not put in aut debeat, that is the usual Form of such Pleas; for you have no Will but the Law, and if you cannot give Judgment, you ought not to be pressed in it; but it being according to Law that great Offenders and Malefactors should be brought to condign Punishment, we must press it, whatsoever the Consequences are. And if we did not take it to be the Interest of all the Kingdom, and of the Commons too as well as of the King, my Lord, I should not press it; but it is all their Interest, that so notorious a Malefactor that hath certainly been guilty of Treason in the highest Degree; and that for the utmost Advancement of the late Popish Plot, should not escape, or the Truth be stifled, but brought into Examination in the face of the Sun, that all Men may see what a villanous thing hath been attempted to raise up the whole Kingdom against the King: but they say, if it be not Law you will not proceed, it ties your Hands. But with Submission, they have not given you one Instance to make good what they say. Many things have been, that a Plea depending in a Superior Court is pleadable to the Jurisdiction of an Inferior Court; for, my Lord, that is it we put upon them to shew: if it had been pleaded in Abatement, it would have had its weight, and been considered of, as in Sparry's Case, where it was no Plea to the Jurisdiction.

Put the Case it had been a good Impeachment, and he had been arraigned upon it and acquitted; if he had afterwards come to be indicted in this Court, and the Prisoner will not plead this in Bar but to the Jurisdiction of the Court, it would not have been a good Plea; but he had lost his Advantage by mispleading. If then an Arraignment, and an Acquittal, or Conviction thereupon, is not a good Plea to the Jurisdiction; then then certainly an Impeachment depending singly cannot be a good Plea to the Jurisdiction. This Court hath a full Jurisdiction of this Case and of this Person, both of the Crime and of the Party who is a Commoner, and not only to find the Indictment, but to proceed to Justice, and this you had at the time of the Fact committed. For certainly, we need not put Cases for to prove that the King's-Bench, especially since the Statute for trying Treason beyond the Seas, hath an universal Jurisdiction of all Persons and Offences. Pray then what is it that must out this Court of their Jurisdiction? For all the Cases that have been, or can be put about matters which are not originally examinable in this Court, make not to the matter in question: there 'tis true, the Court may be by Plea outed of its Jurisdiction; as at Common-Law, where a Fact is done super altum mare, and so pleaded, that puts it out of the Court's Jurisdiction; and that was my Lord Hollis's and Sir J. Elliot's Case, and so that was my Lord Shaftesbury Case's too, the Fact was done out of their Jurisdiction, and that may be pleaded to the Jurisdiction, because they had no Original Jurisdiction of the Fact; but where the Crime and the Person were absolutely within the Jurisdiction of the Court, and the Court may originally take Cognizance of it, as this Court had of the present Case, I would fain know what can out that Jurisdiction less than an Act of Parliament: I will be bold to say, the King by his Great-Seal cannot do it, nor can an Act of either House, or both Houses together without the King, out the Jurisdiction. To say, their Proceedings ought to be a Bar, that is another Case, the Party hath his Advantage, and may plead it in Abatement or Bar, as the Case requires: for if there had been an Acquittal or Conviction, the Party could not plead it to the Jurisdiction. Therefore for those Cases they put, when you come to examine the reason of them, you see how they stand, viz. that the Court had no Original Jurisdiction.

My Lord Shaftesbury was committed by the Lords for a Crime in that House, a Contempt to that House; he is brought here, and it appears to be a Commitment in Execution. My Lord, that was out of your Jurisdiction; and if you had bailed him, what would you have done? would you have bailed him to be tried here? No, you could not do it, and therefore you proceeded not in that Case. And so in the other Cases: for there is not one of their Cases that have been cited of the other side, but where it was out of the Jurisdiction of the Court originally, and not at all within it. As for the Case of the five Lords in the Tower, because they say it will have a mighty influence upon them, and they put the Case, that there was in December an Indictment, and afterwards an Impeachment from the Commons; and they cite some Opinion given at the Council-Board, which I hope these Gentlemen will not say was a Judicial Opinion, or any way affects this Cause: But for that, my Lord, I observe the Lords took care that these Indictments should be all removed into the Lords House; so they did foresee that the King might have proceeded upon the Indictments, if they had not been removed thither. But our Case now is quite another thing: for those Lords were not fully within your Jurisdiction. You cannot try a Peer of the Realm for Treason; and besides, the Lords have pleaded in full Parliament, where, by the Law of Parliament, all the Peers are to be their Judges; and so you can't out them of that Right. And the reason is plain, because thereby you must do them an apparent Prejudice; they having pleaded there, all the whole Peerage are their Tryers. But upon Tryal before Commissioners, they must have but a select number of Peers to be their Tryers. But in none of those Cases hath any Judicial Opinion been given: for the Case of 11 R. II. first cited by Sir Fran. Winnington, and then by Mr. Pollexfen, a Declaration in Parliament, That they proceeded according to the Law of Parliament, and not according to the Common-Law, nor according to the Practice of Inferior Courts; that will be nothing to our purpose at all, that was in Case of the Lords Appellants. A Proceeding contrary to Magna Charta, contrary to the Statute of Ed. III. and the known Privilege of the Subject. But those Proceedings had a countenance in Parliament: for there was an Oath taken by all the Lords in Parliament, that they would stand by the Lords Appellants. And thereupon they would be controuled by none, and they would not be advised by the Judges, but proceed to the trying of Peers and Commoners according to their own Will and Pleasure. And between that time of 11 R. II. and 1 H. IV. see what havock they made by those illegal Proceedings; and in 1 H. IV. you will see, that these very Lords were sentenced, except one or two of them who were pardoned; and then it was expressly resolved by Act of Parliament, that no more Appeals of that nature, nor any Appeals whatsoever, should be any more in Parliament. And if so, these Gentlemen had best consider how they make an Impeachment like an Appeal: for in that Statute, 'tis said, there shall be no more Appeals. And the Petition upon which this Act is founded, runs thus. They pray that no Impeachment or Appeal may be in Parliament. But when the King came to make the Grant, he grants only for Appeals, and principally to out those Lords Appellants who were condemned by that very Parliament. So that 'tis a very pretty matter at this time of day to liken an Impeachment to an Appeal.

But, my Lord, the other great Point is this. There is nothing at all certainly disclosed to you by this Plea; therefore there is nothing confessed by us, only the Fact that is well pleaded: therefore I shall come to consider what is said by them, as to the Form of it. They say, my Lord, that they have pleaded it to be secundum Legem & Consuetudinem Parliamenti; and if that be sufficient, let them have said what they would, that would have healed all. But I say, my Lord, with Submission, they must disclose to you what is the Law and Custom of Parliament in such Case, or else you must take it upon you upon your own Knowledge, or you cannot give Judgment. 'Tis very well known what this Lex & Consuetudo Parliamenti is; no Person versed in the Records, but knows it, that by course of Parliament a Message goes up with a Declaration to impeach the Party generally; and then after, there are Articles or a Bill of Impeachment produced. Now till that be produced, sure there is no Counsel of the other side will say, that ever the Party can be called to answer. And because these Gentlemen do pretend to urge their Knowledge herein, I would observe, there are three things to be considered of the Parliament; the Legislative Part, the Matters of Privilege, and the Judicial Part proper to this Case. For the Legislative Part, and Matters of Privilege, both Houses do proceed only secun- dum Legem & Conſuetudinem Parliamenti; but for the Judicial Part, does any Man queſtion, but that in all times they have been guided and directed by the Statutes and Laws of the Land? And have been outed of a Juriſdiction in ſeveral Caſes, as by the Statute of 4 Edw. III. and 1 H. IV. And the Lords in all Writs of Error, and all Matters of Judgment, proceed ſecundum Legem Terræ; and ſo for Life and Death. And there is not one Law in Weſtminſter-Hall, as to Matters of Judgment, and another in the Court of the Lords above. But I will not trouble your Lordſhip any farther to purſue theſe things. But it is not ſufficiently diſcloſed to you, that there is any ſuch thing as an Impeachment depending there; 'tis only alledged, that he was impeached, and ſo much the News-book told us, that he was impeached: but to infer thence that there was an Impeachment carried up and lodged for the ſame High-Treaſon, is no Conſequence. And then 'tis alledged, Quæ quidem Impetitio, when no Impeachment is before ſet forth, but only that he was impeached generally. And as I obſerved before, a Perſon might go up with a Meſſage to impeach, but that cannot be ſaid to be an Impeachment to which the Party is compelled to anſwer; it muſt be an Impeachment on Record, and appearing on the face of the Record for what Crime it is; and ſo they ought to have ſet it forth.

Now that this is too general that is alledged here, I take it the Books are very full. When a Record is pleaded in Bar or in Abatement, the Crimes ought to be ſet out to appear the ſame; and ſo, my Lord, are all the Precedents of Coke's Entries 53, Holdcroft's and Burgh's Caſe, and Watt's and Bray's Caſe in 41 and 42 of Queen Eliz. Coke's Ent. 59. Wrott's and Wigg's Caſe, 4 Rep. 45. and in Lewe's and Scholaſtica's Caſe, and Dive's and Manning's Caſe. The Record muſt be ſet out, that the Court may judge upon it; and the Record muſt not be tryed per pais, but by it ſelf. But for what they ſay, plead it never ſo certainly, there muſt be an Averment, it muſt be ſo 'tis true; but that is for another purpoſe than they urge it. The reaſon is, becauſe if it be for another Fact that he hath committed, he may be indicted again, tho it be of the ſame nature; but whether of the ſame nature or not of the ſame nature, is the thing muſt appear upon the Record pleaded, becauſe the Court muſt be aſcertained, that it was ſufficient for the Party to anſwer to it; for if it were inſufficient, he may be again proceeded againſt: As if an Indictment be pleaded which was inſufficient, tho the Party pleads an Acquittal or Conviction upon it, it will not avail him; for the Court will proceed on the other Indictment. And ſo is the Reſolution in Vaux's Caſe, and in Wigg's Caſe; tho there was a Judgment given of Acquittal, yet he was tryed again. So that, my Lord, that is one great Reaſon why it muſt appear, that the Court may judge whether it be ſufficient for the Party to anſwer. And you have now that here before you, if this be ſuch an Impeachment as they have pleaded it, as this Perſon could not anſwer to by any Law of Parliament or other Court; then 'tis not ſufficient to out you of your Juriſdiction. And I do think that by no Law they are or can be compellable to anſwer to a general Impeachment of High-Treaſon. And to give you Authority in that, there are many might be cited, as the Caſes of my Lord Stafford and the other Lords in the Tower, and ſo is the antient Courſe of Parliament: with ſubmiſſion, I will be bold to ſay, the Impeachments are all ſo, that ever I met with. And it appears by them, that they all conclude contra Coronam & Dignitatem Regis, in the Form of Indictments, laying ſome Overt-Acts and the ſpecial particular Crimes for which the Perſon is impeached, as Overt-Acts for Treaſon required by the Statute of 25 Edw. III. And I hope they will not ſay, that without an Overt-Act laid in the Impeachment, the Impeachment can be good. If then this be ſo general that it cannot make the Crime appear to the Court, and is ſo inſufficient that the Court cannot give Judgment, I take it you will go on upon the Indictment, which chargeth him with a particular Crime.

My Lord, Mr. Pollexfen does put the Caſe of Barretry where ſuch Averment is allowable, but that is a ſpecial, certain, and particular Crime, but High-Treaſon is not ſo; there are abundance of ſpecial ſorts of High-Treaſon, there is but one ſort of Barretry, and there are no Sub-diviſions; therefore there is nothing to be averred but the ſpecial Facts that make that Barretry.

Then there was another Authority out of the Book of Aſſizes cited by Sir Fran. Winnington, and greatly relied upon. A Man is indicted for the Murder of J. S. and afterwards for the Murder of J. N. the former was pleaded to the ſecond with an Averment that it is the ſame Perſon; that is but according to the common Form of Averments, to be of Matter of Fact. For if J. S. was known, as well by the Name of J. N. as of J. S. the Indictment was for the Murder of the ſame Perſon, and there 'tis pure Fact averred. But where 'tis eſſential, as this Caſe is, that the particular Treaſon do appear; to ſay, that it is the ſame particular Treaſon, and to ſay, that Matter of Fact averred ſhall enlarge a Record, I think, is impoſſible to be found any where. And of all the Caſes that I have ſeen or heard, I confeſs none of the Inſtances come up to it. For the Caſe in Moor, King, and Howard, cited by Sir Francis Winnington, that is an Authority as expreſly againſt him, that nothing can be more: for if there be an Indictment for Felony in ſuch a particular Act, and then he is indicted again, he cannot come and plead a general Indictment of Felony, and then aver 'tis for the particular Felony, and ſo to make the Fact enlarge the Record, and put Matter of Record to be tried by a Jury.

Mr. Wallop was of Opinion, that upon this Averment the Jury may try the Fact. What a pretty Caſe would it be, that a Jury ſhould judge upon the whole Debates of the Houſe of Commons, whether it be the ſame matter or no: for thoſe Debates muſt be given in Evidence if ſuch an Iſſue be tried. I did demur with all the care that I could, to bring nothing of that in queſtion; but your Lordſhip knows if they have never ſo much in particular againſt a Man, when they come to make good their Impeachment, they muſt aſcertain it to a particular Crime; and the Overt-Acts muſt be alledged in the Impeachment, or elſe there is another way to hang a Subject than what is the King's High-way all over England. And admit there was an intimation of a purpoſe to impeach, a Meſſage ſent up, and any Judgment given thereupon, pray conſider what may be the Conſequence as to the Government; a very great Matter depends upon this: if there be any Record of that Parliament, then is the French Act gone: for ſo is the Reſolution in 12 Jacobi, where where the Journal-Book was full of Proceedings, yet becauſe there was no Judgment paſſed, nor no Record of a Judgment in a Writ of Error, they adjudged it no Seſſion; but if any Judgment had been given, then it had been otherwiſe. So that the Conſequences of theſe things are not eaſily ſeen, when Men debate upon touchy Matters.

But that which is before your Lordſhip is this point upon the pleading, and, I conceive I have anſwered all the Precedents they have cited; therefore, my Lord, I do take it, with Submiſſion there is nothing of that Matter before you concerning an Impeachment depending before the Parliament; but whatſoever was done, 'tis ſo imperfectly pleaded, that this Court cannot take any notice of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I ſhall endeavour to be ſhort, and ſhall confine my ſelf (becauſe I am tender of your time) to the Point in queſtion; which is, whether this Plea be ſufficient in point of Form. There have been many things ſaid on the other ſide, which I muſt crave leave to take notice of, ſo far only as to ſhew they are not in queſtion before you. Thoſe are what relate to the Matter of the Plea; for they argue 'tis good both in Matter and Form: and from the Matter of the Plea they have taken occaſion to debate, whether a Commoner may be impeached? Whether this Court hath Power to judge of the Privileges and Courſe of Parliament? None of which Queſtions will ariſe upon our Caſe now. Therefore I will not now debate whether Magna Charta, which hath ordained that every Man ſhall be tried by his Peers, and the Statute of 4 Edw. III. which ſays, that the Lords ſhall not be compelled, nor ſhall have power to give Judgment upon a Commoner, have ſufficiently ſecured the Liberty of the Subject from Impeachments. Nor is it the queſtion before your Lordſhip, whether you ſhall judge of any matter that is a Right or Privilege of Parliament; here is nothing before you that was done in Parliament; but this is an Indictment for High-Treaſon, committed by Fitz-Harris in this County. Now, my Lord, as that is not the Queſtion, neither will it be the Queſtion, Whether an Impeachment depending in the Houſe of Lords againſt a Commoner, by the Houſe of Commons, will bar this Court of its Juriſdiction? For though they have entred upon it, and debated it at large, and ſeemed to obviate the Objections made to that if it had been a Queſtion; as by ſaying that the King hath no Election, becauſe this is not the Suit of the King, but the Suit of the Subject: I will not now ex inſtituto argue that Point; but I will humbly offer a few things to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, and I ſhall take my hints from them. They ſay the Houſe of Commons are the grand Inqueſt of the Nation, to enquire of Treaſons and other High Crimes, and they make theſe Preſentments to the Houſe of Lords. Now when ſuch a Preſentment is made, 'tis worthy Conſideration whether it be not a Preſentment for the King; for an Impeachment does not conclude as an Appeal does, but contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ Debitum, & Coronam & Dignitatem Domini Regis; ſo far 'tis the King's Suit. In an Impeachment the Witneſſes for the Priſoner are not ſworn, the Priſoner hath not Counſel for his Life in Matter of Fact, as in Caſes of Appeal, at the Suit of the Subject he hath. The King may pardon part of the Sentence, it was done ſo in Rich. the 2*d*'s Time, and it was done ſo lately in my Lord Stafford's Caſe; but take it for a Suppoſition that it is the Suit of the People, yet that cannot preclude the King from his Suit neither; for at Common Law before the Statute of 3 Hen. 7. where a Man had an Appeal for Murder, the King had not his hands tied up, not to proceed upon the Indictment: it had been uſed ſo, I do agree, and ſo 'tis recited, that it had been uſed ſo, in the Statute of 3 Hen. VII. but there was no poſitive Law for it, nor could it have been pleaded in bar of an Indictment, that the Indictment was within the Year, but the King uſed to ſtay out the Year in favour of that Suit. But ſince the Statute, the uſe is otherwiſe; and the reaſon why they proceed immediately is, becauſe now an Acquittal or an Attainder upon the Indictment is no bar to the Appeal, but the Party may go on in his Appeal. I mention this, becauſe the Conſequence which they urge as ſuch a diſmal one, will be nothing; which is, What if he ſhould be acquitted here, he could not plead auter fois acquit, ſo would be twice brought in jeopardy for the ſame Offence. For it is the ſame in all Caſes of Appeals, a Man comes in jeopardy twice if he be indicted within the Year, and attainted or acquitted within the Year; it is no bar to the Appeal. But this is not like the Caſe of an Appeal for Murder neither, for though it hath been uſed diſcretionarily in the Court to ſtay the Suit of the King, and to prefer the Suit of the Subject, it was then becauſe the Subject had the firſt and neareſt Concern, as the Son in the Death of his Father, and it did moſtly concern him to proſecute it. The King is concerned as the Fountain of Juſtice only, to bring Offenders to condign Puniſhment; but the neareſt damage, and the firſt to be prefer'd, was that of the Party who had loſt his Relation. Now the reaſon of that turns quite contrary here: For as in that Caſe the Subject had the neareſt Concern in the Loſs of his Father, and ſo was beſt intitled to the Suit; ſo in this Caſe that very reaſon will have the King's Suit to be prefer'd: for there is no Treaſon but againſt the King, and in Treaſon againſt himſelf, the King has the neareſt Concern, and the Wrong is primarily and originally to himſelf. And the Subjects damage is but a Conſequence of that, as all hurt to the King muſt needs hurt the People. So the King's Suit is to be prefer'd here, as the Subjects was in the other Caſe.

Now for the Objection that has been made, That if you try this Man, upon the ſame Reaſon you may try the Lords in the Tower. Their Caſe is different, as has been already obſerved by Mr. Attorney; and that which has been done by the Lords in that Caſe, to me does rather ſeem to imply that this Tryal may be in this Caſe. For if the Lords after an Impeachment brought up againſt the five Lords in the Tower, and after the ſpecial Matter in the Articles which does aſcertain upon what they do proceed, have thought fit notwithſtanding to remove the Indictment by Certiorari into Parliament, (for ſo it was in Fact) that no Proſecution might be upon them; then certainly they thought the King's Court might proceed without doing ſo.

My Lord, I will mention no more upon this matter, but leave it to your Lordſhip's Conſideration: But as to the Form of the Plea, I do conceive, with Submiſſion, 'tis not a formal Plea.

We know here of no Form of pleading an Indictment, but what does ſet forth the Indictment particularly; the Precedents are ſo, 'tis ſo in Vaulx's Caſe, and all the Precedents that I have ſeen: ſo is the Precedent in Raſt. Ent. where in an Appeal the Defendant waged Battel, the Plaintiff replies he was formerly indicted, he ſets forth the Indictment particularly. All the Precedents are ſo, and the Law-Books reſolve it muſt be ſo; as Wrott and Wigg's Caſe, where the Defendant in an Appeal of Murder by the Wife pleads, that he was indicted for Manſlaughter before the Coroner of the Verge, and Coroner of the County, for killing the Husband at Shepperton in the County of Middleſex, and had his Clergy with reference to the Record, and the uſual Averments; with this farther, that he averred that Shepperton at the time of the Indictment and Death was within the Verge. To which the Plaintiff demurred, and Judgment for the Plaintiff. Now two things are reſolved by this Judgment.

1. That 'tis neceſſary to ſet forth the whole Record of the Indictment, or otherwiſe they ought not to have given Judgment for the Plaintiff, by reaſon the Indictment was inſufficient, as 'twas pleaded, (in that it did not ſay that Shepperton was within the Verge, which was neceſſary to intitle the Coroner of the Verge to a Juriſdiction) becauſe being pleaded with reference to the Record upon Nul tiel Record pleaded, and the Record thereupon brought in, that Defect might have been cured.

2. That no Averment of Fact can ſupply that which ſhould appear upon Record, therefore the Averment that Shepperton was within the Verge, did not mend the matter, though confeſt by the Demurrer as much as it is in this Caſe, that 'tis the ſame Treaſon.

But they ſay there is a difference between this Caſe and thoſe which I have put; for that 'tis the Courſe of Parliament (of which your Lordſhips muſt take notice) to impeach general; ſo they could not have pleaded otherwiſe than they have done, unleſs they had pleaded it otherwiſe than the Caſes were: this Reaſon holds rather the other way; for if in any Caſe ſuch a general way of pleading with reference to the Record were to be admitted, it were in caſe of an Indictment, becauſe the Court knows there is no Indictment but what does particularly ſet forth the Felony, which when produced, is capable of being applied: but here if the Record be brought in, 'twill no more aſcertain the matter of the Impeachment, than the Plea does already. And whereas they ſay your Lordſhip is bound to take notice of the Courſe of Parliament, ſo your Lordſhip will take notice too, that 'tis not the Courſe of Parliaments to try any Man upon ſuch a general Impeachment. I never heard of any Man (I ſpeak it with ſubmiſſion to them that know better) that was brought to plead, Not Guilty, upon a general Impeachment of High-Treaſon; that is, upon the Commons bare ſaying, We do impeach ſuch an one of High-Treaſon. I know none that ever was brought to anſwer that general Accuſation.

And now, my Lord, as the Plea is nought for not ſetting out the Record, ſo is the Averment, with ſubmiſſion, inſufficient too. For though he does aver that the Treaſon in the Indictment, and the Treaſon for which he was impeached, are one and the ſame, and not divers Affirmatively and Negatively; yet as this Caſe is, he ought to have ſaid, that the Treaſon for which he is indicted, and the Treaſon mentioned in the Impeachment, is one and the ſame: For if he was impeached generally for High-Treaſon without mention of Particulars, it is impoſſible to be reduced to a Certainty: So 'tis an Averment of a Fact not capable to be tried.

Firſt, Becauſe, with ſubmiſſion to theſe Gentlemen that have ſaid it, the Debates of the Houſe of Commons are not to be given in Evidence, and made publick to a Jury: Nay, they are not always poſſible to be reduced to a Certainty, as the Circumſtances may be; for they do not always particularly reſolve upon what Particulars they will accuſe before they go up, but a general Allegation ſerves the turn: So that ſuch Averment is not triable per Pais, becauſe as the Caſe may be, it may not be capable of any Certainty from the Debates of the Houſe of Commons.

Another reaſon is, becauſe by this way of pleading, Proceedings may be ſtaid for Treaſon, though ſubſequent to the Impeachment, which no Man yet has pretended to ſay: For ſuppoſe now a general Impeachment lodg'd, and a Treaſon afterwards committed by the Party, I think no Man will ſay that the Houſe of Commons when they bring up their ſpecial Matters, cannot make even this ſubſequent Treaſon an Article upon that Impeachment; neither can it be ſaid that ſuch Averment as this is, upon ſuch Plea pleaded to an Indictment here below, would be repugnant, becauſe there is no time at all laid in the Impeachment as 'tis here pleaded, nor no time when the Impeachment was brought up, ſo that it cannot appear to the Court whether the Treaſon in the Indictment be ſubſequent or not: the Conſequence of which is, we muſt try whether the Houſe of Commons upon this general Impeachment did intend to proceed to try him for a Fact committed after the Impeachment carried up. My Lord, this would be to affirm, that a Man once impeached in Parliament ſhall never be tried for any Offence; it would be like that Privilegium Clericale, which they made uſe of to exempt themſelves from Puniſhment for all Offences.

But, my Lord, we do think upon the whole Matter, without entring upon the Debate, whether a particular Impeachment lodged in the Houſe of Lords does preclude the King from his Proceedings, we have a good Caſe upon this Plea; for that is not a Queſtion neceſſary to be reſolved, though it be not granted by the King neither. But the Queſtion is, Whether this be a formal Plea, and whether here be ſufficient Matter ſet forth upon Record to bring that other Matter into queſtion, and tie up the hands of the Court?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, there hath been already enough ſpoken in this Caſe. I ſhall deſire only to offer one word to that ſingle Point, (viz.) the Informality of the Plea; which I take to be the ſole Queſtion in this Caſe: for to argue whether becauſe there was no Bill paſs'd, or Decree made in the Houſe of Lords (though the Articles had been carried up) the Impeachment did not fall to the ground by the Diſſolution, I conceive altogether improper; for I think it does not affect the Queſtion: though I deſire to take notice that Sir Fr. Winnington, Mr. Williams, and Mr. Wallop, were all miſtaken; for there were no ſuch Conceſſions made by any of the King's Counſel the other day, as they alledge, becauſe we did not think it to be the Queſtion, and therefore made no Diſcourſes about it.

But, my Lord, I deſire firſt to take notice of a Caſe or two that hath been cited on the other ſide, and then I ſhall apply my ſelf to that which is the Queſtion before you at this time. They cite cite the Case of the Lords in the Tower as a Judgment for them, which seems to be a Judgment against them; for by the Lords granting a Certiorari to remove the Judgments into Parliament, they seem to be of opinion, that notwithstanding they were impeached before the Lords, yet there might have been Proceedings below upon those Indictments, had not they been removed; and there they remain to this day. Nay further, to those Impeachments they have pleaded to Issue, which is ready for a Tryal: But in the Case at Bar, there only is an Accusation, without any further Proceedings thereupon.

And as to the Case of my Lord Shaftesbury, that makes strongly for us, as I conceive. Mr. Justice Jones's Opinion was taken notice of by Sir Fran. Winnington, that they would not meddle by any means with Matters depending in Parliament: But I must remember, he then gave this Reason for his Opinion, because the Parliament was then in being. And I must humbly put your Lordship in mind, that the whole Court did then declare, That if the Parliament had been dissolved, they would have said something more to that Case. I do not say, that they would have given such or such a Judgment, but I attended at the Bar at that time, and I appeal to the Memory of the Court, if the Court did not then make such a Declaration.

But now to the Question: Without all peradventure, the Cases cited by Mr. Pollexfen are true. If I bring a general Indebitatus assumpsit for Wares sold and delivered, and after bring a particular Indebitatus assumpsit for such and such Wares, naming the Particulars, the Party may come and plead in Bar, and aver 'tis for the same thing; and 'tis a good Averment, because there is sufficient matter set forth in the Record to support such an Averment: For the doubt is only, whether the particular Goods mentioned in the second, be not the same that were intended under those general Words (Goods and Merchandizes) in the first.

But suppose there had been only an Account brought, and no Declaration put in, could then the Defendant have pleaded such a Plea with such an Averment, when there was not sufficient matter of Record set forth in their Pleading, whereby the Court might be able to give a Judgment, or put it into a way of Tryal whether it was for the same or not?

And is it not so in this Case? there being but a bare Accusation: For I still keep to the Informality of the Pleading, and I take it not to be such a dangerous Case, as these Gentlemen of the other side do pretend, for you to determine it. For I am sure it will be better for the Court to answer, if ever they shall be required, that they have performed their Duty and done Justice according to their Consciences and their Oaths, than ever to be afraid of any Threats or Bugbears from the Bar.

For would not they by this manner of Pleading, put upon your Lordships a difficulty to judge, without any thing contained in the Impeachment to guide your Judgment, whether the Prisoner be impeached for the same thing for which he is indicted? May not the Treason intended in this Impeachment be for clipping or coining of Money? for 'tis generally said to be only for High-Treason. How comes this then to be help'd, so as to be any way issuable, and be tried? Shall it be by that way which Mr. Wallop laid down, that if Mr. Attorney had taken Issue, the Jury must have tried the Question by having the Debates of the House of Commons given in Evidence? Certainly that cannot be, my Lord. If there were but one sort of Treason, there might be some Colour for this sort of Pleading; but there are divers kinds of Treasons, and how is it capable to be tried? Who can prove the Intentions of the House of Commons, before they are come to a Resolution? and therefore cannot be given in Evidence, or be regularly brought into Judgment.

Therefore we rely upon the Informality and Uncertainty of the Pleading only, and meddle not with the Question, Whether an Impeachment in the House of Lords supersedes an Indictment in the King's-Bench; for we say, they have not pleaded it so substantially, as to enable the Court to judge upon the Question: and therefore we pray your Lordship's Judgment, that the Plea may be over-ruled.

Sir Fran. Withins. My Lord, there has been so much of your time already taken up by those Gentlemen that have argued before me, that I shall be very short in what I have to say.

The Question is not at this time, how far forth the Commons in Parliament may impeach or not impeach a Commoner, before the Lords in Parliament, or where the Lords may admit or not admit of such Impeachments; that is not the Case here, as I humbly conceive, nor will I meddle with it: I shall only speak to the Validity of the Plea according to the Law. Now I say that this Plea of the Prisoner as thus pleaded, cannot be good to out this Court of Jurisdiction: For First, The Prisoner cannot be admitted to make the Averment in this Plea, that the Treason mentioned in the Impeachment in Parliament, and that contained in this Indictment, is the same; for if, as the Gentlemen that argued on the other side urg'd, that this Court must take notice of the Proceedings and Law of Parliament, then you will take notice that no Person is there tried upon a general Impeachment of Treason. Special Articles are always first exhibited: In this Case then either the House of Commons have carried up special Articles against the Prisoner to the Lords in Parliament, or not; if the House have done it, then the Plea might have been pleaded better by setting forth the Articles (which is part of what they say on the other side, that it could be pleaded no better) for then it would have appeared plainly whether the Treason were the same or not. If the Articles are not carried up, shall it lie in the Mouth of any particular Person to say what Articles the Commons in Parliament would have carried up? Shall any single Person be admitted to say what the House would have done, before the House it self says it? In Cases of Impeachments, it lies in the Discretion and Judgment of the Commons upon Debate to exhibit what Articles they in their Wisdoms shall think fit; and sure it shall never come, that any particular Person shall limit them to this or that particular Treason before-hand; no surely.

Now suppose in such a Case as this, after such a Plea pleaded, the Commons upon Deliberation should carry up Articles quite different; such a Plea then would appear to be a stark Lye, and the pleading and allowing of it, an apparent Delay of Justice. So that I conceive, my Lord, the Prisoner shall by no means be admitted (nor indeed can it be) to aver the Intention of the House of Commons, (which cannot be tried) before they have declared it themſelves; and therefore I conceive the Plea to be naught for that Reaſon.

But, my Lord, I conceive that the Priſoner's Plea is ill for another Reaſon, becauſe the Court in this Caſe, by any thing expreſſed in this Plea, cannot diſcern nor take notice whether it be the ſame Treaſon or not.

Now the Reaſon why the Record, as this Caſe is, ought to be alledged ſpecially, is becauſe the Matter contained in it may plainly appear to the Court, and then by that means the Court might judge whether it be the ſame Treaſon or not. Now Treaſon generally alledged in the Impeachment, is the Genus, and the particular Treaſon mentioned in the Indictment is only a Species, and the Averment in the Plea is, that the Genus and the Species is the ſame; which is abſurd, and if allowed, tends to hoodwink and blind the Court, inſtead of making the Matter plain for their Judgment.

Pleas ought to be plain and certain, becauſe the Court upon them alledged, is to judge either of Mens Eſtates or Lives; and for that Reaſon the matter ought to come plainly and fairly before them, that wrong may be done to neither Party by reaſon of the Obſcureneſs or Doubtfulneſs of the Allegation: if therefore a Hoodwink be brought inſtead of a Plea, it ought not to be allowed. And therefore for theſe Reaſons (for what I have farther to ſay, has been already ſaid by others) I conceive it ought to be overruled. I humbly ſubmit it to the Court.

L. C. J. You have done your Arguments, Gentlemen, on all ſides?

Coun. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, I'll tell you, y have taken up a great part of our time. We never intended, when we aſſigned four Counſel to Mr. Fitz-Harris, that they all ſhould make formal Arguments in one Day, 'tis the firſt time that ever it was done; but becauſe 'tis as you preſs it in a Caſe of Blood, we were willing to hear all you could ſay, that you might not afterwards ſay, but that you were fully heard on all ſides. But in truth, I muſt tell you, you have ſtarted a great many things that are not in the Caſe at all. We have nothing to do here, whether the Commons Houſe at this Day can impeach for Treaſon any Commoner in the Houſe of Lords; we have nothing to do with this, what the Lords Juriſdiction is, nor with this Point, whether an Impeachment in the Lords Houſe (when the Lords are poſſeſſed fully of the Impeachment) does bar the bringing any Suit, or hinder the Proceeding in an inferior Court: But here we have a Caſe that riſes upon the Pleadings; whether you have brought here before us a ſufficient Plea to take away the Juriſdiction of the Court, as you have pleaded it, that will be the ſole Point that is before us: And you have heard what Exceptions have been made to the Form, and to the Matter of your Pleading. We do ask you again, Whether you think you are able to mend your Pleading in any thing, for the Court will not catch you, if you have any thing wherein you can amend it, either in Matter or Form? If you will let us know it, we ſhall conſider of it; but if you have not, if you abide by this Plea, then we do think 'tis not reaſonable, nor will be expected of us in a matter of this Conſequence to give our Judgment concerning this Plea preſently. All the Caſes cited concerning Facts done in Parliament, and where they have endeavoured to have them examined here, are nothing to the purpoſe at all. For plainly, we do not aſſume to our ſelves a Juriſdiction to inquire of ſuch Matters: for Words ſpoken, or Facts done in the Commons-Houſe, or in the Lords, we call none to queſtion here, nor for any thing of that nature which takes off moſt of the Inſtances you have given; but our Queſtion is barely upon the Pleading before us, Whether we have a ſufficient Pleading of ſuch an Impeachment as can foreclose the hands of the Court? And as to that, we ſhall take ſome reaſonable time to conſider of it; we will not precipitate in ſuch a Caſe, but deliberate well upon it before we give our Judgment. Take back your Priſoner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before he goes away, we hope you will ſet a reaſonable time, as ſhort as you can, to have him come again, for your Judgment.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we can ſend for him when we pleaſe, to come hither by Rule; you ſee this buſineſs is come on in the buſy part of a Term, and 'tis impoſſible for the Court to attend nothing but this, we will take ſome reaſonable time.

[Then Fitz-Harris was carried back to the Tower.]

On Tueſday, May 10. Mr. Attorney moved the Court to appoint a Day for their Judgment on the Plea, and for Fitz-Harris to be brought up, which they appointed to be the next Morning.

And accordingly on Wedneſday Morning, May 11. he was brought from the Tower to Weſtminſter-Hall.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray that Fitz-Harris may be brought to the Bar.

L. C. J. Where is the Lieutenant of the Tower? bid him bring Fitz-Harris to the Bar, (which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment on the Plea.

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Fitz-Haris, you have been arraigned here for High-Treaſon, and it is for endeavouring and compaſſing the King's Death, and other Treaſons, ſpecially mentioned in this Indictment; you have pleaded here to the Juriſdiction of this Court, that there was an Impeachment againſt you by the Commons of England in Parliament, before the Lords, for the Crime of High-Treaſon, and you do ſay, that that Impeachment is yet in force; and you do ſay by way of Averment, that this Treaſon whereof you are now indicted, and the Treaſon whereof you were impeached by the Commons of England, before the Lords, are one and the ſame Treaſon. And upon this the Attorney-General, for the King, hath demurred, and you have joined in Demurrer. And we have here the Arguments of your Counſel, whom we aſſigned to argue it for you; we have heard them at large, and have conſidered of your Caſe among our ſelves, and upon full Conſideration and Deliberation concerning your Caſe, and all that hath been ſaid by your Counſel, and upon Conference that we have had with ſome other of the Judges, we are three of us of Opinion that your Plea is not ſufficient to bar this Court of its Juriſdiction; my Brother Jones, my Brother Raymond, and my ſelf are of Opinion that your Plea is inſufficient, my Brother Dolben not being reſolved, but doubting concerning it. And therefore the Court does order and award, award, that you ſhall anſwer over to this Treaſon.

Cl. of Crown. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I deſire I may have liberty to adviſe with my Counſel before I plead.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, when you propoſed a difficulty you had in a Matter of Law, the Court were willing to aſſign you Counſel; becauſe 'tis known you cannot be a fitting Perſon to adviſe your ſelf concerning the Law. But as to this, we cannot aſſign you Counſel; 'tis only a Matter of Fact, whether you be guilty or not guilty. Therefore in this Caſe you can't have Counſel allowed to adviſe you.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I deſire before I plead, or do any thing of that nature, that I may make an end of my Confeſſion before your Lordſhip, and ſome of the Privy-Council.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, for that you have trifled with us already; you pretended you had ſome Scruples of Conſcience, and that you were now become another Man, and would reveal and diſcover the whole of this Deſign and Plot, that you are ſaid to be guilty of here: but you have trifled ſeveral times concerning it, and we can ſay nothing concerning that now; we muſt now have your Plea: if afterwards you have a mind to confeſs and be ingenuous, you may do it; but now you muſt either plead, or not plead.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have ſome Witneſſes a great way off, and I deſire time to have them ready for my Defence.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand; (which he did) thou haſt been indicted of High-Treaſon, upon that Indictment thou haſt been arraigned, and haſt pleaded to the Juriſdiction of this Court. To which Plea his Majeſty's Attorney-General hath demurred, and thou haſt joined therein: and upon the whole Matter, this Court, upon mature and conſiderate Deliberation, is of Opinion, that thou oughteſt to anſwer over. How ſaiſt thou, art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou haſt been indicted, and haſt been arraigned, or not Guilty?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Cul. Priſt. &c. how wilt thou be tried?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good deliverance.

L. C. J. Now if you have any thing to move, do it. We could not hear your Motion till you had pleaded; for the Method of the Court muſt be obſerved.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I have ſome Witneſſes at a diſtance, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where are your Witneſſes?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I have one Witneſs in Holland, a very material one; that I am much concerned to have for my Life.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What is his Name?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. His Name is Steward, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, I'll tell you, reaſonable time is allowed to all Men to make their Defence in; but when a Man is in Holland, I know not what time you will take for that.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. What time your Lordſhip thinks fit for a Man to return from thence hither.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, why ſhould not we allow Mr. Fitz-Harris time for his Tryal till next Term?

Mr. Att. Gen. I think he hath not offered any thing to entitle him to it: he doth not tell us, and I would fain know what the Witneſſes will prove.

Mr Juſt. Dolben. It may be, Mr. Attorney, he will confeſs what 'tis that Witneſs can prove.

Mr. Att. Gen. For the whole Proof in a Caſe of Treaſon lies on our ſide.

L. C. J. Commonly, and prima facie, it does ſo; but there may be ſome things that the Priſoner may give in Evidence for himſelf, that may be material for him to urge for his Defence.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I know not whether it be ſafe for me to tell what he can ſay?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Then you reſerve it wholly in your own Judgment, whether he be a material Witneſs or no?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. If my Lord Chief-Juſtice pleaſes, I will acquaint him in private with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I never ſaw any good effect of theſe private Proceedings. If he have any thing to offer, he may do it publickly, in the face of Juſtice. And therefore I deſire he may be tried this Term; for he hath had a whole Term's notice, and time enough to conſider what Perſons are material as Witneſſes for him.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Unleſs he do ſhew good Cauſe to the contrary, he muſt be tried this Term.

Mr. Att. Gen. And, my Lord, where 'tis in the ſame County where the Fact was committed, there is the leſs reaſon to ſtay; Criminals in High-Treaſon, the Fact muſt be plain and evident againſt them.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, peradventure he hath been made to depend upon his Plea, and hath been adviſed ſo to do.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, and have been cloſe Priſoner, and not allowed to ſpeak with any body.

L. C. J. If ſo, then it may be a Surprize upon him.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have been allowed nothing to prepare for my Defence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, he ought to be provided for his Tryal this Term. I do not know, my Lord, what Witneſſes he can pretend to have; the Fact was done in Middleſex here, and the Proof of the Circumſtances of that Fact do ariſe here; and I do not know what Surprize he can complain of. As to the Witneſs he tells you of, that is in Holland, he doth not tell you to what purpoſe he is a Witneſs; ſo that you may know whether it be material or not. I know very well, my Lord, in the Old-Baily, when the Prieſts did urge it, that they had Witneſſes beyond the Sea in other Countries, they were not ſuffered to delay their Tryal upon ſuch a pretence. We muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Diſcretion: but we ſuppoſe it will not be a precipitous Proceeding, he having notice of his Tryal all this Term.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, truly, ſince he pretends he is ſurprized, and hath depended upon his Plea, and hath Witneſſes that require ſome time to fetch, we think it reaſonable that he ſhould have till the next Term; and we will defer it till then. We are all of that Opinion, (eſpecially it being ſuch a little Delay) to enable him to have what Witneſſes he doth pretend to have.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I never deſired in this Caſe, nor in any other, nor ever ſhall do, that Juſtice be precipitated. I know theſe open and fair Tryals proceed with ſuch equal ſteps to all Parties, that we need not be haſty, and therefore fore if your Lordſhip be of that Opinion, I ſubmit to it, ſo it be the firſt Week of the next Term.

L. C. J. The firſt Week it cannot be.

Mr. Att. Gen. Within the firſt ſeven days, I mean.

L. C. J. The firſt Thurſday in the Term. And take notice, Mr. Fitz-Harris, that is the Day appointed for your Tryal.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I deſire Liberty to ſee my Wife, and have a Sollicitor in the mean time.

L. C. J. I will tell you, for that, Mr. Fitz-Harris, the Court would never deny any thing of that nature to any one in your Condition and Circumſtances; but your Wife makes an ill uſe of the Liberty we granted her: and if ſhe do make an ill uſe of it, then the Court muſt reſtrain her, and hold their hands over her. If we were ſatisfied ſhe would uſe the Liberty lawfully, and not abuſe it——

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I am ſure ſhe will uſe it lawfully hereafter, and make no ill uſe of it.

L. C. J. Look you, upon her good uſage of it, if ſhe will fairly demean her ſelf, and not abuſe it again, we are willing to take off the laſt Rule, and ſhe ſhall have the ſame Liberty ſhe had before that Rule.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With this, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, we deſire there may be ſome other Judge of her Prudence beſides her ſelf, and the Lieutenant of the Tower be by.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I deſire I may have a Sollicitor; for he was never allowed to come and ſpeak to me, tho I had a Rule for him.

L. C. J. Look you, as to your Counſel now, which was the main Reaſon why you prayed a Sollicitor, we cannot allow you them any more; for now we are come to a Matter of Fact only, and we cannot by the Rules of Law allow you Counſel. Therefore what need you have of a Sollicitor, I cannot tell; his buſineſs before, was to go from you to the Counſel, and from them to you, which is ceaſed now. But this, Mr. Attorney, if he have a deſire to ſee Papers, and would ſend for any Papers that concern his Defence, ſo as they contain no new Treaſonable Matters and Contrivances, he ought ſure to have them; and if he have Papers at his Houſe, or any where elſe, which he deſires to make uſe of in his own Defence, being inſpected by the Lieutenant, to ſee that there be no Matter of Evil contained in them, he may have one to do that for him without any Danger.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I do not oppoſe it, my Lord: but I deſire that all caution may be uſed that can be; for this Sollicitor of his is a Lawyer, and writes Tracts of Law: but any thing material for his Defence I am not againſt.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, you need not fear any harm will be that ways: for he is not to ſpeak with him alone.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I hope his Sollicitor may come to him to take Inſtructions how to ſend for his Witneſſes?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You can tell how to do that ſurely without a Sollicitor.

L. C. J. Juſt as the laſt Rule was, let there be another Rule made. For he muſt have all juſt Advantages to enable him for his Defence.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I hope I ſhall have a Rule of Court to make my Witneſſes appear.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That you may have without Motion.

L. C. J. We will give you any thing that will enable you to make a fair Defence.

Cl. of Cr. He ſhall have Subpœnas for his Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you muſt expect no other notice. You muſt take notice now, that upon the firſt Thurſday in the next Term, that you are to receive your Tryal here. Take the Priſoner back.

Mr. Att. Gen. In order to his Tryal, I deſire the Sheriff may bring in the Freeholders Book to the Clerk of the Crown, to ſtrike the Jury.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we will conſider of that, how far we can do that, and the Courſe of the Court ſhall be obſerved. But I doubt how we can.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the Practice in Tryals at the Bar.

L. C. J. In Civil Cauſes, but not in Criminal, that I know of.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have reaſon to deſire it; becauſe we are afraid of ſome Practice in this Cauſe, and fear there may be ſome odd Carriage in the Return of them.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. May I not ſee my Wife before I go hence?

L. C. J. With all our hearts; ſhe may go to you, and with you Sir, if you pleaſe: we will not hinder you of her Company, ſo ſhe carry her ſelf fairly.

Then the Lieutenant took back his Priſoner.

The Tryal of Edward Fitz-Harris Eſq; 33 Car. II. 1681.

Trinity-Term, 33 Car. II. Regis.

ON Thurſday 9 June 1681. Edward Fitz-Harris was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench; and the Court being ſate, proceeded thus:

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I moved you the other day, that before Mr. Fitz-Harris's Tryal, he might give ſuch Evidence as he had to give againſt Sir John Arundel, and Sir Richard Beiling, concerning the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, before he be convicted of Treaſon; and we underſtood that it was the direction of the Court, that we might move it this Morning before Conviction, that he might declare upon Oath here in Court what he knows of that Matter againſt thoſe Gentlemen: for after he is convicted, I believe it will be too late for us to think of it.

Mr.

Mr. Godfrey hath a great deal of reaſon to deſire what I now move, that his Brother's Murderers may be proſecuted, and we hope all the favour that can be granted in ſuch a Caſe, will be granted unto us: for there has been a Deſign of late ſet on foot, to make it be believed that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey murdered himſelf, notwithſtanding that clear Evidence that hath been already given of this Matter, and notwithſtanding that ſeveral Perſons have been convicted and attainted upon that Evidence. So that theſe Gentlemen think themſelves obliged to proſecute this Matter as far as they can, and beg of your Lordſhip, that what can be done for them may. And particularly, that he may perfect his Diſcovery againſt the two named at his laſt Examination before the Grand-Jury; and that his Examination about them may now be taken by the Court.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Thompſon, that that you moved before, had ſome reaſon in it, that he might be examined, and give Evidence to a Grand-Jury, and we told you he ſhould; but if there be never a Grand-Jury ſworn, yet who can he give Evidence to? Would you have us take his Examination, and afterwards give it in Evidence to the Grand-Jury?

Mr. Thomp. My Lord, I only ſay, then 'tis our hard hap that he is not examined before a Grand-Jury.

L. C. J. But do you think it is fit for you to move this now?

Mr. Thomp. My Lord, I underſtood it was permitted me by the Court the other day to move again, and I move by the direction of my Client, and I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. You know it cannot be granted. Go on, and ſwear the Jury.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg that my Wife and Sollicitor may be by, to help and aſſiſt my Memory.

L. C. J. Let your Wife be by you, if ſhe pleaſe, and if you think 'tis any advantage to you, with all our hearts; if ſhe will, let her go down to you.

Cl. of Crown. Cryer, make an O yes: Whoever can inform, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I know not what the effect of this may be; if his Wife be inſtructed to inſtruct him, that ought not to be permitted, with ſubmiſſion: ſuppoſe ſhe ſhould come to prompt him (and for certain ſhe is well documentized) that your Lordſhip won't ſuffer.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, ſhe comes prepared with Papers in her Hand.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I won't ſhew them without my Lord's Permiſſion.

L. C. J. If ſhe brings any Papers that are drawn by Counſel, prepared for him, without doubt 'tis not to be allowed.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. No, no, 'tis only my own little Memorandums.

L. C. J. Whatſoever is written by her Huſband, for help of his Memory, in Matter of Fact, let her do it.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I humbly beg my Sollicitor may be by me too.

L. C. J. We allow no Sollicitors in Caſes of High-Treaſon.

Cl. of Crown. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand, (which he did:) thoſe good Men which thou ſhalt hear called, and perſonally appear, &c.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I deſire they may be diſtinctly named as they are in the Pannel, that I may know how to make my Challenges.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I muſt humbly offer it to your Lordſhip's Conſideration for the Precedent's ſake, Whether any Perſon can aſſiſt the Priſoner as to Matter of Fact?

L. C. J. Yes, and 'tis always done to take Notes for him, and to help his Memory.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But, my Lord, I would acquaint your Lordſhip what is the thing we find in this Caſe; here is a particular Note given into the Priſoner, of the Jury, pray be ſure to challenge ſuch and ſuch, and don't challenge the reſt. God forbid but his Memory ſhould be help'd in Matters of Fact, as is uſual in theſe Caſes; but no Inſtructions ought to be given him ſure. And, my Lord, the Example will go a great way; and therefore we are in your Lordſhip's directions about this matter.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope 'tis but juſt, for I have had all the diſadvantages in the World. I have been kept cloſe Priſoner, and have not been permitted to have any one come to me, to help me in my preparation for my Tryal.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment in point of Law, I doubt not you will do the King right, as well as the Priſoner; I could not get a Copy of the Pannel, till laſt night about 4 a-clock: here is prepared a Copy with Croſſes and Marks who he ſhould challenge, and who not; and truly, my Lord, ſince I had the Pannel, upon looking over it, I do find the Sheriff hath returned three Anabaptiſt Preachers, and I know not how many Fanaticks: and ſince there are ſuch Practices as we find in this Caſe, we doubt there may be more, and therefore I pray ſhe may be removed.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I will not be removed.

Fitz-Harris. Is it fit or reaſonable for me, that I ſhould ſtand here without any help?

Mr. Att. Gen. In caſe you be guilty of this, you deſerve no great favour.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Surely the Court will never ſuffer the King's Counſel to take away a Man's Life at this rate.

L. C. J. Mrs. Fitz-Harris, you muſt give good Words: And if you will not be modeſt, and civil, I promiſe you we will remove you preſently.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. If you do remove me, that is the worſt you can do to me: what ſhould I come here for, without I may help my Husband?

L. C. J. If ſhe do bring him Inſtructions to except againſt ſuch and ſuch Jury-men, ſhe does miſbehave herſelf, and muſt be removed.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Paper that we ſpeak of is a Copy of the Pannel, and there are particular Marks, a great many.

Mr. Sol. Gen. A Woman hath a very great Privilege to protect her Husband, but I never yet knew that ſhe had liberty to bring him Inſtructions ready drawn.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, the Lady Marchioneſs of Wincheſter did aſſiſt in the Caſe of my Lord Stafford, and took Notes, and gave him what Papers ſhe pleaſed.

L. C. J. Sure 'tis no ſuch huge matter to let a Man's Wife ſtand by him, if ſhe will demean her ſelf handſomely and fairly.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not, if that were all; but when ſhe comes with Papers inſtructed, and with particular Directions, that is the aſſigning him Counſel in point of Fact.

L.

L. C. J. Let her ſtand by her Husband, if ſhe be quiet: But if ſhe be troubleſome, we ſhall ſoon remove her.

Fitz-Harris. 'Tis impoſſible I ſhould make my defence without her.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I ſee it is a perfect formal Brief.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Muſt he have nothing to help himſelf?

Fitz-Harris. In ſhort, the King's Counſel would take my Life away, without letting me make my Defence.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deſire not to take away any Papers from him, if they be ſuch as are permitted by Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, his Innocency muſt make his Defence, and nothing elſe.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, we are in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether you will allow theſe Papers.

L. C. J. Let us ſee the Paper.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I will deliver them to my Wife again.

L. C. J. Let it be ſo.

Cl. of Cr. Call Sir Will. Roberts, (who did not appear:) Sir Michael Heneage.

Sir Michael Heneage. My Lord, I am ſo ill, I cannot attend this Cauſe.

L. C. J. We cannot excuſe you, Sir Michael; if there be not enough beſides, 'tis not in our power to excuſe you.

Sir Michael Heneage. I muſt ſuffer all things rather than loſe my Health.

L. C. J. Well, ſtand by, 'till the reſt are called.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Will. Gulſton, Nicholas Rainton, Charles Umphreville, (they did not appear:) John Wildman.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, before he be called to the Book, whether he be a Free-holder in Middleſex.

Major Wildman. I am a Proſecutor of this Perſon, for I was a Parliament-Man in the laſt Parliament, and I dare not appear, my Lord, for fear of being queſtioned for Breach of the Privileges of the Commons.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray he may anſwer that queſtion, whether he be a Free-holder in Middleſex.

Major Wildman. I pray to be excuſed, upon a very good reaſon; I was one of them that voted the Impeachment againſt this Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder in Middleſex, upon your Oath?

L. C. J. Look you, Major Wildman, you are returned upon a Pannel here, you have appeared, and your Appearance is recorded; you muſt anſwer ſuch Queſtions as are put to you, 'tis not in your power to deny.

Maj. Wildman. I beg the Excuſe of the Court, I cannot ſerve upon this Jury.

L. C. J. If you be no Free-holder, the Law will excuſe you.

Maj. Wild. Perhaps there may be ſome Eſtates in my Name, that may be Free-holds; perhaps, I may be ſome Truſtee or the like.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any Free-hold in your own Right in Middleſex?

Maj. Wild. I don't know that I have; if it be in the Right of another or as Truſtee, I take not that to be a Free-hold.

Cl. of Cr. Call Thomas Johnſon.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Let him be ſworn, there is no Exception againſt him.

L. C. J. Hold your peace, or you go out of Court if you talk again.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I do not ſay any thing that is any harm, my Lord.

Cl. of Cr. Swear Tho. Johnſon: You ſhall well and truly try, &c.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I pray the Clerk may not skip over the Names as they are returned.

Cl. of Cr. Sir, I call every one as they are in the Pannel; and don't do me wrong.

L. C. J. It may be he does not call them as they are mentioned and ſet down in the Pannel, for all have not appeared; but calls thoſe only whoſe Appearance is recorded.

Cl. of Cr. I have called them as they are here ſet down.

L. C. J. Well, let them all be called for; may be they will appear now that did not appear before.

Cl. of Cr. Maximilian Beard.

Mr. Beard. My Lord, I deſire to be excuſed, I am very infirm and very antient, Threeſcore and Fifteen Years of Age at leaſt.

L. C. J. Why did the Sheriff return you, if you be of that Age, you ſhould be put out of the Free-holders Book? But ſtay, you are here impannel'd, and have appeared; if there be enough, we will excuſe you.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He ought to have Witneſſes of his Age; and if he would not have appeared, he might have had a Writ of Privilege for his diſcharge in regard of his Age.

L. C. J. Well, we will ſet by him, if there be enough beſides, we will ſpare him.

Cl. of Cr. Iſaac Honywood, (he did not appear.) Lucy Knightley, (who was ſworn.) Henry Baker.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I challenge him for the King.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, why ſhould he challenge him? I deſire to know the Law, whether the two Foremen ſhould not try the Challenge, and not the Court or the Counſel.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If the King challenge, he hath time to ſhew cauſe till the Pannel be gone thro; the Law will have the minus ſuſpecti, but yet if there want any, the King muſt ſhew good Cauſe.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Probyn.

Mr. Att. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Wilford (was ſworn.)

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, muſt not Mr. Attorney ſhew his Cauſe now?

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, either ſide may take their exception to any Man; but the Cauſe need not be ſhewn till the Pannel is gone thro, or the reſt of the Jurors challenged.

Cl. of Cr. John Kent of Stepney.

Mr. Kent. My Lord, I am no Free-holder.

L. C. J. Then you cannot be ſworn here upon this Jury.

Cl. of Cl. John Willmore.

Mr. Att. Gen. We challenge him for the King.

Fitz-Harris. For what Cauſe?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We will ſhew you Reaſons hereafter.

Cl. of Crown. Edward Fitz-Harris hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I humbly beg Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Let him have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Cl. of Crown. You ſhall have them preſently; (Which were given him.)

HE ſtands indicted by the Name of Edward Fitz-Harris, late of the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. for that he as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt illuſtrious, and moſt excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, his natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil; the Love, and true, due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſhould and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with all his Might intending the Peace and common Tranquillity within this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to ſtir up and move; and the Government of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to ſubvert; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the 22d Day of February, in the 33d Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. and divers other Days and Times, as well before, as after, at the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, traitorouſly did compaſs, imagine and intend the Killing, Death, and final Deſtruction of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the antient Government of this his Kingdom to change, and alter, and wholly to ſubvert, and him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, from the Title, Honour, and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to ſtir up and levy within this Kingdom of England. And his ſaid wicked Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect, he the ſaid Edward Fitz-Harris, as a falſe Traitor, together with one Edmond Everard, a Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, did then and there traitorouſly aſſemble himſelf, meet and conſult, and the ſame his Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes, then and there to the ſaid Edmond Everard, in the hearing of divers other Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, openly, maliciouſly, traitorouſly, and adviſedly ſpeaking, did publiſh and declare: And to perſuade and induce the ſaid Edmond Everard to be aiding and aſſiſting in his ſaid traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes, he the ſaid Edward Fitz-Harris, as a falſe Traitor, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly to the ſaid Edmond Everard a great Reward then and there did offer, and promiſe to procure. And for the further compleating of his Treaſons aforeſaid, and to incite the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, as one Man, to riſe, and open Rebellion and Inſurrection within this Kingdom of England to raiſe, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to caſt down and depoſe, he the ſaid Edward Fitz-Harris, as a falſe Traitor, a certain moſt wicked and traitorous Libel, the Title of which is in theſe Engliſh Words following, The true Engliſhman ſpeaking plain Engliſh, traitorouſly, maliciouſly, and adviſedly, in Writing to be made and expreſſed, did then and there cauſe, procure cure and publiſh; in which ſaid Libel the ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, of him the ſaid Edward Fitz-Harris, to excite and perſuade the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to riſe and rebel; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King from the Stile, Honour, and regal Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and depoſe, in writing are expreſſed and declared amongſt other things as followeth: If James (meaning James Duke of York, the Brother of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) be conſcious and guilty, Chs (meaning Charles II. now King of England) is ſo too, believe me (meaning himſelf the ſaid Edward Fitz-Harris) both theſe (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the ſaid James Duke of York) are Brethren in Iniquity, they (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King and James Duke of York) are in Confederacy with Pope and French to introduce Popery and Arbitrary Government, as their Actions (meaning the Actions of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and James Duke of York) demonſtrate. The Parliament's Magna Charta and Liberty of the Subject are as heavy Yokes they'd as willingly caſt off, for to make themſelves (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King and the ſaid Duke of York) as abſolute as their Brother of France. And if this can be proved to be their Aim (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforeſaid Duke of York) and main Endeavour, why ſhould not every true Briton be a Quaker thus far, and let the Engliſh Spirit be up and move us (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England) all as one Man to Self-Defence? nay, and if need be, to open Action, and fling off theſe intolerable Riders? (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the ſaid Duke of York.) And in another place in the ſaid moſt wicked traitorous Libel were contained, amongſt other things, theſe falſe, ſeditious, and traitorous Sentences in theſe Engliſh words following. J. and C. (meaning the ſaid Charles our Sovereign Lord the King, and his ſaid Brother James Duke of York) both Brethren in Iniquity, corrupt both in Root and Branch, as you (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) have ſeen they (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the ſaid Duke of York) ſtudy but to enſlave you (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) to a Romiſh and French-like Yoke. Is it not plain? Have you (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) not Eyes, Senſe or Feeling? Where is that old Engliſh Noble Spirit? Are you (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) become French Aſſes, to ſuffer any Load to be laid upon you? And if you (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) can get no Remedy from this next Parliament, as certainly you (meaning again the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) will not; and that the K. (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is) repents not, complies not with their Advice, then up all (meaning the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King) as one Man. O brave Engliſhmen! Look to your own Defence e'er it be too late, rouze up your Spirits. And in another place in the ſaid moſt wicked and traitorous Libel are contained, amongſt other things, theſe falſe, ſeditious, and traitorous Sentences in theſe Engliſh words following; to wit, I (meaning himſelf the ſaid Edward Fitz-Harris) will only add, that as it is the undoubted Right of Parliaments to make a Law againſt a Popiſh Succeſſor, who would prove deſtructive to our Laws and Liberties; ſo it is their undoubted Right to dethrone any Poſſeſſor that follows evil Counſellors, to the Deſtruction of our Government, (meaning the Government of this Kingdom of England.) And in another place in the ſaid traitorous Libel are contained theſe Engliſh words following: Then let all (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is) be ready, then let the City of London ſtand by the Parliament with Offers of any Money for the maintaining of their Liberties and Religion in any extreme way, if Parliamentary Courſes be not complied with by the King; (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King) againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. and againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided upon this Indictment.

Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded, Not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are, &c.

Cryer. Make Proclamation. O yes, if any one will give Evidence, &c.

Mr. Heath. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt Edward Fitz-Harris, the Priſoner at the Bar; and the Indictment ſets forth, that the 21ſt of February, in the 33d Year of the King, at St. Martins in the Fields, he did compaſs and imagine the Death of the King, and to raiſe War and Rebellion within the Kingdom. And the Indictment does ſet forth, that for the Accompliſhment of this, he did meet and aſſemble with one Edmond Everard, and ſeveral others, and did diſcover this his traitorous Purpoſe to the ſaid Everard, and did perſuade him to aid and aſſiſt therein; and offered him great Rewards if he would ſo do. It further ſets forth, That for the further perfecting of this treaſonable Imagination of the ſaid Edward Fitz-Harris, he did frame and make a treaſonable Libel, and the Title of the Libel is, The true Engliſhman ſpeaking plain Engliſh; and in that treaſonable Libel, are theſe treaſonable words contained, If James be guilty (meaning the Duke of York) Charles (meaning the King) is ſo too, &c. And the ſeveral words, that have been read to you in this Indictment, are contained in the ſaid Libel, which I ſhall not repeat. To this Indictment he hath pleaded, Not Guilty; if we prove it upon him, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, truly 'tis a ſad thing to conſider how many have been found guilty of Plotting againſt the King, but none have gone ſo far as the Priſoner at the Bar; for they deſigned only his Death, but this Perſon would have carried on his Treaſons by a means to ſlander him while he was alive, and thereby to excite the People to ſuch a Rebellion as you have heard. I ſhall add no further words, the thing is not aggravatable, 'tis ſo great an Offence in it ſelf; but we will call our Witneſſes, and go to our Proof.

Mr. Attor. Gen. My Lord, yeſterday you had here the Primate of Ireland, who was found guilty for a notable High-Treaſon in Ireland: you have now this day before you one of his Emiſſaries, who is come over into England, and who has here committed one of the moſt execrable Treaſons that ever was brought into a Court of Juſtice; I muſt needs ſay, that it will appear to all all the Auditors this Day, that here is the highest Improvement of the Popish Plot, and aggravated with such Circumstances as shew they have out-done themselves in it. Hitherto those Cases that have been brought into Judgment before you, have been the Attempts upon the Life of the King, in Instances either of Shooting, Stabbing or Poisoning: I say, hitherto they have gone no further than to practise these things, and that by Popish Hands, they have kept the Plot amongst themselves; but now they have gone one step further, that is, by attempting to poison all the Protestants of England as much as in them lies, that they should by their own Hands destroy one another, and their lawful Prince, that is the Treason now before you, and I take it with Submission, they can go no further. For 'tis impossible to arise to a higher piece of Malice and Villany than to set the Peoples Hearts against their Prince, and to set them together by the ears one against another. This we shall prove, in the Course of our Evidence, to be the Design of the Prisoner at the Bar. The general Design hath been opened to you out of the Indictment, to kill and destroy the King, and to depose him from his Government; and we shall charge him with all those several Overt-Acts, which I shall open to you: First, Several Meetings to consult about this Matter at Grays-Inn and several other places; which, my Lord, I think there is no question to be made, but is an Overt-Act to make High-Treason. We shall go further, and shew that these Designs he had to depose the King, and raise his People against him, he does declare openly to Mr. Everard; which is another Overt-Act within the new Statute. We shall, my Lord, go further yet, and prove the great Rewards he hath offered to Mr. Everard for joining with him, and being assisting to him in this Affair, part in ready Mony, and part in annual Pension. And there your Lordship will find where the Spring is, from whence all these Mischiefs arise, some foreign Power; but the Papists, the Priests are at the bottom of it, they are the Persons that set him on, and these must draw in a great Person beyond Sea, who must reward this Gentleman for being a Partner in this Plot. And we shall prove some Mony paid in Hand. But then, my Lord, that which was the Effect of this Consult, is the framing this pernicious Libel; for so give me leave to call it.

My Lord, the Indictment is modest, but when you come to hear the Libel it self read, you will find it so; and it was not Prudence, that so vile a thing should appear upon Record. And truly, I believe in a Protestant Kingdom 'tis the first Attempt of this nature that ever was: For, my Lord, it is to defame the whole Royal Family, 'tis to stain their Blood, and to make them vile in the sight of the whole Kingdom, and of all Posterity. My Lord, this Libel in its Particulars chargeth that most excellent and innocent Person, our late and never to be forgotten Sovereign King Charles I. to be the Author of the Irish Rebellion; it charges our present Prince with the Exercise of Arbitrary Government, to be a Papist, to be a Person that deprives his Subjects of all manner of Liberty, and Property; in express Terms it charges him with this, than which nothing can be more false: for there is none of his Subjects, I think, but must say that our most Gracious Prince, for the time he hath reigned may vie with the best 20 Years of any of his Predecessors, for the preserving the Liberty and Property of the People, for giving us Peace and Plenty all our Time, for the permitting and securing to them the free Current of the Law, and for securing their Civil and Religious Rights.

My Lord, when we have gone through the Evidence about the Contexture, and this Libel is read and produced, we shall prove the Design of it, and how it was framed, and the Eyes of the World will be opened, and you will see that this was no Intention, no Engine framed to trapan, or ensnare any private Person, or as it was secretly bruited abroad, to be put in such Mens Pockets; but a piece of the greatest Machiavillian Policy that ever was invented, and prepared for a publick Press, as a Catholick Poison to infect all the King's Subjects, and excite them one against another.

And we shall prove that this Person in the several Methods that I have open'd, hath proceeded to accomplish his traitorous Designs of dethroning the King: nay, he hath said, 'tis resolved among them now that nothing else will do it, but the poisoning the Hearts of the People with Hatred to their King, and Malice against one another. And when we have proved the matter fully, through all the Parts, we must leave it to the Jury, who I question not will do themselves, and all other Protestants Right, as well as their Prince. We shall now go to our Evidence, and first we will call Mr. Everard; but, my Lord, I would only first observe to you, that this Gentleman, Mr. Fitz-Harris, and Mr. Everard, were both imployed in the French King's Service, and there acquainted together. Mr. Everard came early off, and became a Protestant, leaving the French King's Service, because he found their several Plots and Designs upon England. Then comes Mr. Fitz-Harris to him, and because he looked upon Mr. Everard not to be rewarded according to his Merits, invites him over, with telling him those things that the Witness himself will tell you, back again to the French Interest.

Then Mr. Everard was sworn.

Fitz-Harris. Look me in the Face, Mr. Everard.

Mr. Everard. I will, Sir.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Will you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, how you came first acquainted with the Prisoner, and then tell the several Passages between you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell your whole knowledge of this Matter.

Mr. Everard. My Lord, I came acquainted with Mr. Fitz-Harris beyond Seas, when we both were in the French King's Service; and upon Conference with him of late, especially about the beginning of February last, he renewed his Acquaintance, though at several times before we had several Discourses, whereof I did not take much notice: but in those Meetings in February last, and in those Visits he paid me then, we had several Discourses tending to represent the Disadvantages and Sufferings I sustained, for adhereing to the Protestant and English Interest; and besides comparing in the other Ballance, what Advantages I might expect if I would re-ingratiate my self into their Interest.

L. C. J. What Interest?

Mr. Everard. The French, and the Popish Interest. And there was an opportunity in my hands, wherein I might be serviceable to my self and others;

others; and he told me there were ſeveral Perſons, amongſt whom were ſome Parliament-Men, that did adhere to the French Intereſt, and gave an account to the French Ambaſſador of every day's Proceedings: and as I was looked upon to be the Author of a kind of Pamphlet, that was called, An Anſwer to the King's Declaration, concerning the Duke of Monmouth; therefore I ſhould be fit to ſerve them, eſpecially to make ſuch another Pamphlet to reflect upon the King, and alienate him from his People, and his People from him. Whereupon I told him I would do any thing that was for my true Intereſt, but I did conceive with my ſelf, that that was none of it. He appointed a time when we ſhould meet again, but I ſent him a Note, I could not meet poſſibly that Day, which was Monday, as I remember the 21*ſt* of February: However he was impatient, and came to me, and told me he would give me Heads and Inſtructions tending to that Pamphlet I was to write, to ſcandalize the King, and raiſe a Rebellion, and alienate the Hearts of the Kingdom, and ſet the People together by the ears. Upon this he gave me ſome Heads by word of Mouth: as ſoon as I parted from him, I met with one Mr. Savile of Lincolns-Inn, and as ſoon as I met with him I acquainted him with what was paſſed, and told him I wiſhed rather than ten Pound I had met him ſooner, half an Hour before. Why, what is the occaſion, ſays he? Why, ſaid I, there is a Perſon that hath had ſuch and ſuch Diſcourſe with me, and one of his main Errands amongſt others, is for me to write a ſcandalous Libel reflecting upon his Majeſty and the Government. And upon this I ſaid, Mr. Savile, I ſhall not confer with him any further, [unleſs I have ſomebody by to witneſs what he ſays, he ſpeaks moſt commonly French, and ſometimes Engliſh; and therefore it muſt be one who underſtands both the Tongues well. So we went into the City together that Afternoon to one Mr. Crow's, who is a Silkman in Queenſtreet; ſaid we, Sir, you are a moderate impartial Man, and underſtand French, we deſire you will be preſent to over-hear ſome Propoſals that are made to me tending to ſet our Country together by the ears, and he comes from a Popiſh Party. Mr. Crow ſaid, He would be willing to undertake any thing to ſerve the Proteſtant Engliſh Intereſt, but he would not undertake to ſpeak French ſo well as to be able to underſtand all nice Paſſages, and Words that might be propoſed. And then Mr. Savile and I went to Mr. Smith, a Durham Gentleman, and made him the ſame Propoſal I had made to Mr. Crow, deſiring him that he would come and over-hear our Diſcourſe, and I would place him in a fit place. Mr. Smith aſſented to the Propoſitions, and ſaid he would. Mr. Smith asked me what Day and Time we were to meet; I told him, to-morrow at ſix or ſeven a-clock at Night at my Chamber in Grays-Inn: but further he ſaid we muſt have other Witneſſes, for one Witneſs would not be ſufficient; ſo we went to the Exchange Coffee-houſe, and there me met with Sir William Waller, to whom we made the ſame Propoſal, that ſince we muſt have ſome that underſtood French and keep the thing ſecret, till it were time to have it come out, he would pleaſe to undertake it. Sir William Waller promiſed to come, but failed that firſt Meeting, which was to be on the Tueſday; then we went to another French Merchant, who was propoſed by Mr. Savile, but he was not within: ſo then we muſt rely upon one Witneſs for that Meeting. Mr. Fitz-Harris was to meet me about Two a-clock at my Chamber in Grays-Inn, where Mr. Smith and Mr. Savile were to meet likewiſe, and they came firſt to the Tavern juſt at the Corner of Fuller's-Rents, which hath a proſpect into the Court: And from thence I ſaw Mr. Fitz-Harris in the Court pointing to another Gentleman that was with him, up to my Chamber, and he was walking ſuſpiciouſly up and down. Then I went out of the Tavern, and came up to my Chamber, and after a little while Captain Fitz-Harris came up to my Room; I placed him in another Room, where my Wife was, and ſhut the Door to, whilſt I ſent word to Mr. Smith to come into the outer Room, and ſhut himſelf into my Cloſet. There was Mr. Smith in the Cloſet, and there was an hole or two for the purpoſe made through both the Planks of the Boards and Hangings, but the Hangings hung over the Hole that it might not be diſcerned by Mr. Fitz-Harris: and he could raiſe it, and then ſee who was in the Room, and hear their Words; for I placed my Chair towards the Cloſet which had an Angle outwards, and now and then I did ſtand againſt the Hole, and now and then ſat, to give Mr. Smith Advantage, and to give Mr. Fitz-Harris no Suſpicion. When we were ſo placed, Mr. Fitz-Harris asked me what I had done as to the thing propoſed, this Libel that I was to draw up; I ſaid I was buſy, and had not been able to finiſh it, but here are ſome Heads of it, ſaid I, and ſhewed him half a dozen Lines drawn up together; and when I had read them, Sir, ſaid I, is this your Mind? yes, ſaid he, but I muſt add much more than this is to it. Then Mr. Fitz-Harris proceeded to give me further Inſtructions; and ſo repeated what Inſtructions he had given me before, that the King and all the Royal Family muſt be traduced to be Popiſhly and Arbitrarily inclined from the beginning, that King Charles I. eſpecially had an hand in the Iriſh Rebellion, and that likewiſe King Charles II. that now is, did countenance the ſame, as did appear by his promoting thoſe very Officers that were in the Iriſh Rebellion, Fitz-Gerald, Fitz-Patrick, and Mont-Garrat, which ſhould be named in the Libel. Beſides that, the Act made at the King's coming in, forbidding any to call the King Papiſt, was merely to ſtop Peoples Mouths that they ſhould not call him a Papiſt, when he ſhould incline to further Popery, and did intend by his Actions ſo to do. And beſides his adhering ſo cloſely to the Duke of York's Intereſt, was to be another Argument of it, his hindering the Duke of York from coming to his Tryal, and to be proceeded againſt by the Parliament, and hindering the Officers that were put in by the Duke of York from being caſt out. Another Argument was becauſe thoſe Privy Counſellors and Juſtices of the Peace, that did adhere to the Proteſtant Intereſt, were turned out of all Places of Truſt; and beſides he ſaid it did appear to the People conſequently, that the King was conſcious to himſelf, that he was as guilty as his Brother, and was as much a Papiſt as his Brother, and it was in the Peoples power as well to depoſe a preſent Popiſh Poſſeſſor, as a Popiſh Succeſſor; and that the People muſt be ſtirred up againſt him, and incouraged to blow the Trumpet, and eſpecially that the City and Common Council muſt be incouraged to ſtand by the Parliament: and ſeeing the King was ſuch, that no hopes was to be had of the Parliament at Oxon, they were bound to provide for themſelves, and to advance ſome hundreds or thouſands of Pounds to the Parliament ment to ſettle the Proteſtant Religion without the King, if Parliamentary Ways would not ſucceed. Theſe were ſome of the Inſtructions.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ſay any thing that Day about a Reward you ſhould have?

Mr. Everard. He ſpake in the general about a Reward, but he ſpoke more fully to that the Day after; he did not then come ſo much to Particulars: then ſome part of thoſe Inſtructions I writ in my Table-Book, which is to be produced here, and others of them in another Scroll of Paper. He then deſired to know of me when the Scheme of this thing would be ready; ſaid I, you may come to-morrow; I will, ſays he, come about ſix or ſeven a-clock in the Evening. In the mean time I writ a Letter to Sir William Waller in French, which I ſent by a Porter, and therein I ſaid, Sir, you have miſſed a great opportunity of rendring a great Service to the King, by not coming to ſee me when you were expected; for the Perſon, the French Emiſſary whom I ſpoke of to you, hath propoſed very ſcandalous ſeditious things to be written, and therefore I deſire you not to fail, as you tender the King's Intereſt, to come to my Chamber at ſix a-clock at Night. Sir William Waller received my Letter, and came thither accordingly; I placed Sir William Waller in another Room, and I placed my own Chair at a narrow Table near the place where Sir William Waller was, and there through the Wainſcot and Hangings we made a ſlit, whereby Sir William Waller might ſee into the next Room where Mr. Fitz-Harris and I ſat: but before I placed him there, I ſhewed Sir William Waller two Copies of the Inſtructions for the Libel drawn up. Said I, Sir, here are two Copies which are both the ſame, and I deſire you to counter-mark them, that you may know them again, and thereby ſee what Alteration will be made; for here are no Blots now, and by that you will find the Alteration. Sir William Waller, while my back was turned, counter-marked thoſe Copies. I went into the next Room, and I had not been long there, but Mr. Fitz-Harris came in; I placed the Table near the Alcove, where Sir William Waller was within his hearing and ſeeing. Mr. Fitz-Harris asked me what I had done in the buſineſs: Sir, ſaid I, here are two Copies of it, pray will you ſee how you like it? So he took one, and I took the other.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I muſt interrupt this Gentleman, for I ſee they continue to give the Priſoner Papers.

Fitz-Harris. 'Tis only a Paper of the Names of my Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Everard. My Lord, Captain Fitz-Harris did read one Copy of this Pamphlet, and did amend it; he did add ſome things, and ſtruck out other things: then ſaid I, Is this, Sir, according to your liking? Yes, ſays he, but I muſt add ſomething, for it is not yet full enough; but ſays he, this muſt be fair copyed out; for 'tis not fit for the French Embaſſador's Confeſſor to read, who ſhould preſent it to the Embaſſador. Upon this I told him it ſhould be done againſt the next Day, but in the mean time I told him, Sir, theſe are very treaſonable Things, and this a very treaſonable Project. Oh, ſaid he, the more treaſonable the better, and that will do the effect better. What is that, Sir, ſaid I? That is, ſays he, to ſet theſe People together by the ears, and keep them claſhing, and whilſt they are ſo in claſhing, and miſtruſting one another, the French ſhall gain Flanders, and then ſaid he, we ſhall make no Bones to gain England too. But, Sir, ſaid I, you ſpoke of ſome Recompence for me, what ſhall I have for venturing this? Why, ſays he, after this Libel is delivered up, and that hath gotten you their Confidence that you are truſty, then I will gain the French Confeſſor, who is very ſhy, and may ſo well be, becauſe one of the Confeſſors of an Embaſſador hath been already trapann'd upon ſuch an occaſion. Therefore he is very wary, but he muſt have an aſſurance under your hand, which he ſhall have by this Libel; and then in a few Days you ſhall have forty Guineas, and a monthly Penſion, which ſhall be ſome thouſand of Crowns, for my Maſter the French King is not a Niggard as to theſe Things. The Spaniſh Embaſſador is ſo very niggardly and penurious a Man, that he cannot keep a Table; but ſaid he, you ſhall be well rewarded by the French King, and be not diſcouraged by the danger, for I am in as great danger as you. After ſome ſuch Inſtructions, and Incouragements, that Mr. Fitz-Harris gave to go on in the Work, he departed; and I cannot well call any thing to mind of more Particulars, but upon Queſtions asked me, perhaps I may. But then that time, or the next time, Captain Fitz-Harris gave me half a Sheet of Paper, for I told him I may chance to forget part of your Inſtructions, therefore pray write what is in your own Mind; and in that Paper he writ down that it was in the Peoples power to depoſe a Popiſh Poſſeſſor, as it was to oppoſe a Popiſh Succeſſor, and certain other treaſonable Heads: the half Sheet of Paper is to be produced in Court, under his own Hand, which he hath confeſſed, beſides other treaſonable Inſtructions, that he gave me by word of Mouth. But he at that time departed, and came the next Day to have a Copy of the treaſonable Libel writ out fair, and promiſed me to meet me at the Boarded-Houſe, where we uſually met in Holborn at Mr. Faſhion's; and I did there come and deliver him a Copy of this treaſonable Libel, and he ſaid I ſhould hear in a few Days from him, and ſhould have a Recompence, and this ſhould be but as an Entrance-buſineſs; for I ſhould be brought into the Cabal, where ſeveral Proteſtants, and Parliament-Men, came to give an account to the Embaſſador, how things were tranſacted: but to-morrow, ſaid he I cannot go to receive the Libel back again, for I am to go to Knights bridge.

Fitz-Harris. Where there?

Mr. Everard. To my Lord Howard's; for, ſaid he, you have ſeen his Son often with me, my Lord Howard is very civil to me, he was my Father's Lawyer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Did you write this Libel?

Mr. Everard. Yes, by your Inſtructions I did.

Fitz-Harris. Do you believe I had any traitorous Intention in it?

Mr. Everard. Yes.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. You ſaid the more Treaſon the better, Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Fitz-Harris. Were you put upon this to trapan others?

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis no Trapanning to ask them to come, and hear you give him thoſe Inſtructions, ſure.

Fitz-Harris. But I ask him this Queſtion, Mr. Attorney; Was he put upon it to trapan others?

Mr.

Mr. Everard. Can you mention any Perſon that I was to trapan?

Fitz-Harris. Were you put upon it to trapan the Proteſtant Lords, and the Houſe of Commons?

Mr. Everard. No, I was not.

Fitz-Harris. Is this the ſame Libel that was read in the Houſe of Commons, upon which I was impeached?

Mr. Everard. Yes, I believe, Mr. Fitz-Harris, it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Everard, becauſe he puts you upon it, and to ſatisfy all the World, I ask you upon your Oath, Did any Perſon whatſoever put you upon this to trapan other Perſons, or to put it into their Pockets, as 'tis reported?

Mr. Everard. I was put upon it by none but Mr. Fitz-Harris, of whom I asked, what will be the uſe of this? ſaid he, we ſhall diſperſe them, we know how.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you in what manner?

Mr. Everard. No, he did not tell how.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom was it to be delivered?

Mr. Everard. I was to deliver it to Fitz-Harris, who was to deliver it to the French Confeſſor, and it was to be drawn in the name of the Non-Conformiſts, and put upon them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Religion is Mr. Fitz-Harris of?

Mr. Everard. He was always looked upon to be a Papiſt.

Fitz-Harris. When did you ſee me at Maſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. Hath he not owned himſelf ſo?

Mr. Everard. He hath owned himſelf at ſeveral times to be a Papiſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he ſay to you about your being a Proteſtant, and what Cauſe you had to turn to the Popiſh Religion?

Mr. Everard. He ſaid I was under great diſadvantages, and had much loſs by leaving them, I had better have adhered to their Intereſt ſtill. He had this Diſcourſe with me at ſeveral Meetings, and gave me ſeveral Viſits, ſome at my Chamber, ſome at Grays-Inn Walks, ſometimes at the Houſe with Black Poſts in where we talked of ſeveral things.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I am ſorry he kept ſuch a Rogue as you are Company.

L. C. J. Officer, take her away, if ſhe can't hold her Tongue, and give better Language.

Fitz-Harris. She will ſpeak no more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Stand ſtill then, and be quiet.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was your Diſcourſe at the Ale-houſe?

Mr. Everard. To give Inſtructions to ſet the People together by the ears; and one moſt effectual means was by ſcandalizing and libelling the Government, and eſpecially the King.

Mr. Jones. Did any body elſe aſſiſt you in drawing the Libel?

Mr. Everard. There is at the latter end of the Libel a Paragraph that was taken out of another Book, there was a ſcandalous Libel that was brought by the Woman that carries Paper-Books about, and out of that to make ſhort Work, and out of The Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor, in which he ſaid were many things material; he would have ſome of the Expreſſions of this Libel taken: ſo I copied ſome of the Queries out of that Paper which was ſaid to be a Letter intercepted to Roger L'Eſtrange, and that day that I was under examination before Mr. Secretary Jenkins, that Libel lay before him upon his Table. He asked me if I had ſeen that, I told him yes, for I had copied in that Paper that was the Libel, thoſe Queries; and then ſaid he, here is a Warrant to be given out againſt Curtis for it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. After ſuch time that you had carried him the Copy that Sir William had marked, and he amended it, did you ſhew it Sir William Waller preſently?

Mr. Everard. Yes, immediately; and I asked him, Sir, ſays I, is there any Alteration? Yes, ſaid he, I ſee Alterations, and ſhew'd them one. Do you know the difference of Hands, ſaid I? Yes, ſaid he, I do, and ſuppoſe will give you an account of it.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I humbly beg Mr. Everard may be asked who thoſe Parliament-Men were, that were to concur with the French Embaſſador in this Deſign?

L. C. J. Did he name any Parliament-Men?

Mr. Everard. No he did not, he ſaid, I ſhould know them hereafter.

L. C. J. Then he did not name any?

Mr. Everard. No, he did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Smith; (which was done.) Pray, Sir, will you look about, and give an Account what you know.

Mr. Smith. Will you have an Account how it came firſt to my Knowledge?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, the whole, from the bottom to the top, from the beginning to the end.

Mr. Smith. I remember about the 22d or the 21ſt of Feb. either one or the other, Mr. Everard and one Mr. Savile came to my Chamber, and told me the ſame Deſign that Mr. Everard hath repeated before, and that there was an Iriſh Gent. an Officer of the French King's Army, that was to manage the thing; he was one that could ſpeak French very well, and they deſired me to be concerned in it, becauſe I underſtood French. Upon this I told him I would willingly undertake ſuch a buſineſs, if I thought there were any convenient place in the Room where I might hear, and ſee, undiſcovered. After he had told me, as he has before told your Lordſhips, that it was to make a difference between the King and his People, and to miſrepreſent the King, as I ſhall inform you by and by. I went to his Chamber after we had ſpoke to Mr. Crow, who would not undertake to ſpeak French ſo well as to be capable of underſtanding all; but at laſt we met Sir William Waller, who undertook the Matter. I walked immediately after Dinner to the Chamber, and ſaw the Conveniences, and the next Night we expected Sir W. Waller; but he not coming that Night, I went into the Cloſet my ſelf till Fitz-Harris came according to the appointment. When Fitz-Harris came, there were two Chairs ſet, one Chair next the Cloſet where I ſtood, and another oppoſite againſt me; that oppoſite againſt me, was that where Mr. Fitz-Harris ſat, and Mr. Everard was next cloſe to me, and I looked out thro the hole, and I heard there were ſome little Diſcourſes about the buſineſs in hand. At laſt Mr. Everard ſtands up, and goes to the Side-board, and brings a piece of Paper, about half a Sheet, as I think, with him; and he read it, which was a ſeditious kind of Paper, which I ſhall tell you of by and by: and he asked him in French, whether this were agreeable or no; to which the Gent. anſwered, it was well, but ſomething muſt be added to it. Upon this, Mr. Everard took out his Note-book, and read ſomething therein, therein, and then Mr. Everard desired him to instance what Heads he would have more than were there: to which Fitz-Harris replied, that he would have him to represent the King as a Papist, which might be demonstrated by several Reasons; first his adhering to the Duke of York, and peremptorily resolving to espouse that Interest. The second Reason was the preferring such as were the Duke's Creatures both at Sea and Land, and keeping in Office those that were preferred by the Duke, known Papists; and this was also another Reason to prove that Head of the Instructions, that the King after his Restoration procured an Act to be made, that it should be Treason for any to call him Papist; and this was only that he might the better, and with the more ease, introduce Popery into England. He charged likewise King Charles I. to be a Promoter of the Irish Rebellion, and that Charles II. furthered and approved it; that is another Instance. That the Parliament at Oxford was only a Sham to delude the People, and that such a King was not to be trusted with such a People, neither as to their Lives, Liberties, or Religion; but that the People must provide for themselves in time, and blow the Trumpet boldly. Another Instance was, as it was the undoubted Right of the People to make Laws against, and to oppose a Popish Successor, so they might depose a Popish Possessor. To this effect was the Substance of what was said.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he name a Reward that Mr. Everard was to have?

Mr. Smith. There was a Reward mentioned, but I don't remember any Particulars.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell who set him on work?

Mr. Smith. He said, if they did but set England together by the ears, the French would get Flanders, and at length prevail here, and Mr. Everard should get an Interest in the Common-Council, and make it his business that they should make a kind of an Address to the Parliament, and promise to stand by them with their Lives and Fortunes in opposing Popery, and Arbitrary Government, and if Parliament-ways failed, to assist in another way; and if the King hindred the Duke of York to come to a legal Tryal, that then they should take other Courses.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he desire from Mr. Everard, when he seemed to boggle at his Instructions?

Mr. Smith. Mr. Everard said, he would do these things, yet he was in great danger; why, says Mr. Fitz-Harris, so am I, and a great many more. What other Conference was between them, I know not, for I never saw them together after.

Mr. Ser. Jefferies. Look you, Sir, is this the same Person?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I did know him to be the same Person that Night he was taken.

L. C. J. You could see him where you were?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I saw clear enough, there was three Candles lighted, and I was as near to him, as I am to your Lordship.

L. C. J. You were not in the Room?

Mr. Smith. I was in a little Closet close by.

Mr. Att. Gen. You know nothing of the Paper of Instructions?

Mr. Smith. I remember he told me of such an one, but I was not there the second Night.

Sir Fran. Withins. Mr. Everard said, they were Treasonable things, what then said Fitz-Harris?

Mr. Smith. He said the more Treason was in them, the better.

Mr. Ser. Jefferies. And the Particulars were to set the People together by the ears, and to bring in the French King.

Mr. Smith. It is all one in Terms.

Mr. Ser. Jefferies. How was it?

Mr. Smith. That the King and the People should be set at variance, then the French King would fall upon Flanders and Holland, and afterwards would take England in his way, and make no bones of it.

Mr. Ser. Jefferies. Will you ask him any Questions, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Do you believe that I did it with a Treasonable Intention?

Mr. Smith. Sir, I am not to judge of that, I am not of your Jury, nor to answer any such thing.

Fitz-Harris. What do you think, Sir, pray?

Mr. Smith. You could have no good Design to bring about by any such matter (I think) as this Paper is.

Fitz-Harris. Is this the same Paper that was read in the House of Commons?

Mr. Smith. Sir, I was not of the House of Commons, I don't know what was read there.

Mr. Johnson. Mr. Everard did seem to hint at a Design among some Protestant Lords, and Parliament-Men, and others, Dissenters from the Church of England; I desire to know whether Mr. Smith heard those Words?

L. C. J. That was not the first Night.

Mr. Smith. I did not hear it.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Smith was not present at the second Meeting, then Sir Will. Waller was there, it was only the first Night Mr. Smith was there, and he speaks to that. Therefore as to the Alteration of the Copy, and some other things, he tells you that was done the second Night, and then was the Discourse concerning the French Confessor, and those other things which you mention.

Mr. Att. Gen. I believe the Jury misapprehend Mr. Everard in that too.

L. C. J. it was only what Fitz-Harris told him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I see the thing stick with the Jury, therefore I would fain ask Mr. Everard this Question, Did you declare any such thing, or was it Mr. Fitz-Harris that told you?

Mr. Everard. Mr. Fitz-Harris told me, that several Parliament-Men were joined with the French Ambassador to give him an account of things, but he told me besides, this must be drawn up as it were in the Name of the Non-Conformists, to father it upon them; yet when there was one word in it thou, as if it were in the Quakers Name, no, says he, it must not be so, but it must be under the name of all the Non-Conformists, that it may be common to all the discontented Party.

L. C. J. So you must take the Sense of this right, Gent. It is not, Mr. Everard tells you, some Parliament-Men and Lords were engaged in this business, but Mr. Fitz-Harris's Design was to engage Everard, and he urged what he could to encourage him to it. So that the Arguments he used were, that some Lords and Parliament-Men were engaged in this, to encourage him to go on.

Mr. Johnson. 'Tis true, my Lord, so that here does appear there was some other Interest than the French Interest in this matter, if what Mr. Fitz-Harris said was true.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Fitz-Harris ſaid ſo, to engage him.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Johnſon, we do all verily believe and hope, there was no ſuch thing as that any Lord, or any of the Commons of England were ſo engaged; it was his Intereſt, as Mr. Fitz-Harris took it, to mention it ſo, to engage this Gentleman.

Mr. Everard. I did not ſay Lords.

L. C. J. What did you ſay then?

Mr. Everard. Parliament-Men in general.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then ſwear Sir Will. Waller, (which was done.)

Sir Fran. Withins. Pray, Sir William, will you give an account of what you know of this matter?

Sir Will. Waller. My Lord, the laſt time I was here in this Court, being ſummoned to give in my Evidence, I did make ſome difficulty of it, upon the account that this Perſon was impeached by the Commons of England in Parliament; but Mr. Juſtice Jones having declared the Law required me in ſuch a Caſe to give in my Evidence, I am now ready to give it in, and ſhall do it as briefly as I can.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, pray go on.

Sir Will. Waller. My Lord, upon the 22d or 23d of Feb. laſt, Mr. Everard met me in the City, and told me, he had a buſineſs of very great concernment to diſcover to me; whereupon, my Lord, we went into a place where we might conveniently diſcourſe together; and he told me, in ſhort, that Mr. Edw. Fitz-Harris, that unfortunate Gent. at the Bar, had been with him ſeveral times, and endeavoured to engage him in a buſineſs, which would in effect turn all into Confuſion in England, and render the King very odious in the ſight of his Subjects. Many things he did there tell me, and earneſtly preſſed me to join in this Deſign, to endeavour the Diſcovery of it. I was indeed at the firſt ſhy of meddling with it, being no way in the Commiſſion of the Peace, and ſo not liable to engage in a buſineſs of that nature; but I was afraid to diſcourage Mr. Smith, who voluntarily and ingenuouſly offered himſelf for the Service of his King and Country: but I did not go that Afternoon, being willing to hear whether the buſineſs went on, and was likely to come to any thing. The next Morning Mr. Everard writ to me this Letter, (plucking out a Paper.)

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Read it, Sir.

Sir Will. Waller. My Lord, in effect it was this, to let me know Mr. Smith had been with him the Night before, and that according as they had laid their Buſineſs, Mr. Fitz-Harris did indeed come, and had ſome diſcourſe in the hearing of Mr. Smith, ſeveral things beyond what they had acquainted me with, things of the higheſt nature imaginable; and therefore he earneſtly preſſed me, as I tendred the Welfare of my King and Country, that I would not fail to come that Afternoon to be an Ear-witneſs of the treaſonable Practices that were in hand. I looked upon my ſelf then obliged to go, and did, according to the Directions he gave me, go about three of the clock in the Afternoon to a Tavern at the lower end of Fuller's-Rents near Grays-Inn, and there we were to diſcourſe further of the buſineſs. I had not been there long, but I looked out of a back Window, and ſpied Mr. Fitz-Harris with another Gent. in a brown-coloured Suit, walking juſt before Grays-Inn Door. I don't know the name of the Court, but there I ſaw them walking, but in their going, he frequently looked up at Mr. Everard's Chamber, and pointed at it. When he was gone, I told him it may be Mr. Fitz-Harris may come ſooner than the Hour appointed, therefore I think it will not be amiſs to go without further delay to your Chamber, and ſee what Conveniency there may be to lie ſecret, where I may be both an Eye and an Ear-witneſs. I went to his Chamber, and when I came into the Room, there was a little Cloſet, which I thought not ſo convenient for me, and I rather choſe to look about if I could find another place more convenient. In ſhort, in the next Room I found by my Cane there was a Door, and Hangings over it. I turned up the Hangings there, and in the Door there was a Crevice, which I opened a little with my Knife, and ripped a hole in the Hangings which looked into the Room where the Gent. was to be. And before Mr. Fitz-Harris came, Mr. Everard had given me a large account much after the ſame manner that he hath given in his Teſtimony here, and he ſhewed me two Papers. I took the two Papers, and gave them a private Mark that I might know them again; and withal we placed a Table, and a Chair ready againſt Mr. Fitz-Harris's coming in, and agreed that he ſhould be placed ſo, as that thro the hole I might have a full ſight of him: but leſt by an accident he ſhould be removed from thence, I deſired Mr. Everard to ask him three Queſtions. The 1ſt was, Whether he had not married a Daughter of one Captain Finch's, whoſe Father was killed in his Majeſty's Service. The 2d was, Whether, as he read over the Paper, it was drawn up according to his Inſtructions. And the 3d was, Who was the Perſon that ſhould recompenſe Mr. Everard for running ſo great an hazard. According to theſe Inſtructions the Table being placed, and every thing in Order, about ſeven a clock, or between ſix and ſeven, Mr. Fitz-Harris came in, and being ſat down, he began to ask ſome Queſtions; amongſt others——

[Then ſome Complaint was made by the King's Counſel of Papers given to Mr. Fitz-Harris.]

Fitz-Harris. Pray, my Lord, I beg that Paper may be given to my Wife again.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray it may be given to the Court.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I pray it may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. 'Tis not the duty of a Sollicitor to bring Papers, he was only appointed by the Court to run of Errands; he is not to adviſe, or furniſh with matter of Defence.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, this is an offence committed in the face of the Court, therefore we pray the Perſon that hath done it may be committed.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It is nothing but the Reſolutions of the Houſe of Commons; give it him again.

L. C. J. If Mr. Whitaker lies there to trouble the Court, we ſhall find another place for him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Whitaker hath done his Duty now, and what Service your Lordſhip appointed him; for I think he may be ſent away, for here is no more buſineſs for him.

Sir Will. Waller. Mr. Fitz-Harris came in, I think it was between ſix and ſeven a clock, and coming there, he ſat himſelf down in the Chair prepared for him, and Mr. Everard, according to the Inſtructions I had given him, did ask him ſeveral Queſtions; but Mr. Fitz-Harris did ask him, firſt, whether he had finiſhed the Paper according to ſome

ſome Inſtructions he had given him. Mr. Everard produced two Papers, the one was the Copy of the other, as I counted. Mr. Fitz-Harris had one given into his Hand, and the other Mr. Everard had. Mr. Everard, after he had read a little in it, did ask whether this was drawn up according to the Inſtructions Mr. Fitz-Harris had given: he anſwered, it was exactly according to the Inſtructions he had given him. After he had read a little further, ſays Mr. Everard to him, This is a buſineſs of very dangerous Conſequence, what Reward ſhall I have for running ſo great an hazard? He told him again thus: Sir, ſays he, I think I run an equal hazard with you; for you have a Paper under my Hand, which will render me liable to danger. And then he went on and read further; and if Mr. Attorney will pleaſe to let me ſee the Paper, there is one particular Clauſe in it that I took ſpecial notice of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Would you have the Libel, or the Paper, Sir William?

Sir Will. Waller. The Libel, Sir; (which was given him.) There was one Paſſage in it which I remember, and it was this (ſpeaking of the King's preferring Perſons that were engaged in the late Iriſh Rebellion) the Paper was firſt (prefers) but ſays Mr. Fitz-Harris in French it muſt be (has promoted:) ſeveral Paſſages of this nature I heard him alter, and I ſaw him alter with his Pen. For after ſuch time as Mr. Fitz-Harris was gone out of the Room, I went immediately into the Room where Mr. Everard was, and took notice of the Paper, and the Ink upon the Paper was hardly dry.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that, that is the Original, and the other the Counterpart.

Sir Will. Waller. Here is the Mark, (then pointing to the bottom of the Paper.) Theſe two Papers I marked both together, and this is the Paper, Sir, was mended. I do remember it more particularly, for this Paper I had in my own Cuſtody, and ſigned it afterwards.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, go on.

Sir Will. Waller. He was asking him, Pray Sir, ſaid he, what Reward ſhall I have? Why, ſays Mr. Fitz-Harris, you ſhall be very well paid, you ſhall not need to fear, you ſhall have all manner of incouragement. This buſineſs will bring a conſiderable Advantage to you, and you ſhall be otherwiſe preferred than when you were in the French King's Service. Says he, you cannot but know how you have been ſlighted and neglected, notwithſtanding the Service you have done, and the French Ambaſſador is the Perſon that is to recompenſe you for your Pains; and he ſpoke of forty, but truly I did not hear whether it were Guineas, or what it was, that he ſhould have for preſent Payment; and I heard him ſpeak ſomething of a Penſion, he named three thouſand Crowns, but whether annually, or how, I cannot tell. Pray, Sir, ſaid he, what ſhall I do in this Caſe, for I do not know, I am but in a low Condition, and have occaſion for Money? Why, ſays he, the French Ambaſſador will ſupply you, and you ſhall certainly as ſoon as the Paper is perfected have your Reward; and, ſays he, there are a great many more that we have employ'd in buſineſſes of this nature, to create miſunderſtanding between the King and his People, by which means the French will eaſily over-run Flanders and the Low-Countries, and then England will become an eaſy Morſel. And this is the ſubſtance of what I remember.

Fitz-Harris. Do you believe I had any ſuch Deſign as Treaſon in it?

Sir Will. Waller. I cannot ſay any thing to that, I only ſpeak as to the Matter of Fact.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he declare he had many more employ'd in the Service?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, he did ſay ſo. And ſaid he, there are two Parliament-Men that frequent my Lord Shaftesbury's, who my Lord does not ſuſpect, that do come and ſound him, and then go and acquaint the French Ambaſſador with all they can diſcover.

Fitz-Harris. Is this the ſame Paper by the Oath you have taken, for which I was impeached by the Commons in Parliament?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, 'tis a Copy of the ſame Paper, and that Paper I did read in the Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis the Original.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I deſire to ask Sir W. Waller one Queſtion: Sir, you have heard the Indictment read, then pray tell us whether this very Libel be expreſſed in the Indictment according to what was delivered in the Houſe of Commons?

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſhall hear that by and by your ſelves. For you ſhall hear the Paper read to you with the Indictment.

Sir Will. Waller. This is a Copy of that Paper.

Mr. Johnſon. Does Mr. Fitz-Harris ſtand impeached by the Houſe of Commons upon the ſame Treaſons mentioned in the Indictment?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon the ſame Treaſons?

Sir Will. Waller. Upon this treaſonable Paper he does. For as ſoon as ever I had communicated this Paper to the Houſe, and I had made my Report of the treaſonable Tranſactions of Mr. Fitz-Harris, the Houſe immediately proceeded to the Impeachment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does the Impeachment mention that Paper? Or what particular Treaſon he was impeached upon?

Sir Will. Waller. I know nothing of that. But upon this Paper that Impeachment was grounded, that is all I can ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That this Libel was ſpoken of in the Houſe of Commons, is true; but it does not appear upon the Impeachment that he was impeached for that Libel.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, we have to other Matters. But we deſire to let them alone till the Libel be read.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, we beg we may have the Compariſon of the Libel with the Indictment.

Fitz-Harris. I would ask Sir W. Waller one Queſtion more upon his Oath, Whether he had any deſign of trapanning me, or any body elſe in this thing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any deſign to trapan the Priſoner, or any body?

Sir Will. Waller. No, Mr. Fitz-Harris, indeed not I.

Fitz-Harris. I looked upon you always as a Perſon that was my Enemy.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, becauſe you were a Papiſt?

Fitz-Harris. No, it was upon another account, I appeal to Mr. Juſt. Dolben.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What do you appeal to me for?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Have you known Mr. Fitz-Harris before, Sir William?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, many Years.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Religion was he reputed to be of?

Sir Will. Waller. A Roman Catholick.

Fitz-Harris. I am not bound to continue ſo always.

Mr. Jones. Then ſhew your Converſion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let the Libel be read.

[Then the Paper was produced.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir W. Waller, and Mr. Everard, is that the Paper?

Mr. Everard. This is the Paper.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it interlined with his own Hand?

Mr. Everard. Yes, for there is the Words (have promoted) that I ſaid before, he altered.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, pray mark this now, you will hear the Clauſes contained in the Indictment read, and you ſhall hear this Paper read, and then yourſelves ſhall be Judges whether it does contain them, yea, or no.

Mr. Johnſon. We deſire to ſee it at the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Copy of theſe Clauſes, you may examine it by that.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. 'Tis not the whole Libel, but only ſome Clauſes of it he is indicted for.

L. C. J. Yes, Brother: But what they deſire is only to ſee whether ſo much as is contained in the Indictment, is alſo in the Libel.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Aſtrey then; (which was done.)

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, this is one that is intruſted with the Affairs of the Crown; he is now ſworn, and I ask him this Queſtion for your Satisfaction: Mr. Aſtrey, are the Engliſh Sentences that are in the Indictment alſo comprized in the Libel?

Mr. Aſtrey. My Lord, I did examine this Indictment with the Libel at Mr. Attorney General's Chamber as well as I could, and they are in terminis the ſame; the Words in the Indictment, and the Words in the Libel.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, if all be not in the Indictment that is in the Libel, then perhaps there may be ſome Connexion with what is antecedent, ſomething to explain thoſe Clauſes the Indictment mentions, ſo that they may bear another Conſtruction. Therefore we would have all read.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It muſt be all read to them.

L. C. J. Yes, Brother, it ſhall be wholly read to them, tho it need not be expreſſed de verbo in verbum in the Indictment, yet for their Satisfaction it ſhall be wholly read to them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Theſe Gentlemen are very cautious I percieve.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen, if you will attend the Court, we will give you what Satisfaction we can; pray Mr. Sollicitor give them leave to ſpeak to the Court: What you deſire, Gentlemen, is reaſonable enough, that you may hear the Libel to ſee whether theſe are not Clauſes taken out of a Paper, which may have another Import in the Paper than they have when they are taken out; that is your Meaning.

Mr. Johnſon. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. To that intent you ſhall hear the Libel read diſtinctly; you ſhall have the very Clauſes of the Indictment by you, that you may look upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. The other part of the Libel will do it.

L. C. J. Pray Mr. Attorney don't direct me, they ſhall have the Indictment whilſt Mr. Aſtrey reads the Libel, that they may ſee the Import of the Words. And you do not apprehend it aright: Mr. Johnſon does not deſire to ſee whether Mr. Aſtrey read right, but whether thoſe Clauſes in the Indictment are of the ſame Import in the Indictment that they are of in the Libel; therefore they muſt have a Copy of the Indictment whilſt Mr. Aſtrey reads the Libel: and Mr. Aſtrey, pray mark thoſe Clauſes when you come to them, for you will find they are diſperſed up and down the Libel.

Mr. Aſtrey. I do not ſwear to that very Paper, but I believe you will find they are rightly taken out of the Libel in the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is the Copy of the Indictment-Clauſes.

Cl. of Cr. reads. Friend, I thank thee for the Character of the Popiſh Succeſſor——

[Then one of the Jury having the Copy in his Hand, and not finding it exact, deſired a true Copy.]

Sir Will. Waller. Here is a true Copy of it, I took myſelf and read in the Houſe.

[Then the Libel was read thro, and the Clauſes particularly obſerved.]

L. C. J. Gentlemen, now you have heard it read; and you may obſerve there is nothing in this Paper can extenuate or mitigate the Clauſes, but abundance to make them more horrid and exceedingly aggravated.

Mr. At. Gen. Then call Mr. Savile, who was the Perſon Mr. Everard did meet with, and acquaint with this Buſineſs; (but he did not appear.) Then call Sir Philip Lloyd and Mr. Bridgeman. My Lord, the next Piece of Evidence we ſhall give, is this; Sir William Waller and Mr. Everard do both ſay, that he gave part of his Inſtructions under his own hand, we ſhall produce the Paper, and prove he acknowledged it to be his own Hand.

[Then the Paper was produced.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Who writ that, Sir?

Mr. Everard. Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are thoſe the Inſtructions he gave you to frame this Libel?

Mr. Everard. Theſe are part of the Inſtructions, my Lord; the other part I took in my Table-Book before Mr. Smith.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will prove it by other Witneſſes, Sir Philip Lloyd, and Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Priſoner acknowledge that to be all his own Hand-writing?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Fitz-Harris did acknowledge it to be all writ with his own Hand.

Sir Philip Lloyd ſworn.

Sir Fran. Withins. Look upon that Paper, Sir; (which he did.) Did Mr. Fitz-Harris acknowledge it was his Hand-writing?

Sir

Sir Philip Lloyd. Yes he did; and that I might bear teſtimony of it the better, I writ with my own Hand on the back of it, that he did ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. reads. After this ſham Meeting of the Parliament at Oxon, which no body expects any Good of, it will be neceſſary, &c.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Theſe Words are likewiſe in the Indictment.

L. C. J. When was that given to you, Mr. Everard? for——Mr. Fitz-Harris it ſeems owned it before the Lords in the Council, but Mr. Everard ſwears the Delivery of it; what time was it?

Mr. Everard. It was either Monday, or Tueſday.

L. C. J. In February, was it not?

Mr. Everard. Yes, and I asked Captain Fitz-Harris, according to Sir Will. Waller's Queries, whether he had given Inſtructions according to what he would have contained in the thing? Yes, ſaid he; but have you not enough under my own Hand to do it by?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, we have done our Evidence, we will leave it now to hear what the Priſoner will ſay for his Defence.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, if you have any thing to ſay for your Defence, this is your time to do it.

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, Dr. Oates I deſire may be called.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you have any Witneſſes, name them.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Yes, yes, Dr. Oates; and ask him what he heard Mr. Everard ſay.

L. C. J. What ſay you to Dr. Oates, here he is?

Fitz-Harris. Pray, Doctor, what have you heard Mr. Everard ſay about this Libel ſince I was taken?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, after this Buſineſs was talked of abroad, having heard that Sir William Waller and Everard had made the Diſcovery, I did diſcourſe Mr. Everard about the Buſineſs, and about the Libel. He told me he wrote the Libel, and when I would not believe it, the Man was a little angry that I would not believe it. And then I told him he was a Man very unfortunate in ſpeaking; for he ſpoke but badly. He ſaid tho he was unfortunate in his Tongue, yet he was as fortunate in his Pen, and that he took a great deal out of the intercepted Letter to Roger L'Eſtrange: and I then asked him what the Deſign of it was, he told me it was to be printed, and to be ſent about by the Penny-Poſt to the proteſting Lords, and the leading Men in the Houſe of Commons, and they were to be taken up as ſoon as they had it, and to be ſearched, and to have it found about them. I then asked him if there were any other Perſons concerned in it, beſides thoſe publickly talked of; he told me the Court had a hand in it, and the King had given Fitz-Harris Money already, and would give him more if it had ſucceſs. This he told me at Oxford, and before he went thither, and after.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Sheriff Corniſh, I do beg you what his Majeſty told you, when you came to him from me, when I was at Newgate.

Mr. Sheriff. I do not know what you call me for, Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Fitz-Harris. I deſire you to acquaint the Court what the King ſaid to you when you came to him from Newgate from me.

Mr. Sheriff. My Lord, I ſhall deſire your Lordſhip's Opinion in this Matter, whether it be ſeemly or decent for a Subject to declare what Diſcourſe his Prince is pleaſed to have with him.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, if you give any Evidence, give it. We are not to direct any Witneſs whether they ſhall give their Evidence, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Sheriff, you ought to do it openly if you give any, therefore pray let us hear you.

Mr. Sheriff. My Lord, I cannot remember what was ſaid relating to this particular Matter. There was a great deal his Majeſty was pleaſed to diſcourſe with me concerning things of ſeveral kinds and natures; my Memory may fail me, but if Mr. Fitz-Harris pleaſe to ask as to any particular Matter.

Fitz-Harris. What the King ſaid when you came from Newgate to him, to acquaint him that I would make a diſcovery: Did he ſay I was employ'd by him, and received any Money, and what for?

Mr. Sheriff. My Lord, I do remember ſomething of that kind. When I was giving his Majeſty an account that I found the Priſoner at the Bar in a diſpoſition to make a Diſcovery, his Majeſty was pleaſed to tell me he had often had him before him and his Secretaries upon Examination, and could make nothing at all of what he did ſay or diſcover to them; and his Majeſty was pleaſed likewiſe to ſay, that he had for near three Months before acquainted him, that he was in purſuit of a Plot, a Matter that related much to his Majeſty's Perſon and Government: And the King did ſay, in as much as he made great Proteſtations of his Zeal for his Service, he did countenance and give him ſome Money. I know nothing more.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the King ever declare that he ſaw Fitz-Harris in his Life, or that he ever was in his Preſence?

Mr. Sheriff. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, but before his appearing at the Council-Table, did the King ever ſay he ſaw him, or before he was arreſted for this Fact?

Mr. Sheriff. Yes, his Majeſty was pleaſed to ſay about three Months before, he came to him, and pretended he would diſcover a great Plot to him.

L. C. J. Have you any other Queſtions to ask Mr. Sheriff?

Fitz-Harris. No. Where is Colonel Manſel?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I deſire that if the Priſoner have any more Queſtions to ask me, he may do it, becauſe the Croud is great, and I would go out.

Fitz-Harris. Sir, I have many more Queſtions to ask you, I deſire you would pleaſe to ſtay.

L. C. J. You muſt ſtay if he have any more Queſtions to ask you. Here is Col. Manſel, what ſay you to him?

Fitz-Harris. Colonel, what did you hear Sir William Waller ſay, after this Diſcovery was made?

Col. Manſel. That which I heard Sir William Walser ſay, was this: I had occaſion to ſpeak with Sir James Hayes, and enquiring for him, I found he was at the Dog-Tavern; ſo I went up, and found in the Company Sir William Waller, and another Gentleman, one Mr. Hunt, and ſome more. After the reſt of the Company were gone, and only Sir James Hayes, Mr. Hunt, myſelf, and Sir William Waller left, Sir William was giving an account of this Buſineſs, and ſaid, The King, when I had acquainted him with it, told me I had done him the greateſt Piece of Service that ever I had done him in my Life, and gave me a great many Thanks; but I was no ſooner gone from thence, but two worthy Gentlemen gave me an account that the King ſaid, I had broken all his Meaſures, and he would have me taken off one way or another.

Fitz-Harris. Did he ſay any thing, that it was a Deſign to put the Libel upon the Proteſtant Lords, and the Houſe of Commons?

Col. Manſel. There was that ſaid.

L. C. J. What was ſaid? Don't come with your imperfect Diſcourſes here, but if you give Evidence, tell what was ſaid.

Col. Manſel. Sir William Waller ſaid, that the Deſign was againſt the Proteſtant Lords, and the Proteſtant Party.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I do not doubt that it was againſt the Proteſtant Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. Recollect your ſelf: Was it againſt the Proteſtant Lords, or the Proteſtant Party?

Col. Manſel. He ſaid, the Proteſtant Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. So ſay we.

Fitz-Harris. Did he not ſay it was another ſham Plot, Sir, againſt the Fanaticks, and the Houſe of Commons? Where is Mr. Hunt?

[Mr. Hunt appeared.]

Mr. Hunt. What would you have with me, Mr. Fitz-Harris? I never had any Converſation with you in my Life.

Fitz-Harris. No, Sir; but what have you heard Sir William Waller ſay concerning my Buſineſs?

Mr. Hunt. My Lord, I would rather I had loſt my Hearing for that time, than have heard it to repeat it. Sir William Waller did tell me, at the Dog-Tavern, where was Sir James Hayes, and Colonel Manſel by, after he had read over the Libel to us, there was a great deal of Company more, but he only gave us the Curioſity to ſee what the Libel was: And when he had read it, he did tell us, that the King gave him particular Thanks for that good ſervice he had done him in detecting Fitz-Harris; but he ſaid he was told by two Gentlemen that had heard the King ſpeak it, who were of undoubted Credit, that the King was in an extreme Paſſion, beſtow'd many hard Names on him, and ſaid, he would give any thing in the World to take him out of the World; that he was an inſufferable Vexation to him, and that he had broken all his Meaſures. And he ſaid the ſame things again, in the Preſence of Sir Philip Harcourt, and my Lord Radnor's Son Mr. Roberts, at Capt. Hall's Chamber, in Pembroke-College in Oxon.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he ſay about the Priſoner?

Mr. Hunt. This was about the Libel of Fitz-Harris, that the King gave him particular Thanks about that Buſineſs; and afterwards the King did expreſs great Paſſion, in ſome ſhort time after he was gone: and he did ſay he was informed by two Witneſſes that heard the King ſay it, He knew not what to do with him, be broke all his Meaſures.

Fitz-Harris. Did he not ſay this was a Deſign againſt the Proteſtants?

Mr. Hunt. He did ſay it was a Deſign to contrive theſe Papers into the Hands of People, to make them Evidences of Rebellion; and that was his Apprehenſion of the Thing. And he ſaid further, (for I am a Witneſs here, and muſt ſpeak all my Knowledge) that he had another Plot which he had traced near to a full Diſcovery, a more horrid Plot than this or Dangerfield's; for he ſaid this was the Counterpart of Dangerfield's Plot. I hope he will not deny it, if he be asked, here he is, and upon his Oath; I am not, and I deſire not to take Credit unſworn, but am willing to give my Teſtimony on Oath.

Fitz-Harris. Where is Dr. Cary?

Mr. Sh. Corniſh. Dr. Cary is not well, my Lord, and can't come.

Fitz-Harris. Then Mr. Sheriff Bethell.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I pray I may be diſcharged.

L. C. J. Doctor, we have nothing to ſay to you, but the Priſoner hath more Queſtions to ask you. 'Tis not we that detain you, but you ſtay upon the Priſoner's account.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Sheriff Bethell I deſire to know what you can ſay concerning Mr. Everard.

Mr. Sher. Bethell, My Lord, I know nothing of Mr. Everard as to this Buſineſs, ſave that he told me he writ the Libel himſelf. And I confeſs, my Lord, further, that before ever he knew my Face, or before ever he heard me ſpeak a word in his days, he put in an Information of Treaſon againſt me, at the Inſtigation of one that is known to be my mortal Enemy: and it was ſo groundleſs, that tho it was three Years ago given in, yet I never heard a word of it till Friday laſt. I can bring Witneſſes of this, Perſons that ſent the notice of it to me.

Fitz-Harris. Pray call Mrs. Wall; (who came down from her Seat.)

Fitz-Harris. Mrs. Wall, pray will you tell the Court, have not I conveyed ſome Libels and treaſonable Papers to the King by your means, and received Money upon that account?

Mrs. Wall. Not as I know of.

Fitz-Harris. Did not you receive ſome of them from me to give to the King?

Mrs. Wall. No indeed not I.

Fitz-Harris. Is the Footman here that was by, when you paid me the Money?

Mrs. Wall. Yes, and the Porter too, tho you have not ſubpœna'd them.

Fitz-Harris. How long ago is that?

Mrs. Wall. Two Years ago.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not about Chriſtmas laſt was Twelve-month I gave you the Libel about the King and your Lady; and the King thank'd me extremely, and I had 250 l. given me? Come, Mrs. Wall, don't think to trick me out of my Life in the Caſe, for I will not be tricked ſo. Pray tell the Court, Can you deny that I had the 250 l? ſpeak, Mrs. Wall, had I 250 l?

Mrs. Wall. That was not the Queſtion you asked me at firſt.

Fitz-Harris. But ſpeak, had I it?

Mrs. Wall. There was 250 l. I think it was 200 or 150, or 250 l.

Fitz-Harris. What uſe was it for? and upon what account?

Mrs. Wall. You do know it was not for any Libel.

Fitz-Harris. If you have any mind, tell it.

Mrs. Wall. There it is: (Delivering in a Paper to be read.)

C. of Cr. The humble Petition of Edward Fitz-Harris——

Mrs. Wall. I really took him for as honeſt a Man as ever I knew in my Life, and had it been in my power to have done him a kindneſs, I ſhould not have failed to have done it.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he your Countryman, Madam?

Mrs. Wall. Yes, he is, and my Relation too. I knew you to be the Son of a very ſuffering loyal Family; and while his Mother was in Town, he came often to our Houſe; and when ſhe went away, he left viſiting the Houſe a great while. And you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, did once tell me, you could bring in People to the King's Intereſt, that were very conſiderable. So I ſpoke to the Secretary of State about you, that there was one that had been with me, and told me, that he could bring in thoſe to the King and Duke's Intereſt that were very conſiderable. The Secretary of State deſired me to know who they were; and then he named to me one Thomas Merrey, and another Perſon who I deſire to be excuſed from naming. The other Party he did name, was thought conſiderable, both for Quality and Underſtanding; and the Secretary deſired me to get him in if I could.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Madam, who was it?

Mrs. Wall. I deſire Mr. Fitz-Harris may tell, you.

Fitz-Harris. No, Mrs. Wall, pray do you tell it, ſince you have ſpoke of it.

Mrs. Wall. I ſay nothing but what I will take my Oath of.

Fitz-Harris. Then you will never ſwear that which is true. Pray, Mrs. Wall, ſpeak, who was it?

Mrs. Wall. I deſire I may not name him, but he may.

Mr. Att. Gen. He will not.

Mrs. Wall. Truly, I do not think it convenient for me to name ſuch Perſons as thoſe are, upon ſuch accounts.

Fitz-Harris. Pray, Mrs. Wall, name the Perſon that I would have brought into the King's Service.

Mrs. Wall. If the Court commands me, I will; otherwiſe I will not.

Fitz-Harris. Did you ever, upon any ſuch account as this, receive any Money for me, ſpeak the Truth?

Mrs. Wall. God forbid your Blood ſhould lie at my Door; I aſſure you I ſhould be ſorry for it. He told me, theſe Perſons were conſiderable for the King's Intereſt, and could do him extraordinary good Service. So, as I ſaid, I ſpoke to the Secretary of State; and he would know who they were. And when he was told who they were, as for one of them, Thomas Merrey, he was not thought worth the looking after, for he was thought an inconſiderable Raſcal; but as for the other Gentleman, he was thought a Man of Worth, and a Perſon, that if he would, could really ſerve the King. Upon this, when you firſt came, I was never at reſt for you; and therefore, after a while, before you came again, I gave the Porter order to tell you, I was not at home; and I deſire the Porter may be asked the Queſtion. But when I next ſaw the Secretary, I deſired that he would give them a poſitive Anſwer, one way or the other; and the next time I ſaw you, this was your Buſineſs, and I told the Secretary of State of it. You gave me this Paper, and deſired me to ſollicit for your Quit-Rent in Ireland, for you were in great Miſery, and had been a great Sufferer. So I ſpoke to the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and ſhe ſpoke to the Secretary of State; that if this Man be ſo conſiderable a Sufferer, 'tis convenient to give him ſomething for his Encouragement: and if you will give him ſomething, ſaid I, give it him quickly. I was four, if not ſix Months, a getting this Money.

Fitz-Harris. But will you ſay it was upon that account? When was that Money paid?

Mrs. Wall. I never thought I ſhould be brought in for a Witneſs; or that you would have abuſed me thus for my kindneſs.

Fitz-Harris. When were thoſe Papers given you that you produced?

Mrs. Wall. I wiſh I may never ſee the Face of God, if I know any more than what I give Evidence; there are the Papers, they will tell you the time.

Fitz-Harris. Did I give them you?

Mrs. Wall. You or your Wife did; and I ſuppoſe your Wife's Condition was yours.

Fitz-Harris. Was not the Money received before ever thoſe Papers were given you?

Mrs. Wall. Nay, Mr. Fitz-Harris, I will tell you more; ſend to Mr. Henry Guy, and let him tell you when he paid it you.

Fitz-Harris. Call the Porter, and the Footman if he be here.

L. C. J. If you would ask any more Queſtions of Mrs. Wall, do.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I come to you the Wedneſday before I was taken, and told you, I deſired to ſpeak with the King, and that I had a Libel to preſent to him?

Mrs. Wall. No, ſo far from that, that it was the Thurſday before you were taken, you came about nine a-clock at Night to our Lodgings, and ſent up to my Chamber; and I ſent word that Mr. Cowling was there, for I did not care to ſee you: but you ſent word up, you had ſomething of conſequence to tell me. So I came down, and you deſired me to bring you to the Speech of the King; which was a thing you did never deſire before: And you ſaid thus, If you did but ſee the King, you believed you could ſay ſomething to him that might do him Service.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I ſay here is the Libel that I come to deliver to the King now?

Mrs. Wall. No, as I have a Soul to be ſaved.

Fitz-Harris. Mrs. Wall, I did, and this was what you ſaid at the ſame time; That ſince my Lord Sunderland was gone, you could have no ſecret Service. I did deſire to ſpeak with the King privately, thoſe were my words; and you told me, you could not ſo eaſily do buſineſs with the King, ſince my Lord Sunderland's time.

L. C. J. We muſt not let you hold a Dialogue between your ſelves, you muſt ſpeak that the Court may hear.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was not he a Roman Catholick?

Mrs. Wall. Yes, we looked upon him ſo, and upon that account we ſaid it was dangerous for him to go near the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know that ever he was admitted to the King?

Mrs. Wall. Never; but he hath been talking with me in a Room as the King paſſed by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the King ever take any notice of him, ſpeak to him?

Mrs. Wall. The King never took notice of him, nor ſpoke with him by my means, nor gave him Money, other than what I ſpeak of, nor the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth.

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Wall, I think you do ſay that there was ſome Money paid to Mr. Fitz-Harris, pray ſpeak plain, upon what account was it paid?

Mrs.

Mrs. Wall. My Lord, it was for the bringing in of my Lord Howard of Eſcrick, who is there; ſince you preſs me to it, I muſt tell, I think my Lord will not deny it.

Ld Howard. I will never deny the Truth.

Fitz-Harris. Where was my Lord Howard of Eſcrick?

Mrs. Wall. He was not ſo much for the King's Intereſt, or that which they call the King's Intereſt.

Fitz-Harris. How long is this ſince?

Mrs. Wall. Two Years ago ſince he came firſt to me; but whether it be a Year and an half ſince my Lord met with the King, I cannot tell.

Fitz-Harris. When my Lord was admitted in to the King, I did wait on him to that purpoſe, to bring in my Lord Howard.

Mrs. Wall. I deſire that my Lord Howard may be asked, whether he don't remember, when the King was coming, Mr. Fitz-Harris was put out of the Room firſt.

Fitz-Harris. You ſay, I never ſhewed any Libel to the King.

Mrs. Wall. I tell you what I ſaid ſince to this Gentleman that is here; I wiſh you had ſhewn the Libel unto me, that I might have been in a capacity of ſaving your Life.

Fitz-Harris. You ſaid, that I had the 250 l. for bringing in my Lord Howard.

Mrs. Wall. I ſay, it was upon Promiſe to bring in Perſons that would be uſeful and ſerviceable to the King.

L. C. J. She is your own Witneſs, and ſhe tells you, two Perſons you did undertake to bring in, and for that you had this Money.

Mrs. Wall. It was his Poverty, and this together.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mrs. Wall, I conceive he never diſcovered this Libel unto you; but pray, did he ever diſcourſe with you about Everard? and what Character did he give him?

Mrs. Wall. Once he did, and he ſaid he was an honeſt Man; and asked me if I would be acquainted with him? I told him, No, for he had a knaviſh Reputation: he was an Informer, and I cared for no Informers.

Fitz-Harris. Mrs. Wall, to let the World ſee how you ſhuffle about me, When did the King ſee my Lord Howard firſt, when I brought him?

Mrs. Wall. I don't know, ask my Lord Howard.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I ſpeak to the King in the outer Room? And did not you get me to make a ſtand there?

Mrs. Wall. Mr. Fitz-Harris, don't make me tell that thing.

Fitz-Harris. Pray ſpeak the Truth, Mrs. Wall.

Mrs. Wall. I defy you, and all Mankind, to ſay I do otherwiſe. You did deſire me to tell the Duke, that you would firſt bring my Lord to him, and then to the King; and I ſpoke to the Duke, and he ſaid you were a Raſcal, and he would not meddle with you: this you know.

Fitz-Harris. Did not my Lady Portſmouth tell me, the Duke was angry, &c?

Mrs. Wall. Mr. Fitz-Harris, when you came to me upon ſuch an Errand, was it reaſonable that I ſhould bring you, upon every trifle, to the Speech of the King, and I ſhould not bring you then? 'tis without Senſe and Reaſon.

L. C. J. You muſt not ask Queſtions, but anſwer. And, Mr. Fitz-Harris, do you deſign to detect Mrs. Wall of Falſhood? She is your own Witneſs, you conſider not you can get nothing by that.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, when you ſee the Papers produced, you will find it is upon another account.

Mrs. Wall. Is this your Hand, Mr. Fitz-Harris? (Shewing him a Paper.)

Fitz-Harris. But is not this upon the account of a Penſion granted in Ireland? Pray let the Gentlemen of the Jury ſee, this is of another different nature; I appeal to my Lord Howard of Eſcrick, whether he did not ſpeak to my Lady about it.

Ld Howard. I did ſo.

Mrs. Wall. My Lord did ſecond my Lady to get you ſome Charity.

Fitz-Harris. So that the Money received here, was plainly upon another account.

L. C. J. Look you, if you will have any Papers read, they ſhall be read. But the Gentlemen of the Jury muſt not ſee any Papers but what are read.

Then the Petition of Mrs. Fitz-Harris, and the King's Letter to the Duke of Ormond, was read, about a Penſion in Ireland.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I have ſomething further to ſay to Mrs. Wall. But I deſire to ask Mr. Cowling a Queſtion, and that is, Sir, What Mrs. Wall ſaid to you about my Buſineſs?

Mr. Cowling. My Lord, I think, the Day after this Man was examined in the Council, I came to Mrs. Wall, and ſhe told me, That the ſecond or third Night before he was taken, he came to her to bring him to the King; but ſhe ſent down Stairs, that ſhe would not let him come up. But asked him, why he did not go to one of the Secretaries of State? No, ſaid he, I can't go thither without being taken notice of; but I'll tell you my Buſineſs. No, ſaid ſhe, if you will write down your Buſineſs, and give it me in a Paper, I will carry it to the King; and if the King have a mind to ſpeak with you, you ſhall be ſent for. No, ſaid he, I will not do that. Then, ſaid ſhe, I muſt beg your pardon if I don't bring you to the King. And Mrs. Wall ſaid further to me, truly her Blood did chill when ſhe ſaid ſo, for ſhe was afraid he was come to do the King a miſchief.

Mr. Att. Gen. This was three or four Nights before he was taken.

Fitz-Harris. Is Sir Robert Thomas here? (He did not appear) Then I deſire my Lord Howard to ſtand up.

Ld Howard. Have you any thing to ſay to me, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, if you pleaſe. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip will pleaſe to tell, what my Lady Portſmouth did expreſs to you concerning me, at your coming thither; and whether I did not introduce your Lordſhip; and how civil ſhe was to me upon that account; and how ſhe undertook to get my Quit-Rent for me.

Ld Howard. Sir, I ſhall anſwer as particularly as I can all your Queſtions; but it will be neceſſary to introduce my Evidence with the Relation of the whole Tranſaction. You know, about October laſt, about the beginning of the Month; for it was, as I take it, ten Days, or a Fortnight, before the ſitting down of the Parliament; you did make Applications to me, in the Name of the King, whether with or without his privity, I cannot ſay; but you did make ſeveral Invitations to me, of putting my ſelf into the Poſſeſſion of an Honour I was altogether unworthy of, of waiting upon the King. I gave you my Reaſons why I thought

thought my ſelf unfit for that Honour, becauſe I was not in any capacity of doing the King any Service: And I looked upon the King as a Perſon too Sacred, and whoſe Time was too precious to be trifled away upon one that had nothing to offer to him, and therefore I refuſed it. But notwithſtanding, this was reinforced by you: and when I ſtill perſiſted in the denial of that which was an Honour I ought rather to have ſought, but only becauſe I thought my ſelf uncapable of deſerving it; after ſeveral Applications, I did at laſt tell you, beſides the Impertinency of it, I did alſo apprehend it might be the occaſion of ſome Indecency; for perhaps I might thereby put my ſelf upon declaring my ſelf in ſome of my Sentiments, very much differing from thoſe of his Majeſty. And for me to ſeek an opportunity to expreſs my Contrariety to his Majeſty's Thoughts, would be both Rudeneſs and Imprudence; and therefore I did then ultimately anſwer you, I would by no means be prevailed with. Then you did lower it, and ſaid, It ſhould ſuffice, if I would wait upon the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth. Truly, I told you, as to that too, you did me a great Honour, and greater than I could expect, for I had nothing (I was afraid) worthy her trouble; and therefore I deſired to know what it might mean. In ſhort, you did reſolve it into this, That you did find the King under great Apprehenſion, that there was ſomething deep in the Hearts of ſome, that ſtood at a diſtance from his Majeſty, and oppoſite to his Intereſt; and that the Parliament ſtood at an irreconcilable difference with the King. Truly, ſaid I, I am a Perſon not fit to ſpeak in the Name of a Parliament, for in a little time they will ſpeak for themſelves; but if I were to ſpeak, or ſhould preſume to ſpeak in the Name of the Parliament, or the whole Nation, I ſhould ſay, I believed the King would find his Parliament meeting him with as great Affection, Duty, and Loyalty, as any Parliament ever met any King of England. You ſaid, Then you were confident, and you cited her Grace the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth for it, that the King came to meet them with Inclinations to gratify them in any thing they could deſire. Then, ſaid I, to what end need I come there, for the Parliament will ſpeak its own Senſe ſpeedily? Pray do me that kindneſs, as to go and ſatisfy the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and to let her know ſhe may now have an opportunity of declaring how willing ſhe is to be a good Inſtrument between the King and his People. Said you, I can aſſure you, that ſhe is altogether for the ſame Intereſt that you look towards; for you are very much miſtaken if you think ſhe is a Friend to the Duke of York. My Lord, in ſhort, after much intreaty, I did give my ſelf that Honour, which I have no Cauſe to repent or be aſhamed of, to go to White-Hall, humbly to kiſs my Lady Dutcheſs's Hand, and receive her Commands. But when I came there, I was ſurprized with a greater Honour of finding the King there, and I think it was an opportunity, wherein my time was not ill ſpent as to my ſelf, but I am afraid this 250 l. if it were given for the bringing me thither, his Majeſty doth not think he hath deſerved it at this time.

Fitz-Harris. Your Lordſhip came there in October laſt.

Ld Howard. Becauſe I will do you all the right I can, it was, as I take it, the beginning of October, and about the 10th, becauſe the Parliament ſat down the 23d, and as I remember, it was a Fortnight before. This was the firſt time that I owe you Thanks for the Honour of ſeeing the King. After that, a matter of ten Days, I had a ſecond opportunity, and by your means alſo. This was the laſt time I had the honour to ſee the King, but in publick. After this, I muſt confeſs, when the Parliament was ended, I did then, willingly enough, invite my ſelf to the honour of waiting upon the Dutcheſs, and give her Thanks, and tell her, I was ſenſible ſhe had endeavoured, as much as in her lay, to perſuade the King into a good Opinion of the Parliament, and to give them time of Sitting, and thereby to give them opportunity of explaining their Intentions for his Service and Advantage. This was alſo the laſt time I had the honour of ſeeing her. At laſt, parting from her, I did make it my humble requeſt to her, that ſhe would be pleaſed to repreſent your Condition to the King, ſince by your means I had the honour to be ſhewed the way to her Grace's Lodgings.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, did not I come to you with a Meſſage, the Night before my Lord Stafford was condemned?

Ld Howard. You ſay right, and it was in my Thoughts, and yet I thought it too tender a thing to ſpeak of; and therefore I thought it ſo, becauſe, I muſt confeſs, at that time (you muſt excuſe me) I did believe you did not come with that Authority you pretended to make uſe of. After the time that unfortunate Lord had had his Tryal, and the Houſe were preparing their Thoughts for the Sentence, I was indiſpoſed, and came not to the Houſe that Day, which provoked the Houſe ſo much, that they were near committing me to the Tower; but truly, I was ſo ill in Body, and had ſo little a mind to have my Vote mixed with his Blood, that perhaps I ſhould have run the hazard of going to the Tower about it, if that had been all. But the Night before you came to me, and told me as a great Secret, That you did bring it as the Deſire of the King, and as that which he would take as a great inſtance of my Reſignation to his Will and Pleaſure, and that for which I might promiſe my ſelf all the greateſt Kindneſſes poſſible for a Prince to ſhew to his Subjects, if I would go the next Day and give my Vote for my Lord Stafford. Sir, ſaid I, I have all the Obligations of Nature and Blood to diſpoſe me, as much as can be, to favour my Lord Stafford, as far as can conſiſt with the Integrity and Sincerity of a Judge: but though I was wavering in my own Thoughts the Day before, now by the Grace of God I will go, though I be carried on Men's backs to the Houſe; now I ſee there is ſo great an account put upon it, for I ſee 'tis the Concerns, not only of my Lord Stafford, but the Proteſtant Cauſe; and then, ſaid I, If all the Relations I have were melted down into my Lord Stafford, if I had but breath enough to pronounce his Doom, he ſhall die.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord ſays, he did not think you came from the King, when you came with that Meſſage.

Ld Howard. Sir, can I do you any more Service? I ſhall be willing to do it if I can. I cannot deny but I had, by your means, the honour of waiting upon the King and the Dutcheſs; but I have ſo little

tle Reaſon to value my own Worth, that I cannot imagine how it ſhould turn to the King's Service.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I deſire to have Liberty of going away, the Croud is ſo great I cannot ſtand, and the Priſoner hath nothing to ſay to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, that may be part of the Popiſh Plot, to keep Dr. Oates here, to kill him in the Croud.

Fitz-Harris. Have not you ſomething more to ſay, Doctor? Truly I forget, my Memory is ſo diſtracted.

Dr. Oates. I know not, if you have any Queſtions to ask me, I will ſpeak Truth. (But he had none, ſo the Doctor went away.)

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Call Mr. Fanſhaw; (who did not appear.)

Fitz-Harris. My Lady Dutcheſs of Portſmouth.

Mrs. Wall. She is not come, becauſe the Court is very full; but if the Court will ſend for her, ſhe will come preſently.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg that my Lady Dutcheſs of Portſmouth may be ſent for.

Mrs. Wall. She gave me a Commiſſion to ſay, If the Court would have her to come, ſhe would ſo do.

L. C. J. We cannot ſend for her, if ſhe pleaſe to come, ſo; we have no occaſion to ſend for her.

Mrs. Wall. I preſume he can't ask her no Queſtions, but what I can anſwer.

L. C. J. We will not prejudice the Priſoner in his Queſtions, nor ſend for her, unleſs ſhe will come.

Fitz-Harris. Will you ſend one of your Footmen, Mrs. Wall? I am a Priſoner, and have no body to ſend. In the mean time, where is the Porter?

Mrs. Wall. Here he is.

Fitz-Harris. How long is it ſince you paid the Money to me, from my Lady Portſmouth?

Porter. I cannot tell indeed, 'tis ſo long ſince.

Fitz-Harris. Let him have his Oath.

L. C. J. No, that he can't have.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not Chriſtmas laſt was Twelve-month?

Porter. I can't indeed tell what time it was.

Fitz-Harris. You dare not ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You diſparage your own Witneſſes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He hath no Witneſſes can ſay any thing for him, and therefore he muſt find fault with what they ſay.

L. C. J. Have you any other Witneſſes, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, my Lord of Arran.

L. C. J. What ſay you to my Lord?

Fitz-Harris. Did not my Wife ſhew you this Libel the Sunday that I was taken?

E. of Arran. I do not remember I ever heard it, till I heard it read in the Houſe.

Fitz-Harris. Did you not read it, my Lord?

E. of Arran. No, not that I remember.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I tell you, I was carrying it to the King?

E. of Arran. Not that I know of.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not a diſpute, whether this was Treaſon, or not?

E. of Arran. You did ſhew me a Libel, but whether this or no, I cannot ſay, perhaps it was this: I took him for an honeſt Man, my Lord; I have known him five Years, and knew his Family to be a good Family; I happened to be at Dinner with him the Day he was taken. After Dinner there were ſome Papers he pulled out, and I threw them away. I told you, you would do your ſelf a Miſchief, ſome time or other, in meddling with ſuch Papers. There we drank a Bottle or two of Wine together, and then we parted. As ſoon as I came home, I heard this Gentleman was ſeized on, and taken, which ſurprized me much. And this is all the Account I can give of the Matter.

Fitz-Harris. Then your Lordſhip did not read the Paper?

E. of Arran. No indeed not I.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I tell you, I had a Promiſe of a Quit-Rent for Secret-Service?

E. of Arran. I do not know particularly what he told me of the Quit-Rent; but I was willing to do him all the good I could, about a Reverſion of a Penſion that he had in the Right of his Wife; that was part of my Buſineſs that Day, and thinking he very well deſerved it. I am very ſorry to ſee that his Father's Son, as the Phraſe is in Ireland, ſhould be accuſed of ſuch a Crime.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before you go, I deſire to ask you one Queſtion: Did you obſerve ever that he was employed by the French King, or the French Ambaſſador's Confeſſor?

E. of Arran. No, my Lord, never as I heard of. He uſed to ſpeak as honeſtly as any Man; I thought him of the beſt and loyaleſt Principles of any of his Religion.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Religion did you take him to be of?

E. of Arran. He always owned himſelf a Papiſt, and he and I have had ſome Diſputes about it.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Secretary Jenkins, I deſire to know of your Honour, what the King ſaid of me?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. I remember the King did conjure him, to declare who the Author of the Libel was.

Fitz-Harris. You are a Man of Honour, Sir; Did not the King own he had employed me?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. I never remember the King did own he had made uſe of him, by Mrs. Wall's means, or otherwiſe.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord Conway, don't you remember it?

E. of Conway. No, not upon my Honour. But I have heard him ſay, he did formerly imploy you in ſome trifling Things.

Fitz-Harris. Did not the King declare in Council, that I had gotten Money of him?

E. of Conway. That was for my Lord Howard of Eſcrick's Buſineſs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now your Lordſhip is here, I would ask you; Did you ever hear the King declare when he firſt ſpoke with the King?

E. of Conway. The King never ſpoke with him till after he was taken; he was taken the 27th of February, and the King never ſpoke with him till the 28th, the Day after.

Fitz-Harris. Did not you tell me, if the King did put himſelf upon the Parliament, they would uſe him as his Father was uſed?

Mrs. Wall. I never told you any ſuch thing. You promiſed me to bring in my Lord Howard of Eſcrick; but they found themſelves mightily miſtaken in what was promiſed he would do when he came in.

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you caſt any thing upon any body to make a noiſe.

Fitz-Harris. Where is Mr. Peacock?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I would know of her what Mr. Bulſtrode ſaid.

L. C. J. That every body may ſee you are fairly dealt with, you ſhall have all the Liberty that can be given. You muſt not ask what another ſaid, but call them themſelves to ſay what they know. Here is Mr. Bulſtrode himſelf.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Bulſtrode, then, What Meſſage did you bring from the King to my Wife?

Mr. Bulſtrode. No Meſſage at all, but I'll tell you what I know. Mrs. Fitz-Harris, ſoon after her Husband came to be cloſe confined, delivered a Petition to the King in the Park; and the King was pleaſed to give it to me, as he frequently does. Mrs. Fitz-Harris came to me, to tell her what the King ſaid to it. Said I, the King hath given me no Commands at all in it, but this, Carry it to the Secretary of State, for I cannot ſay any thing to it. For the King generally tells me what he will have done with ſuch a Petition. But ſhe was ſo very importunate, I asked the King again; Sir, ſaid I, Mrs. Fitz-Harris is very importunate, what is your Majeſty's Pleaſure in it? Said the King, If ſhe have a mind to petition the Council, ſhe may, I will neither meddle nor make with it. Afterwards I met her ſeveral times, and ſhe ſaid, her Husband was very ſeverely and hardly uſed, and ſhe was denied the Liberty of coming to him. Said I, I hear he is guilty of a very foul Thing, and there is no way to help him, but by diſcovering the Author of that villanous Libel. For ſhe asked me, what I thought of her Husband; and ſhe told me, ſhe intended to try what ſhe could do for him. I ſaid there was no way to do any good, but to make a full diſcovery of the Author. Then, ſaid ſhe, if the King would but let me ſpeak with him, I am ſure I could do him Service, and prevail with him to diſcover the Author. So I told the King of it; and the King ſaid, If ſhe will come and be examined, with all my heart. And as ſoon as ever I heard ſhe was come to Town, I told her what the King ſaid: And ſhe told me ſhe would willingly come; and if the King would give her leave to ſpeak with her Husband, ſhe did not doubt to prevail with him. That Night, about Midnight, after I was in Bed, and had been in Bed two Hours, ſhe came to my Door and knocked me up. So I roſe, and put on my Night-Gown, and went down, and I heard a Voice which I thought was hers. So ſhe came out of the Coach to me, and told me, ſaid ſhe, I am come to you to beg of you, that you would be ſecret, and not to let the Court know that I was to come to have any Conference with you; for if you do, I am undone and ruined, for there are ſome Perſons, my Friends, that will not look upon me if they hear any ſuch thing. The next Morning I went to her, and told her, the King had directed ſhe ſhould be examined in the Afternoon, and ſhe ſhould come down to be examined: Which ſhe did; and as ſoon as the Council was up, I told his Majeſty ſhe was below. So he ordered ſome to examine her; but when I told her of it, ſaid ſhe, If the King will not ſpeak alone with me, I will not ſpeak a word, nor be examined. This is the Truth of it, I aſſure you, my Lord, upon my Salvation.

Fitz-Harris. Where is Mr. Peacock?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. What did Mr. Bulſtrode ſay to me?

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Fitz-Harris, and you Gentlewoman, you muſt not be heard to talk of Diſcourſes amongſt your ſelves, and to examine what Diſcourſe paſſed between Perſon and Perſon, up and down; that is not to be permitted in a Court, the Witneſs is here, ask him himſelf. What hath been ſaid to her, will be no Evidence.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. What Offer did you make me?

Mr. Bulſtrode. None; I told you this would be the way to ruin your Husband.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg of you, may not I ask what he did ſay?

L. C. J. No, 'tis no Evidence.

Fitz-Harris. Then call Mr. Henry Killigrew. (But he not appearing, the Priſoner would have asked what he had been heard to ſay, but it was not permitted.)

Mrs. Wall. Here is the Footman, Richard Perrot.

Fitz-Harris. How long ago is it ſince you brought the Money to me from my Lady Portſmouth?

Perrot. I never brought any.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not he brought the Money?

Mrs. Wall. Ask him.

Fitz-Harris. Was my Lord Howard ever at your Houſe before October laſt?

Perrot. I do not know.

L. C. J. What uſe do you make of that?

Fitz-Harris. Pray, my Lord, when did you go to my Lady Dutcheſs's? Was it before October laſt?

Ld Howard. I think not, I take it as near as I can, it was juſt before the Seſſion of Parliament.

Fitz-Harris. It was ten Days before the Seſſion.

Then my Lady Dutcheſs of Portſmouth appeared, and a Chair was ſet for her.

Fitz-Harris. I am ſorry to ſee your Grace come here upon any ſuch account, but I hope your Grace will excuſe me, 'tis for my Life. I deſire to know of your Grace, Whether I was not employed to bring ſeveral Papers to the King, and among the reſt, the Impeachment againſt your Grace: And thereupon your Grace was pleaſed to tell me, That it was a great piece of Service to bring thoſe ſort of Papers; and if I could find out Men ſerviceable for that purpoſe, I ſhould do the King good Service. I told your Grace, I knew one Mr. Everard, who knew all the Intrigues, and all the Clubs in the City, and could tell all the Deſigns of my Lord of Shaftesbury, and all that Party. And your Grace did encourage me to go on, and I did, by your Grace's Direction, and by your means I came to ſpeak with the King about it.

Lady Dutcheſs. When muſt I ſpeak?

Sir George Jefferies. Now, Madam; and will your Grace now be pleaſed to ſtand up?

Lady Dutcheſs. I have nothing at all to ſay to Mr. Fitz-Harris, nor was concerned in any ſort of buſineſs with him. All I have to ſay, is, He deſired me to give a Petition to the King to get his Eſtate in Ireland; and I did three or four times ſpeak to the King about it. But I have not any thing elſe to ſay to him; I never ſpoke to him about any thing elſe.

Fitz-Harris. Does not your Grace remember what Directions I received about my Lord Howard?

Lady Dutcheſs. I know nothing of that, I ſent you not to my Lord Howard.

L. C. J. If you will ask any Queſtions of my Lady, do; but do not make any long Diſcourſes.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, my Lady may forget. Madam, does not your Grace remember you undertook, upon the account of thoſe Papers I conveyed, that you would procure me my Quit-Rent?

Lady Dutcheſs. I never had any Papers.

Fitz-Harris. Not that Paper of the Impeachment againſt your Grace?

Lady Dutcheſs. No.

Fitz-Harris. Upon what account then had I the Money I received?

Lady Dutcheſs. For Charity.

Fitz-Harris. I am ſorry your Grace is ſo much under Mrs. Wall's influence.

Lady Dutcheſs. I come not here to wrangle with you, Mr. Fitz-Harris; I am come here to ſay what I know, and will not ſay one bit more.

Fitz-Harris. Have I had any Money of your Grace ſince you knew my Lord Howard?

Lady Dutcheſs. You never had, but that for Charity.

Fitz-Harris. When did your Grace ask it for me?

Lady Dutcheſs. I do not remember the Time. Mr. Fitz-Harris, if I had any thing in the World to do you good, I would do it; but I have it not, and ſo can't ſee that I am any ways more uſeful here. (Then her Grace went away.)

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, have you any more Witneſſes that you would have called?

Fitz-Harris. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Will you apply them you have called?

L. C. J. Well, have you any thing further to ſay?

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, I have ſomething further to offer for my ſelf: I will tell you what I know, ſince my Witneſſes will not do me juſtice. Gentlemen of the Jury, you are my Judges in point of Law as well as Fact, and my Blood will be required at your hands, if you do not do me right. My Lord, I cannot forbear complaining to the Court of the hard Uſage I received in Priſon, contrary to the Statute of the 31ſt of his Majeſty's Reign; greater Oppreſſion hath been done to me than to any before. My Lord Stafford, Sir Thomas Gaſcoign, and others, had all the Liberty they could deſire to enable them to make their Defence againſt their Tryal; which I have had denied me. But my Defence conſiſts of two Heads, and I ſhall rely upon the Conſciences of the Jury for the Iſſue: Tho my Lady Portſmouth, and Mrs. Wall, and the reſt, are pleaſed to ſay, that I was not employ'd, nor received Money for ſecret Services; yet 'tis very well known I did ſo. As to Mr. Everard, when I met with him, tho now he hath made it a French Story; yet if he would tell the truth, he knows that it was otherwiſe. He told me he was well acquainted with my Lord of Shaftesbury and my Lord Howard, and in ſeveral Clubs of the City he knew all their Intrigues; and that Speech that went by the name of my Lord Shaftesbury's, my Lord gave it him before it was printed, and he ſeveral other things of that kind. So then I told him, it was a buſineſs of the greateſt Conſequence that could be, if he would continue thoſe Diſcoveries. And whereas he ſays, I would betray the People to the French Intereſt, it is very well known I was always an Enemy to the French Intereſt; but I humoured him in his Diſcourſe, and diſcourſed him to reduce the Paper that he accuſes me of under ſome Heads; and that Paper I no ſooner had, but I came to White-Hall with it: And tho he ſaid, he was to have forty Guineas, and ſo ſaid Sir Will. Waller too, yet it was only forty Shillings that he deſired, for his Poverty, I would lend him. And as to what he talks of three thouſand Crowns Penſion, it is a very unlikely buſineſs. When I came to White-Hall, I was adviſed to go to my Lord Clarendon, or Mr. Hyde. Accordingly I did ſhew it to a Gentleman who was to give it to my Lord Clarendon, but before he could get to him, I was taken. Now, my Lord, I hope what I did was with a deſign to ſerve the King, in diſcovering what was deſigned againſt him, according as I was employed, tho both the Secretaries are ſo unkind as not to declare it: when I know I am in the right, I am not aſhamed to ſpeak it, tho my Life be loſed upon it; and I refer it to the Gentlemen of the Jury. I was taken before I could come to the Speech of my Lord Clarendon. Next, I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you will conſider theſe are great Perſons that I have to do with; and where great State-matters are at the bottom, it is hard to make them tell any thing but what is for their Advantage: and ſo I am left in a ſad Condition. But, my Lord, in the next place, I think, 'tis impoſſible for any Jury to find me guilty, without prejudging of thoſe Laws which are not to be judged by any Jury or Inferior Court: for if they judge me and bring me in guilty, 'tis Murder in them; and let the Bench tell them what they will, 'tis of that dangerous Conſequence, that it overthrows the Government. My Lord, here is the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, and here is a Copy of the Votes of the Commons thereupon; and tho they be not Laws, yet they are ſuch Declarations of the Parliament, as that afterwards no other Court ought to meddle with that Matter; and the inferior Courts do not uſe to meddle with Parliament-matters: and ſo, Gentlemen, you will lay at your own Doors what would lie at theirs, if you meddled not. For tho the Court have over-ruled my Plea, yet the Matter is plain before you now who are my Judges, and my Blood will lie at your doors, and you muſt anſwer it if you do me not Juſtice. And there is no Inſufficiency of a Plea, as to Matter of Law, will excuſe you in point of Fact; and you are obliged, as you will anſwer the contrary to God and your Conſciences, to do me right. And I hope your Lordſhip and the Jury will take particular notice of this. I have been a cloſe Priſoner, and had no manner of help, nothing at all allowed me to refreſh my Memory; which if I had had means to do as I ought, I could ſay a great deal more. But this I inſiſt upon, if the Gentlemen of the Jury do bring me in guilty and convict me, they do ſhed my Blood, and overthrow the Law and Courſe of Parliaments. Whereas, if they bring me in not guilty, my Impeachment ſtands good ſtill, and I am liable to anſwer that Impeachment before the Parliament: and I hope you will conſider the Perſons I have had to deal with; and that it cannot be made ſo plain, as in Matters wherein we deal with common Perſons. I ſubmit to what you ſhall think fit.

L. C. J. You have done, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have done; only I would examine one Gentleman, if he were here, but he does not appear. But here's a Copy of the the Impeachment and Votes of the House of Commons, I desire I may deliver them to the Jury.

L. C. J. No, no; that can't be.

Fitz-Harris. Sir William Waller does declare upon Oath, that for this very thing I was impeached by the House of Commons, and that I desire them to take notice of.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Therefore you are not guilty: Is that the Consequence?

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard our Evidence, and what the Prisoner hath said. The Crime for which he is accused, that is High-Treason, and 'tis Treason in conspiring the Death of the King, in endeavouring to raise Rebellion here; and that in order to destroy the King and the Liberty of all the People, and bring them under the Slavery of the King of France. This is the Treason he was indicted for; and the Proof of this Treason is very full: it is proved to you by three positive Witnesses, and all Men of Credit, of whom you cannot have the least Suspicion. They prove to you, that Mr. Fitz-Harris is the Man guilty of this Treason; he was the Contriver of it, he was the Mover of it first to Mr. Everard, and he gave him those Instructions to pursue those purposes of raising a Rebellion here, in order to destroy the King, by contriving a seditious Pamphlet to set the People together by the ears; and he came to him in order to perfect this Libel. This is proved by Everard, who upon the first motion of it to him, did acquaint Mr. Smith immediately, and Sir William Waller, that such a design was on foot, and desired them to come and be Witnesses of it. They both came, and heard the Communication between the Prisoner and Mr. Everard to contrive such a Libel as hath been opened to you, and they swear it positively. Now what Defence does the Prisoner make to it? Truly I cannot say, whether it have more of Folly or Impudence in it; for 'tis a Defence of a strange nature; for it is inconsistent with it self, and shews what a make he is of: and the latter part is a pursuing the same Treason he stands indicted for, which is the rendring the King odious to his People, by those Insinuations, that he did this by the King's Order. The first part of his Defence is, I am not guilty, for Mr. Everard is the Man that did contrive it, and he is the Author, and it moves from him. Now pray consider the parts of your Evidence, and see if there be any possibility for you to be induced to believe any thing like it. 'Tis proved by Mr. Everard positively, that he came to him first; and when you consider this Objection that is made by Mr. Fitz-Harris, and consider on the other side who were the Witnesses, and who is the Man that makes the Objection, you will then see no cause in the World for you to give any Credit to it. The Prisoner says he was trepan'd into it: for that, pray consider he is an Irish Papist, one that hath all along made it his Business to defame the Proceedings about the Popish Plot, to ridicule it, to deny that there was ever any such thing, and to laugh at the Justice that was executed upon the Popish Offenders who died for the Plot. The Witnesses that prove it against him have been zealous Prosecutors of the Plot, Men that have discovered many of those who were guilty of it, and brought them to Justice; Men that have been material Evidences upon the Discovery. Mr. Smith is a Man that spoke materially in the Tryal of my Lord Stafford, and for which Service, I believe, the Papists, and Mr. Fitz-Harris himself, owe him little thanks. As for Sir William Waller, all Men know how busy and active he hath been to bring in Men that were guilty of the Plot, and he hath suffered for it. Now if you can believe that Mr. Smith and Sir William Waller should be guilty of a Trepan that was to be put upon Fitz-Harris, a Man of that Persuasion you hear of, (and you must believe that, or you cannot believe the Defence the Prisoner makes) I leave it to you. Mr. Everard could do nothing alone, why then Sir William Waller must be guilty of this Contrivance, and of setting Fitz-Harris on work and Everard too. But this is so unlikely a Story, that if there were any to assert any such thing, you could not possibly give any credit to it. But when you consider what hath been proved, and what hath been shewed you under the hand of Fitz-Harris himself, then there is no room I am sure to doubt. They do positively swear, both Smith and Sir William Waller, they heard him own that he had given Instructions to Everard. They prove to you that he mended this Libel in several places, they not coming up to the Instructions he had before given. They prove part of the Libel written with his own hand, and that is Treason enough: for that is certainly Treason, that 'tis the undoubted Right of the People to dethrone the King. I never heard of that Doctrine any where but among the Papists, and 'tis a Papist that preaches that Doctrine to you now. As this is an Evidence in a matter beyond any contradiction in the World, his own Hand-writing of part, and his owning the giving the Instructions; so there is no room in the World for you to believe that ever he was drawn into this by Everard; or that he was the Man that was the original Contriver of it, and trepan'd him into it. But it appears plainly upon the Proof, that it moved originally from Fitz-Harris; that it was the Malice of his Heart that promoted it; and that the Contrivance was how to raise a Rebellion here. For when he had read part of the Libel, and Everard told him that it was Treason, why, said he, I meant it so; and the more Treason, the better; the more odious you make the King to be, the more likely 'tis to raise the People into a Rebellion; and the sooner you raise the People into a Rebellion, the more like you are to accomplish the Design of bringing the People into Slavery to the French King, and so at once to destroy all Liberty and Property, and all that is sacred. No body can believe but Mr. Fitz-Harris is guilty of this Libel and Contrivance to dethrone the King, and raise a Rebellion here, as the Witnesses have sworn. Now as you cannot possibly doubt but this moves from Mr. Fitz-Harris, so then consider the inconsistency of the second part of his Defence, and the Impudency of it too. For as before he pretended he was drawn into it by Mr. Everard, so now he would make you believe he did not do it out of a traitorous Design, for that he was employ'd about these Affairs; and this comes under the Title of secret Service: and he would fain have it that you should believe the King should hire him to raise a Rebellion against himself, to defame himself, and to incense the Minds of the People against him. And this must be the Service that he is put upon; he had no traitorous Intent in himself, but he was to trepan all the Lords that stood zealously up for the Protestant Religion and Property, and that by Direction from whom? From the King, whom Fitz-Harris would have all People to believe to be a Papiſt; and he would have People believe that he is an innocent Man, that he was only employed upon ſuch a ſpecial piece of Service; that the King ſhould be at great pains to employ Mr. Fitz-Harris to deſtroy himſelf and the whole Nation, and to ſtain his whole Family: and upon what reaſons would he have you to believe it? As firſt, you obſerved how inconſiſtent it is with the former part of his Defence, that he was trepan'd into it; now he did not do it from Mr. Everard, nor with a treaſonable Intention. But certainly this is a Treaſon that nothing can be ſaid to palliate or excuſe, and I am ſure he hath ſaid nothing will do it. Yet all the Defence he hath made has tended that way. For tho he have not arrived to the confidence to ſay ſuch a thing is, yet he hath inſinuated by the Method of his Proceedings, that he would fain have ſuch a thing believed; and that the Man had no traitorous Deſign in it. Now what Evidence hath he produced for it? He hath produced to you Evidence that he hath had Money from the King, and hath been ſometimes at the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth's. That he had Money from the King is true, but it little became him to mention it; for it was Charity to relieve a Man in Neceſſity that was ready to ſtarve, and was forced to go all the ways to work he could to move Compaſſion; he urged the Sufferings of his Wife's Father; you heard the Petition read as a ground for Supply; and he hath ſo far prevailed upon the King's Charity (which he hath abuſed) as to have a Sum of Money given him, and he hath had the benefit of it: but he hath made a very ill return for it; for the thanks he hath given to the King for this his Charity, is to fly in the Face of him, his Family, and the Government. He hath endeavoured to raiſe a Rebellion; and when he is brought to his Tryal, he continues to defame the King, which is an aggravation of his Treaſon, if poſſible. And now having no proof in the World for theſe malicious Inſinuations; and all the Witneſſes that he hath called to make out what he would fain have believed, and dares not mention, (not proving any ſuch thing) you will have little reaſon, Gentlemen, to believe any thing that comes from him, eſpecially if you conſider the nature of the Libel it ſelf, it is impoſſible this Man ſhould ever be ſet on work to contrive ſuch a thing as this, to defame the King and all his Family, to raiſe a Rebellion, to overthrow all Religion, Liberty, and the King himſelf; it is impoſſible to be believed. But I fear I preſs too much upon you, as if I did ſuſpect there could be Men in this Kingdom ſo bad as to believe ſuch a malicious Inſinuation. Gentlemen, I leave it to you; you hear what our Evidence is, three Witneſſes that poſitively ſwear this Treaſon againſt the Priſoner. Now as you have this poſitive Evidence on the one ſide, ſo you have no colour of Evidence to the contrary; and 'tis impoſſible for you not to find him guilty. It is to deny the Light of the Day; and 'tis a thing of that conſequence, that all Ages, when they hear of it, will ſay that there is no Juſtice to be had, if an Engliſh Jury do not find a Verdict according to their Evidence: For what Security hath a Man for his Life and Eſtate, if twelve ſubſtantial Men of a Jury ſhall dare to go againſt plain and full Evidence? 'Tis all the Security an Engliſhman has for all he enjoys, that he is to paſs thro the hands of twelve honeſt Men of his own Country. And if it be poſſible for a Jury to go againſt Evidence ſo plain as this is, I ſay, no Man is ſafe in his Life or Eſtate.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Gentlemen, I deſire to take notice of what Mr. Fitz-Harris was pleaſed to conclude withal. He ſays his Blood is to be required at your hands, and therefore he would fain by that means inſinuate you out of your Conſciences. But I think if you conſider the Circumſtances that have been given, and all the Evidence, it will be impoſſible for Men that have any reſpect to their Credit and their Conſciences, to acquit this Gentleman. In the firſt place, it is known, and it hath been given in proof to induce the Probability of the Matter evidenced againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, that he is a known Roman Catholick; they are all Proteſtants, and good Proteſtants, and you are all Proteſtants too. And then the Caſe goes thus far further: You that are Proteſtants muſt take it upon your Oaths, that theſe Gentlemen have ſworn falſe, and convict them of wilful Perjury; and if you do convict them, it muſt be upon the bare Allegation of a Papiſt: and I hope never to live to ſee the Day that Men that are of good Credit, and Proteſtants, ſhall by an Allegation (tho never ſo confidently affirmed at the Bar) be preſumed to be guilty of Perjury. So that I ſay, my Lord, beſides the Baſeneſs and Venom of this impudent Libel, which certainly no honeſt Man in the World will give the leaſt countenance to, here is Evidence enough from himſelf. And you cannot believe it proceeds from any Direction from the Crown, (as this Man would inſinuate) and therefore he hath given us the greateſt Evidence by his libelling at the Bar. And he hath not only libelled the Crown, but he hath called up ſome Witneſſes on purpoſe to libel the reſt of his own. And then I hope you will take notice how he did inſinuate with Mr. Everard at the beginning: When you were in the French King's Service, ſaid he, and have been neglected ever ſince you left it; if you will come and join with me, without peradventure you may get Encouragement fitter than that poor and mean way that you are reduced to by embracing the Proteſtant Intereſt. He gives him a Method likewiſe to walk by: He thought him the Perſon that had writ ſome Pamphlets before, and therefore was fit for his purpoſe, and ought to be encouraged. And he does tell you the Words not only againſt the preſent Government, but that which every good Proteſtant muſt needs abhor and tremble at; he bids him take care to libel the whole Family. He tells him withal, You muſt be ſure to ſay that the late King, of bleſſed Memory, was concern'd even in the Iriſh Rebellion; and that this King hath promoted thoſe Perſons that his Father had countenanced for that Action: and he tells him the Names of thoſe Perſons that were ſo promoted. After this is done, what does Mr. Everard do? he goes and makes a Diſcovery; he tells the Circumſtances and the Perſons, to whom, and when: and the Perſons he made that Diſcovery to, do in every Circumſtance agree with Time, Place, and all. The firſt Night this Appointment was, I hope you will remember, that when Mr. Everard had ſo placed that Gentleman, againſt whom there is not the leaſt Word ſaid or imagined to find fault with him, he takes notice of the Inſtructions; owns that he had given him Inſtructions; and takes particular notice of one Paſſage, that when Mr. Everard ſaid, But there may be danger in them, is not this Treaſon? the Priſoner ner made anſwer, The more Treaſon the better. Ay, but then this is dangerous, how ſhall I venture upon ſuch Matters? Why have you not my Hand in it? I am as guilty as you, and in as much danger. What then was the Reward? there was to be at preſent forty Guineas, and an annual Penſion. But to whom was Mr. Fitz-Harris to diſcover this? not to the King, but to the French Embaſſador, and the Confeſſor was to be the Man that was to give the Reward. Flanders was firſt to be ſubdued, and the Parts beyond the Seas, and then England would be but a Morſel for them, they could take that in the way. All this was done, which is plainly ſworn by a Witneſs that had a Place made on purpoſe for him to over-hear all that paſſed. And, my Lord, for the next Witneſs there is Sir William Waller; there is this, beſides what is ſworn agreeing in Circumſtance: He tells you both, to their very Money, that it was forty ſomewhat, but he cannot ſay Guineas; and he tells you ſomething of the Penſion, a great many thouſand Crowns: and he tells you particularly of that Circumſtance of the French Confeſſor, and the French Embaſſador. Beſides all this, does not Sir William Waller tell you this very thing, That he eſpy'd him with a Pen and Ink, that he gave a Note of the Libel it ſelf, and he heard him give the Directions? and when he came into the Room, he ſaw the Ink freſh upon the Paper; and when he heard him give Directions for the Alteration of particular Words, he ſaid, You have not worded it according to my Mind in ſuch and ſuch particular Places. But, my Lord, there is this Venom in it further to be taken notice of, that he gave his Inſtructions to draw it ſo, as that it might beſt take effect according to his Intention: for when Mr. Everard thought it might do well to make it with thou and thee, as though it ſhould be the Deſign of the Quakers, he ſaid, No, by no means; but put it in changing the Phraſe, as if it was the Deſign of all the Proteſtant Diſſenters, and ſo by that means would draw the Odium upon them, and bring them in danger as well as others. And this is confirmed too by Sir William Waller; ſo that in every Circumſtance he hath ſhewed the Venom of his Deſign. But in the laſt place, which ſurely the Gentlemen of the Jury will not forget what Sir William Waller ſaid, that Fitz-Harris did ſay, I have taken care already to diſperſe abundance of Libels amongſt our Party. And when Everard told him of a Libel that was ſome while before, he ſaid he had ſeen that a great while ago, and there might be ſomewhat in it to the purpoſe. And for the Anſwer that hath been given to it, my Lord, I think it does not bear any ſort of Relation to the Charge that is upon him; for whatſoever Diſcourſe, or whatſoever he hath urged, is not much to his purpoſe. He hath brought here a Nobleman; but after all, I would put him in mind of one thing that Nobleman ſaid, He did believe he came to him in the Name of one that ſent him not: and ſo will every body ſay that hath heard the Evidence; for all his Witneſſes do poſitively deny that they ever knew of any ſuch Matters as he ſpeaks of. And now, my Lord, I could be very glad if this Gentleman (inſtead of ſaying as he hath ſaid) would have come as ſoon as he had this Libel from Everard, and diſcover'd it immediately to ſome body himſelf before he had carried it on, as Everard did before the thing was perfected. And ſo, Gentlemen, we do think upon this Evidence, we have left you without all manner of Excuſe: it being impoſſible, upon ſuch a Proof as this is, and conſidering the Nature and Venom of the Libel it ſelf, the baſe, venomous, malicious Inſtigations he made uſe of to effect it, and the Ends for which it was done, to bring in the French to ſet us together by the ears, to render the King odious to his People; and the Perſon 'tis acted by, a known Iriſh Papiſt; I cannot doubt of the Iſſue. And I do hope when I ſee ſo many honeſt Gentlemen and Proteſtants at the Bar, they will be loth to forfeit their own Souls to eternal Damnation, to ſave a Man that is guilty of ſuch a Treaſon as this.

L. C. J. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Sir George Jefferies. Yes.

L. C. J. Then look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, here is Mr. Fitz-Harris indicted for Treaſon againſt the King, and 'tis for endeavouring to take away his Life, to make him odious to his Subjects, to incite them to a Rebellion, and to raiſe Arms here in this Kingdom againſt our King, our Sovereign. And by the Indictment it is ſaid that he hath declared theſe Endeavours and theſe Intentions, by cauſing a ſcandalous and evil Pamphlet or Libel to be written, with an Intent to be diſperſed thro the Kingdom. The Words of the Libel you have heard particularly read; ſome of them are taken out and mentioned in this Indictment. Mr. Fitz-Harris hath been arraigned, and hath pleaded Not Guilty; and you are to try the ſingle Matter before you, whether Mr. Fitz-Harris be guilty of this Treaſon. That this is Treaſon, and contains a treaſonable Matter, Gentlemen, is ſo plain, as no body living can doubt it: but it is a Treaſon of as high a nature as peradventure ever was in the Kingdom of England, and tends as much to that which would be the Deſtruction both of the King and Kingdom. The King's Life, all our Lives, all we have that is dear to us, or of any Advantage or Avail in the World, are concerned in this: For what does it tend to? It tends to a popular Inſurrection, to raiſe the People up in Arms, that like a Deluge would overrun and ſweep away all. It is to undo the Government and all Order in the Kingdom, and to deſtroy the Life and Being of all that is good amongſt us. A more virulent and villanous Book certainly was never written; nor any thing that tended more to Sedition, or to incite the People to a Rebellion: ſuch a Book as peradventure no well govern'd Kingdom ever heard of the like. It tends to defame the King and all his Anceſtors, and to blaſt all that ſhall come after him, to raiſe us into a Tumult. And what is all this to do? to ſettle the Roman Catholick Religion amongſt us. And this is ſuch a Piece of the Art of the Jeſuits, which peradventure hath out-gone all they have done before. It ſeems to be their hand directly, and we are all concerned as Engliſhmen to take care of ſuch Villanies. This is the Nature of the Treaſon that is compriſed in this Book. Whether Mr. Fitz-Harris was the Author, or Director, or Contriver of this Book, is the Queſtion before you. (For plainly, without any Suppoſe, the Book contains in it as high a Treaſon as ever was.) And as to that, Gentlemen, you muſt conſider that this appears evidently to be a Deſign of the Roman Catholick Party; 'tis a Jeſuitical Deſign: for this is that they aim at, to confound all things, that they may fiſh in troubled Waters. And you ſee they have found out an apt Inſtrument, an Iriſh Papiſt, one that hath been all-along continually nually concerned with them, and intermeddled in ſeveral of theſe Plots and Papers. Gentlemen, the Evidence that is given here againſt him is by three Perſons, and there is great Evidence from the matter that is produced, beſides thoſe Perſons. There is Mr. Everard does declare to you the whole of this, and Mr. Fitz-Harris's Application to him to write this Book. He tells you the Intention of it, and he gives you the very Grounds upon which this was to be written; that is, to raiſe Sedition, that was the firſt Inſtruction; to raiſe a Sedition in the Kingdom, and this was to buſy us at home, that the French King might get Flanders and the Low-Countries, while we are confounded at home: and then the Catholicks have their Game to play, and carry all before them. Look you, Gentlemen, Mr. Everard is ſo cautious, that he walks not alone in the Caſe, but with a great deal of Prudence declares it to others, that they may be Witneſſes in the Caſe for him. Mr. Smith does agree in all things for the firſt Night that Mr. Everard hath declared, how that he heard the Directions owned as given by Mr. Fitz-Harris, for the writing this Book, and he heard the Deſign of it, he heard there was a Reward promiſed to him for the doing of it, and he tells you ſome of the Inſtructions. The next Night Sir William Waller was preſent; and he tells you all the Inſtructions of that Night, and that Fitz-Harris owned them, that he gave thoſe Inſtructions in the private Conſult. But that that is not to be anſwered, Gentlemen, is his own Inſtructions in Writing; what can be ſaid to that? If you were doubtful of the Credit of theſe Gentlemen, yet Mr. Fitz-Harris's own Inſtructions in Writing under his Hand, are an Evidence beyond all Controul in the World that he gave thoſe Directions; and theſe are Treaſon, that is plain. And therefore it does ſeem to be as ſtrong an Evidence againſt Mr. Fitz-Harris of this Treaſon, as peradventure ever was given againſt a Traytor. There is not any one Witneſs that ſtands ſingle, but there are two to each Night; and his own Inſtructions written by himſelf do not ſtand upon the Evidence of a ſingle Witneſs, for he owned it in the preſence of three Witneſſes: So then a ſtronger Evidence cannot be given that he was the Author and Director of this Book.

Then, Gentlemen, you muſt conſider what he ſays for himſelf in excuſe of this horrid Treaſon that theſe Witneſſes ſeem ſo fully to fix upon him. The firſt Witneſs he brings, is Dr. Oates; and he does tell you, That having ſome Diſcourſe with Everard, Everard ſhould ſay, this was a Deſign of the Court, and was to be put into ſome Lords, and I think into ſome Parliament-Men's Pockets; and then they were to be apprehended. I think this is Dr. Oates's Teſtimony. Mr. Everard is here upon his Oath, and he teſtifies no ſuch thing in the World: 'Tis eaſy for one to come and ſay, I heard a Man ſay ſo; perhaps he ſaid it by way of Conjecture; but that is no Anſwer to direct Proof. Mr. Sheriff Corniſh is the next Witneſs, and he ſays, He had ſome Diſcourſe with the King, and the King ſhould ſay, He thought Mr. Fitz-Harris had been an honeſt Man, and had given him ſome Money.

Mr. Sh. Corniſh. No, my Lord, the King ſaid he took him to be an ill Man.

L. C. J. Then it ſeems I was miſtaken; his Majeſty did not tell him he took Fitz-Harris to be an honeſt Man, but an ill Man. But that he had formerly ſome Money of the King upon pretence of doing him ſome Service, now that brings it out what the King's meaning was: For it ſeems there had been begg'd ſome Money for him, and the King at my Lady Portſmouth's deſire, by way of Charity, gave him ſome little matter of Money; he boaſting and telling the King he could do him ſome Service. You ſee what manner of Service it is he would have done for Him and the Kingdom. Then as to all the reſt of his Evidence, there is Mrs. Wall, and my Lady Dutcheſs of Portſmouth; and he hath examined them concerning the Money he hath received, and they both declare upon what ground that Money was given: It was given, they tell you, for a Gratuity from the King to him; and upon his boaſting, ſays Mrs. Wall, that he could do the King Service, and bring over Perſons to his Intereſt. I think there is no other Witneſs very material: For as for Mr. Bulſtrode's Evidence, it ſignifies nothing at all; it is not material for him or againſt him in the Caſe: A Diſcourſe about delivering a Petition to the King from his Wife. Now, Gentlemen, you muſt conſider what ill uſe this Gentleman deſigns to make of the King's Charity and Favour to him; he gave him ſome Money to relieve his Wants, and now would he interpret this, and inſinuate this to be given for ill Purpoſes, for to make him trepan his Subjects: which is another piece of Virulency that theſe Papiſts always exerciſe againſt the King; they always make an ill uſe of his beſt Actions, and an ill Interpretation of them. For, Gentlemen, can it be believed that the King would ever deſign ſuch a thing as this is, to blacken his Family for ever, to ſtir up all his Subjects againſt him, to endanger his Crown and Kingdom, and all that he has in the World? And all this to what purpoſe? No colourable Deſign can be made of it. This is ſuch a thing to excuſe ſuch a Villany, as never was heard of, by wreſting the King's Charity and Generoſity to ſuch ill Purpoſes; but that ſome Men have the Confidence to do any Thing. I muſt leave it to you. Here are three witneſs his own Hand to theſe Inſtructions, and his making a Declaration that it was not treaſonable enough, nor virulent enough. All theſe things are ſtrong Evidences in the Caſe. And if you believe theſe Witneſſes and his own Handwriting, 'tis a plain Caſe you muſt find him Guilty.

Fitz-Harris. May I have Liberty to ſpeak one Word?

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I had forgot one thing. For fear it make an Impreſſion in you, becauſe I ſee he hath inculcated it often and often, and that is, the Impeachment that was by the Commons Houſe of Treaſon againſt Mr. Fitz-Harris in the Lord's Houſe: I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, that is not before you at all; the matter of that was by way of abatement pleaded to the Juriſdiction of this Court, and that is now over. You muſt have no Conſideration, nor can have any Conſideration of that now. Your queſtion is not whether we have Authority to try this Cauſe, but you are impannell'd and ſworn to one Point, and that is, whether Fitz-Harris be guilty of this Treaſon or not. Whether the Court have Authority to do it, is another Queſtion proper for our our Determination, and we have determined it; but there is nothing of that lies before you in this Case. Therefore you must not be misled with any thing that he talks so fondly of concerning the Impeachment, or concerning his Blood lying at your doors, that surely will signify nothing to Men of Understanding at all.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, 'tis our unhappiness to come before you under these Circumstances. We have understood there is a Vote of the Commons of England in Parliament, that says this Man shall not be tried in an inferior Court; now we take our selves to be the Judges of this Man in part under your Lordship's Directions.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. You are not Judges of it, you are only to try the Fact.

Mr. Johnson. I only offer my Sense, and if the other Gentlemen think otherwise, they will speak it. I think the Office of a Juror is such, that it is within his power to acquit or condemn according to the Evidence, as it lies within his own Conscience. Now if we should acquit this Man, (we have no assurance we shall acquit him, only suppose it) then there is nothing against him but what lies in a Parliamentary way, and we shall forejudge their Cause. Therefore, I say, I do not know how far by Law we are compellable to give a Verdict in this Case upon him.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, we would consult your Satisfaction as much as we can in all Things; and 'tis reasonable that if you have any Doubts you should propose them to us, and to that purpose we are to give you Satisfaction, and will in all things. I must tell you, as to the Jurisdiction of the Court, that is not at all before you; and as to the Vote of the House of Commons alledged by him, if any such there be, that cannot alter the Laws of the Land, nor justify any of us in departing from our Duties, no more than if a Letter or Mandate should be gained from the Prince or Chief Magistrate of this Kingdom, to any of us in derogation of Justice, (as it's possible by surprize to be) we are to take notice of the one, no more than the other. We are upon our Oaths to do Justice according to the Laws of the Land: You likewise are upon your Oaths, and sworn to do Justice in your Sphere; and your Oath is, That you shall enquire truly whether he be guilty or not; and if he be guilty in your Judgments, you can no more spare him than you can condemn an innocent Person. It never was pretended by any Man, nor will it be asserted by any Man that understands himself or the Constitution of the Government of this Kingdom, that a Vote of the House of Commons can change the Law of the Land. It cannot excuse us, if we deny to try a Man that is brought before us; nor will it excuse you, being under an Oath, justly to try him. If you should, (because the Commons House have voted that he shall not be tried) declare that Man innocent, who in your own Judgment you believe to be nocent; you nor we are not to consider what will be the Consequence of this, if this Man be acquitted or condemned; that is not before us. You and we too are tied precisely to the Laws of the Land, and by that Law must this Man be judged. As to our parts, we must do it as to the Law, and you as to the Fact. But I'll tell you further, Gentlemen, this Doubt was moved to us by the Grand Jury, before the Bill was found; we had an intimation that they would move such a Doubt to us as seems to be your Doubt now. Therefore for their Satisfaction, and the taking away any Scruple that might be in the Case, all the Judges of England did meet together, and seriously debate the Matter and Substance of all this; and it was not our Opinion of this Court only, but the Opinion of all the Judges of England, That we had a Jurisdiction to try this Man. This we have told you, because we would satisfy all Men to go on fairly in the Things that are before them. Therefore that being put out of the Case, you must consider of your Verdict, and give it in upon this Tryal.

Mr. Johnson. We do not doubt, my Lord, but your Opinion in this Case will indempnify us from any future Charge by the Commons of England. But it lies before us to consider what we are bound to do in the Case.

Mr. Just. Jones. Gentlemen, I suppose you do not doubt but we are all of the same Opinion. It is no marvel indeed to hear a Man that stands in Fitz-Harris's place, to object any thing that may cast a Mist before your Eyes. And yet it cannot but be wondered at too, that when three Protestant Witnesses have sworn precisely, he should have the Confidence to urge any thing of this nature. He who appears by the Indictment it self, and the Proofs made upon the Indictment, to have endeavoured to destroy all the Laws of England, all Magna Charta, all our Liberty and our Religion, and to inslave us to the King of France: for that appears plainly the Design, if you have any Credit to the Witnesses that are produced: He that would have pulled down all that is Sacred amongst us, is so zealous for the Authority of the House of Commons. We have all of us a great Reverence for the House of Commons, and for their Opinions; but as my Lord hath told you, so I tell you my Opinion, That a Vote of the House of Commons does not in the least sort alter the Law: for indeed if it did, it were to give a Legislative Power to the Commons, which does only belong to the King, the House of Lords, and the Commons together. And, Gentlemen, though Mr. Fitz-Harris says, If he be acquitted here by you, yet he should remain to be questioned again in Parliament; there is no Man in the World can doubt, if he were acquitted here, and were questioned in Parliament, but he would say, He hath been upon his legal Tryal by his Peers, and that he hath been acquitted by his Peers upon solemn Evidence. But, Gentlemen, you are to consider what is your business: Your Office is to be Jurors, not to be Judges; you are not to take upon you any such Authority. Your Commission is your Oath, and by that Oath you are sworn to inquire whether the Prisoner be guilty, as he is indicted, or not: If you, as Englishmen, can say he is not guilty, let it lie upon your Consciences, and the Danger of the King's Blood and Life be upon you.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Gentlemen, I desire to speak one word to you, to let you know I am of the same Opinion with my Lord, and with my Brother; and I cannot but wonder at you for making this Scruple: for if there were any thing in what you have said, it concerns us that are Judges, and not you at all; for 'tis a matter of Jurisdiction: and and whether we have a Juriſdiction or not, we muſt ſatisfy our ſelves that we have a Commiſſion to do it; it concerns not you. Do you but conſider the Oath you have taken, That you will well and truly try, and true Deliverance make betwixt our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, according to your Evidence: And you have ſworn a true Verdict to give upon it, and do you now ſcruple whether you ſhould give any Verdict or no, when but even now you have ſworn you will give a Verdict? If any ſuch thing as this had been in your Heads, (for it might be then in your Heads as well as now) why did not you ſpeak of it before you took your Oath? You now lie under the Obligation of an Oath to give a Verdict according to your Evidence, and would you acquit him againſt ſuch an Evidence as hath been given? For beſides what Sir William Waller, Smith, and Everard have depoſed, the very Note ſworn by Sir Philip Lloyd and Mr. Bridgman, to be owned by Fitz-Harris as his Hand, contains Treaſon enough in it, if there were no more: Therefore there muſt be ſomething more in it, than for the ſake of ſuch an unreaſonable Scruple.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. I am of the ſame Opinion, truly.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I took the Liberty to ſpeak it now; I could not ſpeak it before: for I was not then to inquire what I was to be ſworn to, nor could I know what would be the matter that would come before us, till we were ſworn. Therefore I humbly beg your pardon that I made the Motion.

L. C. J. We are not at all troubled at any thing you have ſaid; do not miſtake us, we do not take it ill from you that you acquaint us with your Scruples: We are ready to give all Satisfaction we can, to any that are concerned before us; therefore we are no way troubled that you made any ſuch Scruple, but have given you a fair Anſwer to it.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I deſire a Note of the Names of the Jury.

L. C. J. Give it him, Mr. Aſtrey, or elſe the Croud is ſo great he may not know them.

[Then the Jury withdrew for half an Hour, and at their return being called over and appearing, the Clerk took the Verdict.]

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand: (Which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; How ſay you, is he Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, &c.

L. C. J. I think you have found a very good Verdict, and upon very full and ſtrong Evidence.

Mr. Sell. Gen. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give Judgment?

L. C. J. We will take time for that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Will you give a Rule to have him brought up to-morrow?

L. C. J. Move us another Day for it.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope I may have the Liberty of my Wife, and ſome Friends now to come to me.

L. C. J. Any Friend I think may come to you: but, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you muſt be modeſt in the uſing that Liberty we give you. You have heretofore abuſed your Liberty; I do not love to exaſperate Things to one in your Circumſtances, but you muſt be Prudent and Careful, knowing your own Condition, that you do nothing prejudicial to the King or Kingdom.

Upon Wedneſday June 15. 1681. Edward Fitz-Harris was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, to receive his Sentence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly pray your Judgment againſt Mr. Fitz-Harris, who is convicted of High-Treaſon.

Silence proclaimed during Judgment.

C. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand. Thou haſt been indicted and arraigned of High-ſon, and haſt thereunto pleaded, Not Guilty, and for thy Tryal put thy ſelf upon God and thy Country, and thy Country have found thee Guilty: What can'ſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why Judgment of Death ſhould not be given againſt thee, and Execution awarded according to Law?

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I think it will be prejudicial to the King's Service, that Sentence ſhould paſs before I have made an end of the Evidence I have given in againſt my Lord Howard.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, we can take no notice of any thing of that nature. When you are asked what you can ſay why Judgment ſhould not paſs againſt you, it is, What legal Matter you have, what Matter in Law, to excuſe your ſelf from that Judgment? For this is nothing, the ſaying you are to give Evidence; we know nothing of that, it will not delay Judgment a Minute. And for what you ſay, it will be prejudicial to the King's Service, it is the King that prays Judgment againſt you by his Attorney.

Fitz-Harris. I beg the King's Mercy for Tranſportation, my Lord.

L. C. J. We can do nothing in that.

Fitz-Harris. Nor to give me time before my Execution? I can ſay no more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you have been here indicted for a very great and heinous Treaſon, a Treaſon that is in truth of the firſt Magnitude; for it is a Treaſon that tends to the rooting up the whole Government of this Kingdom, and the deſtroying of us all; plainly, both both of the King and of all his Subjects. It does not only destroy the Peace and Quiet, but it tends in truth to the utter Destruction of the whole Kingdom, and to bring us into a Confusion and Disorder, never to be avoided or retrieved, if your Designs should have taken effect. You have been here arraigned, and put your self upon the Country, and they have found you Guilty of this Treason: it is a thing you should well consider; for certainly, you have contracted to your self a mighty Guilt in such a thing as this is. You have endeavoured the Destruction of the King, and in such a way as must have in truth destroyed all his good Subjects together with him. Your Design hath been to excite the People to a Rebellion, and a popular Insurrection, that would have swept away all like a Deluge, if it had taken effect. In truth it is a Treason against all Mankind, and the stirring up of the People is; it is of evil Example to all Mankind, the stirring up of the People against their natural Lord, to whom we owe all Allegiance and Obedience. But your Design in this was by setting the People of England together by the ears, to bring in the Roman Catholick Religion upon such as should be left. It seems you are an Irish Papist, and sucked in very ill Principles where you have lived; and you have here endeavoured to do as much mischief in this Kingdom by that treasonable Book, as lies in any one Man's power perhaps to do. It is a Mercy and a Happiness, that it hath pleased God in his Providence to deliver us out of your hands; for this was your design, if you could have brought it about: But it hath pleased God now to bring you to Justice for it, and the Judgment of the Law must pass upon you. Now that Judgment is this: You must return to the Tower from whence you came, and from thence you must be drawn through the Streets of the City of London to Tyburn; there you shall be hang'd by the Neck, but cut down before you are dead; your Bowels shall be taken out and burnt before your Face, your Head cut off, and your Body divided into four Quarters to be disposed as shall please the King; and I pray God to have Mercy upon your Soul, to give you a sight of your Sin, and Repentance for it.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope I may have the Liberty of my Wife to come to me, and any Friend.

L. C. J. You have that Liberty already.

Fitz-Harris. No, not without the presence of a Warder.

L. C. J. We will not restrain them as to that, let them come to you.

Officer. There is no Rule of Court for it, my Lord.

L. C. J. We will not restrain any thing of your Wife's coming, there is no Rule to restrain her; but let him have that Liberty that other Prisoners in his Condition usually have had in the Tower, his Wife to come to him, or any other Friend or Protestant Minister whatsoever.

Officer. Pray let it be put into the Rule of Court, my Lord.

L. C. J. We make no Rule, there does not need any. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, we lay no restraint upon your Wife, or any other Friend; but if your Wife be in another Condition that she can't come to you, we can't meddle with that.

Mr. Just. Jones. We are not to deliver her out of Prison.

L. C. J. No, we make no Rule, but take off the Hands of the Court from restraining any one to come to you.

Then the Prisoner was taken away, and in pursuance of this Sentence, the last Day of the said Trinity-Term, being the 22d of June, 1681. a Writ issued out of the Court of King's-Bench directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, reciting the Judgment, and commanding him to deliver the Prisoner to the Sheriff of Middlesex, upon Friday the first Day of July next following, to be executed according to the Sentence. Which Writ followeth in these words.

The

The Tryal of Dr. OLIVER PLUNKET, Titular Primate of Ireland. 33 Car. II. 1681.

THE Third of May 1681. in Easter, 33 Car. Secund. Reg. Dr. Oliver Plunket was arraigned at the King's-Bench-Bar for High-Treason, for endeavouring and compassing the King's Death, and to levy War in Ireland, and to alter the Religion there, and to introduce a foreign Power: And at his Arraignment, before his Plea, he urged for himself, that he was indicted of the same High-Treason in Ireland and arraigned, and at the Day for his Tryal, the Witnesses against him did not appear; and therefore he desired to know if he could be tried here for the same Fact. The Court told him, that by a Statute made in this Kingdom, he might be tryed in the Court of King's-Bench, or by Commission of Oyer and Terminer in any part of England, for Facts arising in Ireland; and that this Arraignment there (he being never tried upon it) was not sufficient to exempt him from being tried here; because till a Tryal be passed, and there be a Conviction or Acquittal thereupon, an Arraignment, barely, is no Plea: For in such Cases the Party is not put twice in danger of his Life, which only is the thing the Law in such Cases looks after to prevent. He then desired time for his Witnesses, which they told him he could not do till after Plea pleaded; whereupon he pleaded, Not Guilty, and put himself upon the Country for his Tryal. And after some Consideration had about time to be allowed him to bring his Witnesses from Ireland, the Court appointed the Day for his Tryal, to be the first Wednesday in next Term, which was full five Weeks time.

And accordingly on Wednesday the 8th of June, in Trinity Term, he was brought to his Tryal; and Proclamation, as in such Cases is usual, being made, it proceeded thus.

C. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up thy Hand, those good Men which thou shalt hear called and personally appear, are to pass between, &c.

Plunket. May it please your Lordship, I have been kept close Prisoner for a long time, a Year and an half in Prison: when I came from Ireland hither, I was told by Persons of good Repute, and a Counsellor at Law, that I could not be tryed here; and the Reasons they gave me were, that first the Statute of Henry VIII. and all other Statutes made here, were not received in Ireland, unless there were an express mention made of Ireland in them: So that none were received there but such as were before Poyning's Act. So I came with that Persuasion that I could not be tried here, till at my Arraignment your Lordships told me it was not so, and that I must be tried here, though there was no express mention made of Ireland. Now, my Lord, upon that, whereas my Witnesses were in Ireland, and I knew nothing of it, and the Records upon which I very much rely were in Ireland, your Lordship was pleased to give me time from the 4th of the last Month to this Day; and in the mean time, as your Lordship had the Affidavit here yesterday, and as Captain Richardson can testify, I have not dispatched only one, but two to Ireland, into the Counties of Armagh, Dublin, &c. and where there were Records very material to my Defence; but the Clerk of the Crown would not give me any Copy of any Record at all, unless he had some express Order from your Lordship. So that whether it were that they were mistaken, or wilfully refused, I could not get the Records which were very material for me. For in some of those Records, some of those that accuse me were convicted of high Crimes, and others were outlawed and imprisoned, and broke Prison; and there were other Records also of Excommunication against some of them, and I could not get the Records, unless your Lordship would instruct me in some way or other, how I can get over them that are most material for my Defence. The Servants that I sent hence, and took Shipping for Ireland, were two Days at Sea, and cast back again, and from thence were forced to go to Holly-Head, and from Holly-Head in going to Dublin they were thirteen or fourteen Days, the Winds were so contrary; and then my Servant went about to go into the County of Armagh and Derry, that were a hundred Miles from Dublin, and Meath, and other places: so that in so short a time, my Lord, it was morally impossible for them to have brought the Witnesses over; and those that were ready to have come, would not stir at all, unless they had a Pass from hence, because some of them were Roman Catholicks, and they had heard that here some were taken Prisoners that were Roman Catholicks, and that none ought to come without a Pass; and they being Witnesses against the King, they might be clapped up here, and brought into very ill Condition; so they sent one over that made Affidavit.

L. C. J. It was the Affidavit was read here yesterday.

Plunket. So that, my Lord, I conceive your Lordſhip will think I did it not out of any intent to put off my Tryal, for Captain Richardſon is here, who knows that I writ by the Poſt, and deſired them to come with the Pacquet-Boat, and they writ over to the Captain after they were landed; ſo that I depended upon the Wind and the Weather for my Witneſſes, and wanted your Lordſhip's Order for the Records to be brought over, and that their Examination might be brought into Court, and their own original Examination here might be compared with it. So I humbly beg your Lordſhip's Favour, the Caſe is rare, and ſcarce happens in five hundred Years, that one ſhould be in my Circumſtances. I am come here where no Jury knows me, nor the Quality of my Adverſaries: If I had been in Ireland, I would have put my ſelf upon my Tryal to-morrow without any Witneſſes, before any Proteſtant Jury that knew them and me. And when the Orders went over, that I ſhould be tried in Ireland, and that no Roman Catholick ſhould be upon the Jury, and ſo it was in both the Grand and other Jury; yet then when I came to my Tryal, after I was arraigned, not one appeared. This is manifeſt upon the Record, and can be proved.

L. C. J. There was no Proſecution of you there.

Plunket. But, my Lord, here is no Jury that knows me, or the Quality of my Adverſaries; for they are not a Jury of the Neighbourhood that know them, and therefore my Caſe is not the ſame with other Caſes. Though I cannot harbour, nor do not, nor will not, nor ought not, the leaſt Conceit of hard Meaſure and Injuſtice; yet if I have not full time to bring my Records and Witneſſes all together, I cannot make my Defence. Some were there then, ſome afar off, ſo that it was a Miracle that in ſix or ſeven Counties they could do ſo much as they did: But they got in ſeven or eight of them, yet there were five or ſix wanting. Therefore I beſeech your Lordſhip that I may have time to bring my Records and Witneſſes, and then I will defy all that is upon the Earth, and under the Earth, to ſay any thing againſt me.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Plunket, 'tis in vain for you to talk and make this Diſcourſe here now; you muſt know, that by the Laws of this Kingdom, when a Man is indicted and arraigned of Treaſon or Felony, 'tis not uſual to give ſuch time; 'tis rare that any Man hath had ſuch time as you have had, five Weeks time to provide your Witneſſes: If your Witneſſes are ſo cautious, and are ſuch Perſons that they dare not, or will not venture for fear of being apprehended, or will not come into England without ſuch and ſuch Cautions, we cannot tell how to help it; we can't furniſh you with Witneſſes, you muſt look to get your Witneſſes your ſelf: If we ſhould ſtay till your Witneſſes will come, perhaps they will never come here, and ſo you will eſcape out of the Hands of Juſtice. Do not be diſcouraged in this, the Jury are Strangers to you peradventute, but they are honeſt Gentlemen, and you ſhall have no other upon your Jury; and you may be confident, that if there be not ſome Fact proved againſt you, that may amount to Treaſon, you ſhall be diſcharged; they are Perſons that underſtand ſo much, and we will direct them ſo much. You ſhall have as fair a Tryal as if you were in Ireland; but for us to ſtay for your Witneſſes, or ſend you back to Ireland, we cannot do it: Therefore you muſt ſubmit to your Tryal. We heard your Affidavit yeſterday, and we did then tell the Gentlemen that moved it, as much as we tell you. You are here to be tried, look to the Jury as they are called, and except againſt them if you will.

Plunket. My Lord, I deſire only to have the favour of time, ſome time this Term.

L. C. J. We can't do it. Clerk of Cr. Swear Sir John Roberts.

Plunket. I humbly preſent this to your Lordſhip, I am then in eminent danger of my Life, if I cannot get ten Days to have my Witneſſes over: I deſire I may have but to the one and twentieth of this Month, and then if they do not come, you may go on.

L. C. J. We cannot do it, you have had five Weeks time already.

Plunket. I deſire but a few Days.

Cryer. Sir John Roberts, take the Book, look upon the Priſoner; You ſhall well and truly try, &c.

Plunket. My Lord, I deſire to know whether they have been of the Juries of Langhorn, or the five Jeſuits, or any that were condemned?

L. C. J. What if they have? that is no Exception.

Then the Jury was ſworn, whoſe Names follow.

Sir John Roberts,	Thomas Earsby,
Thomas Harriott,	John Hayne,
Henry Aſhhurſt,	Thomas Hodgkins,
Ralph Bucknall,	James Partherich,
Richard Gowre,	Samuel Baker,
Richard Pagett,	William Hardy.

Cl. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up your Hand. You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge.

" HE ſtands indicted by the Name of Oliver " Plunket, late of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, Doctor of Divinity, for that " he as a falſe Traytor againſt the moſt illuſtrious " and moſt excellent Prince our Sovereign Lord, " Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, " Scotland, France and Ireland King, and his natural Lord, the Fear of God in his Heart not " having, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and " true and due natural Obedience, which true " and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord " the King, towards him our ſaid Sovereign " Lord the King do and of right ought to bear, " utterly withdrawing, and contriving, and with " all his might intending the Peace and common " Tranquillity within the Kingdom of Ireland, " as alſo of this Kingdom of England, to diſturb, " and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King in the Kingdom of Ireland, " then being the Dominion of our ſaid Sovereign " Lord the King, in parts beyond the Seas, to " ſtir up and move, and the Government of our

" ſaid Sovereign Lord the King there to ſubvert; " and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King from his " Regal Power and Government there to depoſe " and deprive; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the " King, that now is, to Death and final Deſtruc- " tion to bring and put; and the true Worſhip of " God within the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland, by " Law eſtabliſhed and uſed, to alter to the Super- " ſtition of the Romiſh Church: The firſt Day " of December, in the Year of the Reign of our " Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, now King of " England, &c. the two and thirtieth, and divers " other Days and times, as well before as after, " at Dublin in the Kingdom of Ireland, in Parts " beyond the Seas, with divers other falſe Trai- " tors unknown, traitorouſly did compaſs, ima- " gine and intend the Killing, Death and final " Deſtruction of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, " and the antient Government of his ſaid King- " dom of Ireland aforeſaid to change, alter, and " wholly to ſubvert; and him our ſaid Sovereign " Lord the King, that now is, from the Crown " and Government of his Kingdom of Ireland a- " foreſaid to depoſe and deprive, and the true " Proteſtant Religion to extirpate, and War and " Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the " King there to move and levy. And to fulfil and " accompliſh his ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and " traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Pur- " poſes aforeſaid, he the ſaid Oliver Plunket, the " ſaid firſt Day of December, in the aboveſaid two " and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid So- " vereign Lord the King, that now is, with Force " and Arms, &c. at Dublin, in the Kingdom of " Ireland, then being the Dominion of our ſaid " Sovereign Lord the King in Parts beyond the " Seas, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly " did aſſemble and gather together himſelf, with " divers other Traitors unknown, and then and " there deviliſhly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, " and traitorouſly did conſult and agree our ſaid " Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, to Death " and final Deſtruction to bring, and from his " Crown and Government aforeſaid to depoſe and " deprive, and the Religion of the Romiſh Church " into the Kingdom of Ireland aforeſaid, to intro- " duce and eſtabliſh. And the ſooner to fulfil and " perfect his ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and trai- " torous Imaginations and Purpoſes, he the ſaid " Oliver Plunket with divers other falſe Traitors " unknown, then and there adviſedly, maliciouſly, " and traitorouſly, did further conſult and agree " to contribute, pay, and expend divers great " Sums of Money to divers Subjects of our ſaid " Sovereign Lord the King, and other Perſons un- " known, to procure them the ſaid Perſons un- " known, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that " now is, traitorouſly to kill, and the Romiſh Re- " ligion into the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland to in- " troduce and eſtabliſh. And that he the ſaid Oli- " ver Plunket, and other Traitors unknown, af- " terwards, to wit, the ſaid firſt Day of Decem- " ber, in the two and thirtieth Year of the " Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King " aboveſaid, at Dublin aforeſaid, in the King- " dom of Ireland aforeſaid, within the Domi- " nion of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, " with Force and Arms, &c. unlawfully, mali- " ciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly did receive, " collect, pay and expend divers great Sums of " Money to divers Perſons unknown, to perſuade " and induce divers other Perſons alſo unknown, " the ſaid falſe Traitors in their ſaid Treaſons to " help and maintain, againſt the Duty of his Alle- " giance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sove- " reign Lord the King, that now is, his Crown " and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Sta- " tutes in that Caſe made and provided." To this Indictment he hath pleaded, Not guilty.

Mr. Heath. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt Dr. Oliver Plunket, the Priſoner at the Bar; and it ſets forth, That the two and thirtieth Year of the King, at Dublin in the Kingdom of Ireland, he did compaſs and imagine the Death of the King, and to deprive the King of his Kingdom of Ireland, and to raiſe War to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion in the Kingdom of Ireland, and to eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion there. And it ſets forth further, that for the Accompliſhment of theſe Treaſons, the Defendant with ſeveral others did meet together at ſeveral Places at Dublin in the Kingdom of Ireland, and elſewhere, and at theſe ſeveral Meetings did conſult and agree to put the King to death, to raiſe War, to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion, and ſet up the Romiſh Religion. And the Indictment further ſets forth, that to accompliſh theſe Treaſons, the Defendant did raiſe great Sums of Money in the Kingdom of Ireland, and did get ſeveral Perſons to contribute ſeveral Sums for theſe Treaſons; and that the Defendant with others did diſburſe ſeveral Sums of Money to ſeveral Perſons, to perſuade them and entice them to be aiding and aſſiſting in theſe Treaſons, and to recompenſe them for them. To this Indictment the Defendant hath pleaded, Not guilty. If we prove theſe things, you are to find him guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, we will quickly come to the Evidence: But in ſhort, you have heard his Charge is as high as can be againſt the King, and againſt the Nation, and againſt all that is good. The Deſign and Endeavour of this Gentleman was the Death of the King, and the Deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion in Ireland, and the raiſing of War: And to accompliſh this, we charge him, that there was a Confederacy made, Aſſemblies and Conſultations had to theſe ends, and raiſing Money to accompliſh it. Gentlemen, Dr. Plunket was made, as we ſhall prove to you, as they there call him, Primate of Ireland; and he got that Dignity from the Pope upon this very Deſign. He did by virtue of that Power, which he thought he had gotten, make out Warrants, Significations, I know not what they call them, to know how many Men in Ireland could bear Arms from Sixteen to Forty; he raiſes Taxes upon the People and the Clergy there. But, my Lord, the Particulars will beſt fall from the Witneſſes that we ſhall call and prove it by, and we need not make any Aggravation; for ſuch a thing as this cannot be more aggravated than 'tis.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Character this Gentleman bears, as Primate under a foreign and uſurped Juriſdiction, will be a great Inducement to you to give credit to that Evidence we ſhall produce before you. We ſhall prove that this very Preferment was conferred upon him upon a Contract, that he ſhould raiſe ſixty thouſand Men in Ireland, for the Pope's Service, to ſettle Popery there, and to ſubvert the Government. The Evidence that we ſhall give you, will prove how it leads to deſtroy the King; and I take it according to the Reſolutions that have been, to raiſe War in the Kingdom, and to introduce a foreign Power, will be certainly Evidence of an Attempt and Machination to deſtroy the King. As ſoon as he was in poſſeſſion of his Primacy, he goes about his Work. There are two great Neceſſaries to be provided, Men and Money: For Men, having this great ſpiritual Juriſdiction, whereby, indeed, all that are under it are become Slaves, he iſſues out his Warrants to all the Clergy of Ireland, to give an account, and make return from the ſeveral Pariſhes, of all the Men in them above fourteen and under ſixty. And Returns were accordingly made by them, that he might accordingly take a meaſure what Men to pick out for the Service. The next thing was Money, my Lord; and your Lordſhip takes notice, that when the Mind is enſlaved, the Purſe, nay all the Body bows to it. He iſſues out his Warrants to his Clergy to make a Collection of Money; in all Parts great Sums were levied, and when they were levied, we ſhall give you an account by our Proofs, that ſeveral Sums were iſſued out, and ſent into France to further the Buſineſs. There was alſo Proviſion made of great Ammunition and Arms; and we ſhall prove in particular, ſeveral deliver'd out by this Gentleman's order, to carry on this thing: and to go through ſtitch with this Buſineſs, he takes a view of all the ſeveral Ports and Places in Ireland, where it would be convenient to land; for they were to have from France an auxiliary Force, and upon his view he pitched upon Carlingford as the Place. We ſhall prove the ſeveral Correſpondencies between Rome and him, and France and him, and ſeveral Meſſengers imploy'd, and Moneys iſſued out from time to time for their Maintenance. This will be the courſe of our Evidence; and we ſhall begin firſt with ſome that do not ſpeak ſo particularly to this Doctor, but prove there was a general Deſign in all Parts of the Kingdom of Ireland, to bring in the King of France, and extirpate the Proteſtant Religion. And then we ſhall call the particular Perſons to the particular Facts againſt him. Firſt we call Florence Wyer.

[Who was ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſworn, Sir?

Wyer. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray give the Court and the Jury an account of what you know of any Plot in Ireland, to introduce the Romiſh Religion, or to bring in the French King.

Wyer. Yes, I know there was a Plot, both before Plunket's time, and in his time; for it was working in the Years 65 and 66, but it was brought to full Maturity in the Year 1667. For then Col. Miles Rely and Col. Bourne was ſent to Ireland from the King of France, with a Commiſſion to muſter as many Men as he could, promiſing to ſend an Army of 40000 Men with a Commiſſion, upon St. Lewis's Day in Auguſt next following, to land at Carlingford, to deſtroy all the true Subjects, to deſtroy the Religion as it was eſtabliſhed there, and to ſet up the French King's Authority and the Roman Catholick Religion. And one Edmond Angle that was a Juſtice of Peace, and Clerk of the Crown, ſent for all the Rebels abroad in the North to come up into the County of Longford, and they marched into the Head-Town of the County, and fired the Town; the Inhabitants fled into the Caſtle: Then they came up to the Goal, thinking to break it open, and by ſetting the Priſoners free, to join them with them; but then Angle was ſhot, received a deadly Wound, and dropt off of his Horſe, and they fled. So then when they were without the Town, one Charles Mac-Canal alighted, and took away all the Papers out of his Pocket: which if they had been found, would have diſcovered all. This occaſioned Col. Bourne to be ſuſpected; and being ſo ſuſpected, he was taken Priſoner, and turned to Newgate in Dublin. Then Col. Rely fled away again to France, and the Plot lay under a Cloud during the Life of Primate Raley the Priſoner's Predeceſſor. This Primate Raley died beyond Sea. Then many of the Popiſh Religion would have had the Primacy conferred upon one Duffy; but the Priſoner at the Bar put in for it: which might have been oppoſed, if the Priſoner had not engaged and promiſed that he would ſo manage Affairs, that before the preſent Government were aware, he would ſurprize the Kingdom; provided the Pope and King of France would ſend a competent Army to join with theirs for the effecting of it. So the firſt Year of his coming over I was in the Friery at Armagh; I was an Acquaintance of the Friers, and they invited me: and one Quine told the Priſoner, that they thought Duffy would have been Primate. Said he, 'tis better as it is; for Duffy hath not the Wit to do thoſe things that I have undertaken to do: meaning that he did undertake to ſupplant the Proteſtant Religion, to bring in Popery, and put the Kingdom under Subjection to the King of France.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know that?

Wyer. Thoſe were the Words, and the Meaning I knew before, becauſe I had heard it talked of.

L. C. J. Who was the firſt of theſe Primates you ſpeak of?

Wyer. Edmund Raley; he ſet this Buſineſs on foot firſt.

L. C. J. About what?

Wyer. About calling the Rebels together out of the North when they came to Longford.

L. C. J. What Year was that?

Wyer. It was in the Year 67.

L. C. J. When died he?

Wyer. He died a little while afterwards.

L. C. J. Then Duffy would have it conferred upon him?

Wyer. Yes, after Raley's Deceaſe he would have had it conferred upon him; and there was a Contention between him and the Priſoner, who did engage he would bring things to that full Maturity, that before the preſent Government were aware he would do the Work.

L. C. J. How do you know this?

Wyer. I know this, becauſe I had an account of it from certain School-Fellows that were with me in Ireland, then ſtudying in Rome; they wrote this to me, deſiring me I would take a good heart with the reſt of my Countrymen, and aſſuredly in a ſhort time the Kingdom would be relieved, and the Iriſh reſtored to their former Patrimonies.

L. C. J. This you ſpeak of their Information. What do you know of your own Knowledge?

Wyer. All that I know is, He coming into the Friery of Armagh——

L. C. J. About what time?

Wyer. It is either 10 or 11 Years ago, and there was a Faſt there, and I was invited by the Friers, being their Acquaintance: one Quine, one of the Friers told him——

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Told whom?

Wyer. The Priſoner, that he did expect Duffy ſhould have been Primate: but the Priſoner made anſwer, 'tis better as it is; for Duffy had not the wit to manage the things that I have undertaken for the general Good of our Religion.

L. C. J. Now tell me this: What things were thoſe he had undertaken? Did he explain himſelf?

Wyer. No further than thoſe words: But I did conceive this was his meaning; becauſe I knew partly of it my ſelf, knowing of the former Plot.

L. C. J. I ask you only what words came from him; and you ſay they were, that Duffy had not the Wit to manage what he had undertaken for the general Good of their Religion.

Wyer. Yes, and then again in his Aſſembly, kept by him, he charged his Inferiors to collect ſuch ſeveral Sums of Money as he thought fit, according to the ſeveral Pariſhes and Dignities, to aſſiſt and ſupply the French Forces when they came over.

L. C. J. How know you that?

Wyer. I have ſeen the Money collected; and I have ſeen his Warrant, ſub pœna ſuſpenſionis, to bring it in, to redeem their Religion from the Power of the Engliſh Government. Again, there were thoſe Rebels that went to Longford——

L. C. J. What time were thoſe Collections?

Wyer. From time to time ſince he came into Ireland.

L. C. J. About what time?

Wyer. Nine Year, 8 Year, 7 Year ago, and the laſt Year of all.

L. J. C. Then it was ſeveral times, you ſay?

Wyer. Yes, and he procured the Mackdonels a piece of Money out of the Exchequer, pretending to do good ſervice to his Majeſty; but he ſent them for France, meaning they ſhould improve themſelves, and bring themſelves into favour with the King of France, and come over with the French King to ſurprize Ireland. This one of the ſaid Rebels told me. So I have ſeen the Priſoner's Letter directed to the grand Tory Flemming, deſiring that they ſhould go to France, and he would ſee them, in ſpite of all their Enemies in Ireland, ſafe aſhoar: And Flemming ſhould return again a Colonel to his own Glory, and the good of his Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know his Hand?

Wyer, Yes, I do, as well as my own. I have ſeen Capt. O-Neal, Son of General O-Neal, coming every Year into Ireland, and carrying three Regiments to the French King into France; and he uſed to come over to Ireland every Year to get a Recruit; and he did get my Brother to go with him, and ſo much importun'd me, that I could hardly withſtand him; but I did not yield to his Deſire. He told me, it was to improve me for my good, to improve my ſelf in Military Diſcipline; and then I ſhould return for Ireland a Captain under the French King, to ſurprize the Kingdom and ſettle the Popiſh Religion; and then I ſhould be reſtored to my Eſtate.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

Wyer. Captain O-Neal. And in the mean while, ſays he, I hear Dr. Plunket is the only Man intruſted in Ireland to make theſe Preparations, and get things ready againſt the French King's coming, who is to land at Carlingford.

Mr. Att. Gen. How often were you in the Doctor's Company?

Wyer. Not very often.

Plunket. I never ſaw him with my Eyes before in all my Life.

Wyer. I have ſeen him in the Priory the firſt Year that he came over to Ireland; and you know the Meetings held at George Blyke's Houſe in the Fives, and I have ſeen him in his own Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How come you to know the Priſoner's Hand?

Wyer. Becauſe I was well acquainted with his Hand, ſeeing his Hand among the Prieſts.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you ever ſee him write?

Wyer. Yes, in the Priory, and in his own Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How often?

Wyer. Not often.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How often?

Wyer. Ten or a dozen times. I ſhould know his Hand from all the Writing in London, if it were among never ſo many. Let me but ſee it, I will know it.

L. C. J. Have you ever heard him own himſelf Primate?

Wyer. Yes, my Lord, he writes himſelf Oliverus Armacanus, Primas & Metropolitanus totius Hiberniæ, that is his Stile.

L. C. J. Who did he ſay made him Primate?

Wyer. The Pode, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you heard him ſay ſo?

Wyer. Yes, I heard him diſcourſe of it in the Priory.

Mr. Att. Gen. He was a publick Officer, and they might well know his Hand.

L. C. J. I believe any body that hath ſeen us write but a little, would ſoon know our Hands.

Wyer. His Hand is as well known over Ireland, as mine is among my Acquaintance.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Wyer. During the time of his Impriſonment, I have ſeen his Commands to ſome of his inferior Dignitaries, commanding them, ſub pœna ſuſpenſionis, to bring in the Monies aſſeſſed for bringing in the French Army; and that there was no better time than the time of his Impriſonment to bring it in.

L. C. J. Who were they, you ſay, that were commanded ſub pœna ſuſpenſionis?

Wyer. Since his taking, I have ſeen in the time of his Impriſonment his Commands to his inferior Dignitaries, not to be forgetful of the Monies that were aſſeſſed towards the ſupplying the French Army; and that there was no better time to bring in the French, than when he was in Priſon.

L. C. J. How long ago was that?

Wyer. The firſt of February (79.) The ſecond and laſt of it was in July and November laſt.

L. C. J. And this was to bring in the Money?

Wyer. Yes, to ſupply the French Army. And that there was no better time than during his Impriſonment, and they ſhould not be ſo much ſuſpected.

L. C. J. And theſe Mandates you have ſeen under his Hand?

Wyer. Yes, I have, my Lord?

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of his ſummoning or iſſuing out theſe Warrants for Liſts of Men?

Wyer.

Wyer. I have not ſeen any of the Warrants; but the Prieſts have told me they were commanded by his Warrants to let him know how many there were in all their Pariſhes from ſixteen to ſixty.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yow ſay you never ſaw the Mandates?

Wyer. No, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What do you know about the Priſoner's viewing the Ports?

Wyer. I have ſeen him going about from Port to Port, to Derry, to Carricfergus, Caſtle-Down, and Carlingford, and all about.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. When he went to take a view of thoſe Ports, can you tell to what purpoſe he did it?

Wyer. Yes, I heard it among the Church, that he went on purpoſe to view the Sea-Ports to know the ſtrength of all the Gariſons, and to ſee which was the moſt convenient way to bring in the French Army.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ever ſpeak with the Priſoner at the Bar. about his going?

Wyer. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What place did he pitch on as moſt convenient?

Wyer. Carlingford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you in the Priſoner's Company when he viewed the Ports?

Wyer. I have ſeen him go to and fro; I did not go all the Circuit round with him.

Plunket. Did you ever ſee me at Carlingford?

Wyer. No.

Plunket. Did you ever ſee me at any other of the Ports?

Wyer. I have ſeen you at Hamiltons coming back from Derry. Do you not remember that you lodged at at Sir Geo: ?

Plunket. I never lodged there in my Life.

Sir Fra. Withens. Have you any thing more to ſay concerning the Plot in general?

Wyer. No, in general I have not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He hath not only given an account of the general, but fixed it upon the Priſoner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Dr. Plunket, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Plunket. You ſay you remember you ſaw me at my firſt coming as Primate ten Years ago, and that you were at the Priory when I was there?

Wyer. Yes.

Plunket. You were inviſible to me.

L. C. J. If you will ask any Queſtion, do; but do not make theſe kind of Obſervations.

Plunket. Tell me this, Why did you not acquaint ſome Juſtice of the Peace then with what you knew, that which you had heard ſeven Years ago?

Wyer. When I firſt knew it, I was as willing to have it conceal'd as they.

L. C. J. What is your Queſtion, Dr. Plunket? pray tell it us.

Plunket. He ſays, my Lord, that ten Years ago I had ſuch a Deſign in hand, and he knew the Money was collected for theſe very ends, and he knew of the Deſign from that ſame Captain O-Neal whom I employed and ſent abroad; and that I had a Deſign to bring in the French at Carlingford, and went about to all the Ports in Ireland, and pitched upon that as the moſt convenient; and yet it is ſo inconvenient for the bringing in a foreign Force, that any one that knows any thing of the Maps of the World, will eaſily conclude it otherwiſe. But, I ſay, my Lord, why did not he tell ſome Juſtice of Peace that I was upon ſuch a Deſign, but let me live in Ireland ten Years after, and never ſpeak of it till now?

L. C. J. What ſay you to the Queſtion?

Plunket. When he ſaw me all the time, and to the time of my taking Priſoner, and never ſaid one word; for I was a Priſoner ſix Months, only for my Religion, not one word of Treaſon ſpoken of againſt me for ſo many Years: why did not he acquaint ſome Juſtice of the Peace with it before?

L. C. J. What Religion were you of then?

Wyer. I was a Roman Catholick.

Plunket. And are you not ſo now?

Wyer. Yes, I am ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Therefore it will be no wonder that you did not diſcover it.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. But I ask you, Why did not you diſcover it all this time?

Wyer. Becauſe I was a Papiſt my ſelf: The firſt that did diſcover it, he and I did conſult about it, I had charged him ſo to do, and I ſet him on work; but he was ill paid for having diſcovered: you got him to be trapan'd, that he hath gone in danger of his Life for it.

Plunket. Who is the Man?

Wyer. Moyer.

Sir Fra. Withens. Call Henry O-Neal, (who was ſworn.) What know you of any Deſign in Ireland to introduce the Popiſh Religion?

O-Neal. In Auguſt (78) Biſhop Tirril came with 40 odd Horſe-Men to Vicar-General Brady's Houſe, and alighted at the Door; and he gave them there an Oath, which they took willingly and freely from hand to hand, to forward the Popiſh Plot againſt the Proteſtant Religion, to make an end of them all in one hour from end to end in Ireland; and, ſaid he, I will come within two days with an Order from the Lord Oliver Plunket; and you need not be afraid, for the Lord Oliver Plunket and I have ſent ſome Gold and Money into France to get Men and bring them from France over Sea: and do not fear, this will go on in one hour thro all Ireland from end to end. In September (78) a little while after, the ſame meeting was in a place which they call Virginia, in the County of Connaught, where they took a Prieſt, he is here, and he was with me, and deſired me to come up to Dublin and diſcover this; and there I did diſcover it to Sir John Davis; which is all that I can ſay. For this Plunket, I never ſaw him in my Life.

Mr. Jones. You were a Papiſt then?

O-Neal. Yes, I was.

Mr. Jones. Are you a Roman Catholick ſtill?

O-Neal. Yes, I am.

Mr. Jones. And were you acquainted with all theſe Orders?

O-Neal. Yes.

L. C. J. How came you to know of this Oath?

O-Neal. I was in the Houſe with them; I was one concerned to take my Oath with them, and I durſt not but take the Oath.

L. C. J. Had you the Oath of Secrecy given you?

O-Neal.

O-Neal. Yes, and ſo this Prieſt commanded me to go along to Dublin and diſcover it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What is his Name?

O-Neal. John Macklegh.

Sir Fra. Withens. Do you know any other Tranſactions about the Plot?

O-Neal. No, I will not ſwear for all the World more than I know.

Sir Fra. Withens.—— Then call Neile O-Neal, (who was ſworn.) What do you know of any Deſign carrying on in Ireland againſt the Government and the Proteſtant Religion?

N. O-Neal. I will tell you all I know: I was at Vicar Bradey's Houſe the 21ſt of Auguſt.

L. C. J. What Year?

N. O-Neal. (78:) And Biſhop Tirril came with 40 Horſe-Men to the Houſe, and went into the Houſe, and diſcourſed a little while; and they took their Oaths every one round to keep ſecret the Plot to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion and the Proteſtants, that they might have their Eſtates again. And he ſaid they did not need to fear: for, ſaid he, you have a very good Man to aſſiſt you, and that is the Lord Oliver Plunket, and you need not fear but it will go thro all Ireland.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Plunket. Why did he not diſcover it before?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Were you a Roman Catholick at that time?

N. O-Neal. Yes, and am ſo ſtill.

Mr. Paget, Jury-Man. I deſire he may be asked how he came to be there.

L. C. J. You ſay, I think, this was at Vicar-General Bradey's; how came you to be there.

N. O-Neal. I was there ſeveral times before that; for my Nurſe, or my Foſter-Mother (I don't know which you may underſtand beſt) was Houſekeeper to him.

L. C. J. Were you required to take the Oath?

N. O-Neal. No, my Lord, I was acquainted in the Houſe, I had been there two or three Weeks before.

Plunket. Why did not you tell it to ſome Juſtice of the Peace?

L. C. J. He was a Papiſt, and ſo he is now.

N. O-Neal. There were many there that were wiſer than I, that did not diſcover it.

L. C. J. How old are you?

N. O-Neal. I believe about two and twenty Years old.

L. C. J. And this was but in (78.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Owen Murfey, (which was done.) Come, what ſay you?

O. Murfey. Mr. Edmond Murfey diſcovered the Plot; he went to one Lieutenant Baker and did diſcover the Plot to him, that there was a Deſign to bring in the French.

L. C. J. Speak out aloud, I can't hear you.

O. Murfey. All I know is from Mr. Edmond Murfey——

L. C. J. What do you know of any, of your own knowledge?

O. Murfey. Mr. Lieutenant Baker told me, that he did hear of the French——

L. C. J. Speak what you know your ſelf.

O. Murfey. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, this is more: I ſaw that Evidence that Edmond Murfey did produce in Ireland, when he was ſent to the Goal there; but without Tryal or any thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then ſwear Hugh Duffy; (which was done.) Speak aloud, and tell my Lord what you know of this Plot and the Priſoner. You know the Priſoner, don't you?

Duffy. I know him! yes I know him well enough.

L. C. J. What ſay you more of him?

Duffy. My Lord, I ſay I have ſeen this Dr. Oliver Plunket raiſing ſeveral Sums of Money to carry on this Plot; ſometimes 10 s. per An. ſometimes 20.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Of whom?

Duffy. Of all the Prieſts in Ireland; of every Prieſt according to his Penſion and Pariſh.

L. C. J. In all Ireland?

Duffy. Yes.

L. C. J. And towards the Proceedings of the Plot?

Duffy. It was to give to his Agent which was at Rome, and for the carrying on the Buſineſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to know this?

Duffy. I was Servant to Dr. Duffy, who was infinitely beloved by this Man. He was Father-Confeſſor to the Queen of Spain. There was nothing that happened between them, but I was by all the time.

L. C. J. Were you Chaplain to him?

Duffy. Yes.

L. C. J. You are a Papiſt then?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Man is a Friar, my Lord.

L. C. J. Were you in the Company with them?

Duffy. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What did paſs there?

Duffy. About the Plot; how they could confirm the Plot: And this Man Plunket ſaid, he could prevail with the King of France, and the other with the King of Spain.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lord particularly when this was, and in what Place, and what they ſaid.

Duffy. It was in 73, 74, and 75. at his own Houſe; and at he kept three or four Jeſuits there, and a matter of a hundred Prieſts.

Mr. Att. Gen. What paſſed in the Company?

L. C. J. Who elſe was there?

Duffy. The Diſcourſe, my Lord, was always about the Plot, how they could contrive the Matter between them; and ſo they did conclude afterwards to raiſe ſo much Money upon ſeveral Prieſts, all the Prieſts in Ireland, ſometimes 20 s. ſometimes 40.

L. C. J. A-piece, do you mean?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe had they about the French at any time?

Duffy. Yes, a hundred times; he talked ſeveral times, that he did not queſtion but he ſhould prevail with the King of France not to invade Spain: And I have ſeen his Letter to Cardinal Bouillon, to expoſtulate with him about the King of France, why he ſhould wage War with the King of Spain, who was a Catholick, but rather ſhould come and redeem Ireland out of its Heretical Juriſdiction.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee the Letter?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Why, do you know his Hand?

Duffy. Yes, I know it as well as I know my own; I know it if there were a thouſand Papers together.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what was the Import of it, pray?

Duffy. That Cardinal Bouillon ſhould prevail with the King of France not to invade Spain; and the Contents of the reſt of the Letter were, That he did admire he ſhould not rather wage war with the King of England, who hath been an Apoſtate, and help their poor Country that was daily tormented with heretical Juriſdiction.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to be in France? were you employ'd?

Duffy. I went to France to live there in a Convent.

Plunket. Did Cardinal Bouillon ſhew you my Letter?

Duffy. Yes.

Plunket. What Year?

Duffy. 77.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, you were ſpeaking of raiſing of Money ——

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee any Precept about it?

Duffy. Yes, I have ſeen ſeveral Precepts: I was Curate to one Father Murſey; and while that Man was with Dr. Oliver Plunket, and other Jeſuits, I did officiate in his place, and he ſent his Letters to me to raiſe 40*s.* and 20*s.* a time, ſeveral times.

L. C. J. You your ſelf?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What for?

Duffy. It was to ſend to Dr. who was at Rome.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſend any Money that you know of?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what time you gave the Money your ſelf.

Duffy. In 73, 74, 75.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where?

Duffy. At his own Dwelling-Place at :

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Of what Quality was the Priſoner amongſt you?

Duffy. He was Primate of all Ireland.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Under whom?

Duffy. Under whom? under the Pope.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How do you know he was ſo?

Duffy. We had it in his Writings.

L. C. J. Did he ſtile himſelf ſo in his Letters?

Duffy. Yes, if he writ but to the leaſt Man in the Country, he would write, Oliverus Armacanus Primas totius Hiberniæ.

L. C. J. And ſo you always underſtood him?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you preſent at any of the general Conſultations or Meetings?

Duffy. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. What number might meet at that time?

Duffy. Five hundred Men and Women.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this?

Duffy. At Clouds.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Occaſion and Deſign of that Meeting?

Duffy. Confirmation from the Biſhop.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what was done there beſides?

Duffy. The ſecond thing was, that the Gentlemen of the three Counties ſhould conclude together about this Matter.

L. C. J. About what?

Duffy. About joining the French and Spaniſh together.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Where was that Meeting?

Duffy. In the County of Monaghan.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was the Priſoner there?

Duffy. Yes, he was the chief Man.

L. C. J. When was this?

Duffy. In 71, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Were you there your ſelf?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Tranſaction of that day, beſides the Sacrament of Confirmation?

Duffy. It was agreed that the Gentry of Armagh, Monaghan, and Connaught ſhould join together; and then they went into a private Council to get a Liſt of all the Officers that were in the laſt Rebellion, and thoſe that loſt their Eſtates.

Mr. Att. Gen. How do you know that? Did you go into the Conſult?

Duffy. Yes, I was in the ſame Conſult my ſelf, and was as willing to proceed in the Matter as any one in the World.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Duffy. Within two Miles of Clouds, at one Father Houſe.

L. C. J. Was that at the time when there were ſo many Perſons met? Pray ſpeak again what was done there beſides Confirmation.

Duffy. Why, they were withdrawn aſide into a Garden, ſome ſtood up, and ſome ſat down: and Oliver Plunket ſtood in the middle of them all as a Prelate, and every one kneeled before him and kiſſed his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was then ſaid?

Duffy. Then they did conſult and gave ſpecial order to ſome of them to get a Liſt of all the Officers in the late Rebellion, and that loſt their Eſtates, and that they ſhould be more forward than others to proceed in that wicked Deſign.

L. C. J. What was that Deſign?

Duffy. To deſtroy all the Proteſtants together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it to mingle the Iriſh and Spaniſh, and French Army together?

Duffy. Yes, it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear the Priſoner ſpeak about it?

Duffy. Yes, and he made a Speech before them concerning our own Faith and Religion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any mention of Money at that time?

Duffy. It was, that every Man of them that could diſpoſe of Money ſhould provide ſome for thoſe Gentlemen that would ſoon come into Ireland.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Who were thoſe Gentlemen?

Duffy. The French Army and the Spaniſh Army together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you at any other Meeting?

Duffy. No.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. After he was taken, do you know of any Order he ſent out to gather Money?

Duffy. Yes, at the Aſſizes of Dalkeith, I think it is June two Years ago, he was apprehended——

Mr. Att. Gen. Indeed he was firſt apprehended as a very buſy Papiſt.

Duffy. I have ſeen two or three ſeveral Orders to raiſe Money, for the ſame purpoſe; and that it was the only time to bring the Matter to an end when he lay in Goal himſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the Effect of the Letter?

Duffy. Yes; and that the French and Spaniſh Kings ſhould take the Advantage that now was offered whilſt he was in Priſon.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay ſome Money was ſent to Dr. Cray?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. To what end?

Duffy. To comply with this Deſign.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Where was that Dr. Cray?

Duffy. He was at Rome, he was made a Biſhop there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who employ'd him there?

Duffy. This Man employ'd him always.

L. C. J. What was his Name?

Duffy. Cray.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay ſome of the Prieſts paid 20, ſome 40?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did the Lay-Gentry agree to pay nothing?

Duffy. I don't know for the Gentry.

L. C. J. But I think you paid ſomething your ſelf?

Duffy. Yes, I paid for two or three Years my ſelf.

L. C. J. And that was for the Deſign?

Duffy. Yes, for the French and Spaniſh Army, and all the Purpoſes together.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Precept to be given in of all ſorts of Perſons of ſuch an Age?

Duffy. I gave a Liſt of the Age of every Perſon from 16 to 60.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whoſe order?

Duffy. By his order.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. To whom did you give it?

Duffy. To Dr. Plunket.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That is, to the Priſoner?

Duffy. Yes, out of my own Precinct.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you an Order from him?

Duffy. Yes, it was directed to the Pariſh-Prieſt; and I being Curate in his place, received the Order.

Sir F. With. To what purpoſe was it?

Duffy. To know what Men in Ireland were able to bear Arms.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What was the number contain'd in your Liſt?

Duffy. 250.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What in one Pariſh?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What was the Pariſh's Name?

Duffy. Coghan.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of his going to view the Ports?

Duffy. I accompanied him to Carlingford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you?

Duffy. Yes, in Perſon I did.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did he ſay?

Duffy. He went round about the Place where ſome of the Cuſtom-Ships come in; there was a great Caſtle there near the Sea, and he went to view the Place, and could not get a Boat: And there was a great Talk of Carlingford to be one of the beſt Havens in Ireland; there was no great Gariſon at the Place, and any Ship might come to the Gates of the Town, and ſurprize it, being a little Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he conclude upon that?

Duffy. That he might get the French Army to land ſafely there.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of delivering any Ammunition and Arms?

Duffy. He did ſend ſome of this Money to get Ammunition into Ireland.

Plunket. You ſay you were Murfey's Curate: Can you ſhew any ſuch Inſtitution as you ſay came to you to raiſe Money?

Duffy. I could have brought them, but I thought it needleſs.

Plunket. Can you name any other Perſon I received Money from?

Duffy. I have ſeen your Paper of the County of Monaghan.

Plunket. Have you ſeen any of them pay any Moneys?

Duffy. Yes, I have ſeen twenty of them pay Money.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why, you are acquainted with this Man, are you you not, Mr. Plunket?

Plunket. My Lord, I believe I have ſeen him.

Mr. Juſt Dolben. Don't you know he was Chaplain to Biſhop Duffy?

Plunket. No, I never was in his Company.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray tell him what time of the Year it was that you were at Carlingford.

Duffy. It was at the end of the Year 77, and the beginning of the Year 78.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, if you can recollect, was you once, or twice, or twenty times in his Company?

Duffy. As I am a Chriſtian, I have been a hundred times in his Company. And when you were creating Prieſts, you would always ſend for me to be preſent; and I wonder how the Man ſhould forget himſelf.

Plunket. I do not ſay I have not ſeen him, or that I am a Stranger to the Man; but in the Company of Biſhop Duffy I never ſaw him, nor I never ſent him orders to pay any Money; and if he did pay any Money, he might ſhew the Order.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If he did pay any Money, you did ill to take it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let him have fair play to ask any Queſtions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell how you came to remember that you ſaw him at Sir Nich. Plunket.

Duffy. Dr. Duffy did ſend me to Sir Nicholas Plunket's, and I met Dr. Plunket as I was coming out of the City. I had been half a Year at the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's, and he ſent me for Ireland again, and then I lived at the Convent in Dublin; and then when I knew that he would come to Town, I went to Ring's-end, where the Ships came in, to meet him.

Plunket.

Plunket. You ſay you were with him at my Houſe?

Duffy. Yes.

Plunket. If you were, you were inviſible: But I ask you, Why did not you tell this to ſome Juſtice of the Peace?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Good Mr. Plunket, he tells you he was as willing to forward it then you.

L. C. J. How come you now to change your mind?

Duffy. I went into France in 77, and I was not there a Year all together; but when I have ſeen how the poor People there are brought into ſuch Slavery by the French King, I thought of it, and had rather the Devil ſhould reign over us, than the Frenchman.

Mr. Juſt Dolben. He gives you a very good rational Account why.

Duffy. I have been at Sir Nicholas Plunket's, and Dr. Patrick Plunket's, where there fell ſome variance about ſomething this Man had done to Father Duffy. Says Biſhop Duffy, I might have had you drawn and quartered, if I were as ill a Man as you; and I might have been Primate of Ireland, if I would have undertaken thoſe things that you undertook. Upon that, ſays Sir Nicholas Plunket, what is that? Why it was ſaid it was to raiſe 60000 Men in Ireland at any time whenever the French or the Spaniſh King ſhould wage War with England, Scotland, or Ireland. And this Man did confeſs before my face to Father Duffy, that it was not only to exalt himſelf, but all the Roman Clergy, and all the Gentry that had loſt their Eſtates.

Plunket. Mr. Duffy, one word with you: Is not this out of Malice to me for correcting ſome of the Clergy?

Duffy. You had nothing to do with me, for I was a Friar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Edmond Murfey, (which was done.) Tell your whole Knowledge of Dr. Plunket and the Iriſh Plot.

Murfey. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, I was one of the firſt Diſcoverers of this Plot; but of nine Witneſſes, I have but one in Town.

L. C. J. Well, tell your own Knowledge.

Murfey. Now I beg your Lordſhip, as to Dr. Plunket, that you will reſpite it till next Term; I could bring ten Witneſſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you ſpeak your own Evidence.

Murfey. I refer it to the King and Council what Evidence I have given.

L. C. J. Do not trouble your ſelf, be directed a little: You are here now to ſpeak what you know concerning any Treaſons, or any other Matters againſt the King, done by Dr. Plunket; ſpeak your own Knowledge, for as to other Witneſſes we do not call you.

Murfey. If I be called in queſtion for this Evidence——

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Sir, you have been at the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's lately, anſwer my Queſtion; Have you ever been with Plunket in Ireland?

Murfey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ever heard him own himſelf Primate of Ireland?

Murfey. Yes, Titular Primate.

Mr. Att. Gen. Under whom did he claim that Authority? under the King, or under the Pope?

Murfey. I think he could not be under the King at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Under whom then?

Murfey. It muſt be either the King or the Pope.

L. C. J. Anſwer me directly, did he claim to be Titular Primate under the Pope?

Murfey. I ſuppoſe he did.

L. C. J. Was he reputed generally ſo to be?

Murfey. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Murfey, remember what you ſwore before the Grand Jury; pray recollect your ſelf whether that be true, and tell all.

L. C. J. You are upon your Oath, you muſt ſpeak the Truth and the whole Truth; you muſt not mince or conceal any thing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Were you ſworn before the Grand Jury?

Murfey. I was ſworn before the King and Parliament.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you give in any Evidence to the Grand Jury?

Murfey. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was that you ſwore before the Grand Jury true, upon your Oath?

Murfey. I can't ſay but it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Repeat it; tell my Lord and the Jury what it was, and tell the Truth.

Murfey. I have forgot it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why then I would ask you a little; you remember I was by, and 'tis no laughing Matter, Mr. Murfey, you will find it ſo. What do you know of any Orders iſſued out by Mr. Plunket to raiſe Money from the Prieſts?

Murfey. I know there was Orders, and I took the Orders my ſelf in my Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. From whom had you thoſe Orders?

Murfey. From another, and not from him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Under whoſe Hand were thoſe Orders?

Murfey. They were from the Primate.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee any Order under Plunket's Hand for raiſing of Money?

Murfey. No, but under the Vicar-General's, by his Authority, as I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath, did you not ſwear before the Grand Jury, that you ſaw the Orders under his Hand.

Murfey. No, I did not; or I was miſtaken, for it was only by his Direction.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray had you any Converſe with Oliver Plunket about the raiſing of Money?

Murfey. Oliver Plunket about the raiſing of Money!

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, that is a plain Queſtion.

Murfey. It was about other Matters I converſed with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But did you converſe with him about Money?

Murfey. No, not about the Money.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath, did you converſe with him about bringing in the French?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Declare the Truth, come.

L. C. J. Come, don't trifle; what Diſcourſe have you had with the Priſoner about raiſing of Money, or bringing in the French? either of them, Sir.

Murfey. I know this, if the Duke of York and Duke of Ormond had proceeded according to their Intentions, it was a general Expectation at the ſame time, that all the French and Iriſh would come and fall upon the Engliſh Nation, as I underſtood.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray anſwer the Queſtion directly. You muſt not come and think to trifle with the Court, you muſt ſpeak the truth, you are ſworn to it; you muſt not come to quibble and run about to this and that and t'other, but anſwer directly, Have you had any diſcourſe with the Priſoner about Orders for raiſing of Mony in Ireland?

Murfey. Yes, I have ſeen Orders from his Vicar-General for the raiſing of Mony.

L. Ch. Juſt Hath he owned them to be by his direction?

Murfey. Not before me, but others he has.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ſeen any Mony paid to him?

Murfey. To whom?

Mr. Att. Gen. To Plunkett.

Murfey. To the Vicar General I have.

L. C. Juſt. But to Plunkett.

Murfey. None to Plunkett.

L. C. Juſt. Have you had any diſcourſe with him at any time about the raiſing of Mony, which the Vicar-General gave order for?

Murfey. I have had diſcourſe with the Vicar-General.

L. C. Juſt. Sir, don't trifle, have you had any with him?

Murfey. With him?

L. C. Juſt. Yes, with him.

Murfey. Yes, I have had ſome diſcourſe with him.

L. C. Juſt. Tell me what that diſcourſe was?

Murfey. I think it was about this. If the D. of York, and the D. of Monmouth fell out together, that he had ſome men to raiſe about the matter, and if the D. of Monmouth would raiſe the Proteſtant Religion ———

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſee he hath been in Spaniſh hands.

L. C. Juſt. Were you a Proteſtant Sir?

Murfey. No, I am a Prieſt.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He is to ſeek yet.

Murfey. I am indifferent whether I be a Proteſtant or a Prieſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord he is a Prieſt in Orders, and ſo hath acknowledged himſelf.

Murfey. Yes, I am a Prieſt, but it makes me forget myſelf to ſee ſo many Evidences to come in, that never knew Plunket.

L. C. Juſt. Sir, you refuſe to anſwer thoſe Queſtions that we put to you here.

Murfey. What I ſaid before the Parliament I anſwer punctually.

L. C. Juſt. You are asked Queſtions here, and produced as a Witneſs, will you anſwer directly or not?

Murfey. Yes, I will.

L. C. Juſt. Then let me hear what diſcourſe you had with the Primate Plunkett concerning any mony raiſed by him or his Vicar General.

Murfey. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, firſt of all I did not impeach Primate Plunkett, but the Officers and Juſtices of the Peace.

Mr. Jones. Had you any diſcourſe with him, yea, or no?

Murfey. That he ſhould find ſo many Catholicks in Ireland, if the D. of York and the D. of Monmouth fell out.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Why it plainly appears what you drove at at firſt, to put off this Tryal if you could.

L. C. Juſt. The Papiſts in England have been at work with you.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I perceived this Gentleman was very buſie looking upon his Hat, I deſire he may be ſearched if he have no paper about him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Solicitor and myſelf heard the Evidence he gave to the Grand Jury.

Then he went out of the Court and would ſcarce be perſwaded to come back again.

Mr. Att. Gen. We both heard him, and he gave the fulleſt Evidence, much fuller to all Inſtances and particulars of this High Treaſon, much fuller than Duffy to the Grand Jury. Afterwards, about three Weeks ago the Tryal coming on, he ran away and lay hid, I took a great deal of pains to find him out, and ſent Meſſengers about, at laſt I heard he was got to the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors, I ſent, and they ſpied him in the Chappel; but the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's Servants fell upon the Meſſengers and beat him, the Ambaſſador was firſt ſent to about it, and his Excellency promiſed that he ſhould be brought, and when he was found he told me but the laſt night, that all he had ſworn before the Grand Jury was true, and he was ready to make it out again.

L. C. Juſt. And now he ſays, he knows not what he ſaid then, pray take notice of that.

Murfey. I told the Grand Jury this, that my Lord Plunkett had a deſign to get 60 or 70000 men in Ireland, if the D. of York and the D. of Monmouth ſhould fall out.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you tell a word of that to the Grand Jury?

Murfey. Yes Sir, or I was miſtaken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Not one word of that did he then ſay.

L. C. Juſt. Do you own this man, Dr. Plunkett, to be of your Religion?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you know this Seeker?

Plunket. He ſays himſelf he is indifferent to be a Proteſtant or a Papiſt.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I will only try you by one Queſtion more, for you are ſought out, and it may be you may be found; Do you know how many men he was to raiſe in Ireland? remember what you ſaid to the Grand Jury.

Murfey. 70000 Men.

L. C. Juſt. What were they to do?

Murfey. For eſtabliſhing if occaſion ſhould be———

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Eſtabliſhing, eſtabliſhing what?

Murfey. Of the Romiſh Religion.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well, ſo far we have got 70000 men to eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion; What, was Plunkett to do this?

Murfey. As far as I underſtood.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And you underſtood it by himſelf?

Murfey. I received Letters from the Vicar General to get ſo much mony collected, and aſſoon as I got the Letters to my hands, I ſent them to a Privy Councellor.

L. C. Juſt. Do you not know that he was ingaged to aſſiſt the French Army?

Murfey. I do not know that by him, but by others.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Did you ever diſcourſe with him about it?

Murfey. I did diſcourſe with him about ſeveral matters.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. About the French Army?

Murfey. Yes.

L. C. Juſt. Do you know that he did endeavour to bring them into Ireland?

Murfey. I had a Correſpondence in France at the ſame time——

L. Ch. Juſt. With whom?

Murfey With one Mac Carty.

L. C. Juſt. And do you know that he had Correſpondence in France?

Murfey. Yes. I know that.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. With whom had Plunkett Correſpondence in France?

Murfey. He had Correſpondence with Dr. Cray, and others in France, as I underſtood by others.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Was the end of that Correſpondence to bring men from France into Ireland?

Murfey. Yes, ſo far as I underſtand.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You underſtood the Letters when you read them, did you not?

Murfey. I know not how theſe People come to ſwear this buſineſs, whether they had not malice againſt him——

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, pray give you your Evidence, we will take care of the reſt.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. I reckon this man hath given the beſt Evidence that can be.

L. C. Juſt. Yes, it is Evidence that the Catholicks have been tampering with him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I deſire he may be committed my Lord, becauſe he hath fenced from the beginning (Which was done accordingly.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear John Mac Legh. (Which was done.)

Sir Fran. Wyth. Tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of any Plot in Ireland to bring in the French.

Mac Legh. I was a Pariſh Prieſt in Ireland in the County of Monaghan, and Dr. Oliver Plunkett received ſeveral Sums of mony in Ireland, and eſpecially in the Dioceſs where I am. I raiſed ſome of it, and paid him 40 s. at one time, and 30 s. another time, in the Year (74) I paid him 40 s. in the Year (75) I paid him 50 s. and it was about July, and it was for the better advancement of the French coming in.

Mr. Jones. Did he tell you that the mony was to be employ'd that way?

Mac Legh. Yes, that the mony was to be kept for Arms and Ammunition for the Roman Catholicks in Ireland.

L. C. Juſt. Before you paid it, did you receive any order from him?

Mac Legh. Yes, I received an order ſub pœna ſuſpenſionis, and there was a publick order thro'-out Ireland, or we would not pay it; nay ſeveral would not pay it, and they were to be ſuſpended.

Plunket. Can you ſhew any of the orders under my hand?

Mac Legh. Yes, I can ſhew them, but only they are afar off, I did not expect to have them ask'd for.

Plunket. Have you no Superiors of your own?

Mac Legh. Yes, but you being Lord Primate, you could ſuſpend Biſhops and inferior Clergy together.

Plunket. When was this?

Mac Legh. In the Years (74) and (75.)

Plunket. What is the reaſon you kept it ſecret all this while?

Mac Legh. In the Year (77) I did diſcover it to one Mr. O Neale, whom I ſent to Dublin to diſcover this Plot. I was in France myſelf my Lord.

Plunket. How many Years is it ſince you returned from France?

Mac Legh. In May in the Year (78.)

Plunket. Why did you not ſpeak all this while till now?

Mac Legh. I did ſend one Mr. Henry O Neale to Dublin, for I durſt not go, leſt I ſhould have been ſuſpended and excommunicated.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is the Prieſt that Henry O Neale ſpeaks of.

L. C. Juſt. Is not this a very good reaſon? if he had come to Dublin to diſcover, you would have ſuſpended him.

Plunket. But my Lord, then he might have ſhewn my Suſpenſion, and brought me into a Præmunire.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If you pleaſe Dr. let us who are for the King have done with him firſt. I would ask you another Queſtion Sir, were you at one Vicar Brady's Houſe?

Mac Legh. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what was done there.

Mac Legh. There was Biſhop Tyrrell came there with 40 Horſemen well mounted and armed, he came into the Houſe about 10 in the morning, and ſtaid till about 11 at night, I was very much among them, and was as willing to be of the Plot as themſelves.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what was done there.

Mac Legh. There Biſhop Tyrrell ſaid, that he had order from Dr. Oliver Plunket and others, to partake of the Plot to bring in the French and ſubvert the Government in Ireland, and deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion and the Proteſtants.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there an Oath given?

Mac Legh. Yes, they were all put to their Oaths, which they did take willingly to keep it private during their Lives time, and the reaſon was they were to have their Eſtates during their Lives time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now tell us when this was.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Henry O Neale and Phelim O Neale ſpeak to the ſame purpoſe.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember whether Henry O Neale was there? Did he take the Oath of Secreſy?

Mac Legh. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Letters from Plunket?

Mac Legh. In France I landed at Breſt, and going thro' Brittany, I met with Biſhop Tyrrell and Dr. Cray, who was my Lord Oliver Plunkett's Agent, and Duke John of Great Brittany came in to them; for he heard of theſe two Biſhops being newly come out of Rome, ſent for them, and I being a Prieſt of Tyrrell's Dioceſs, I went along with them, and they were well accepted, and he ſhewed Dr. Oliver Plunkett's Conditions with the King of France, which was this; to get Dublin and London-derry, and all the Sea Ports into their own hands, to levy War and deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion, and that they ſhould have him to protect them during his Life time.

L. C. Juſt. Did you ſee thoſe Conditions?

Mac Legh. A Copy of them I did, the Governor of Brittany did ſhew them to the Biſhop.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Language were thoſe Conditions in?

Mac Legh. They were in Latin Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was Edmond Murfey put out of the Dioceſs?

Mac Legh. Not as I know of.

L. C. Juſt. What do you know of his being Primate? Upon what Conditions was he made Primate?

Mac

Mac Legh. He was made Primate by the Election of the King of France: And upon his Election, he made thoſe Conditions with the King of France, to raiſe men to join with the French, to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You know that man Dr. Plunkett?

Plunkett. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Plunkett. None, but what I ask'd the others.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Then if that is all, he hath given you a good Anſwer to that already, he was as forward then as the reſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then ſwear John Moyer. (which was done.)

Mr. J. Jones. What do you know concerning any Plot in Ireland, and Dr. Plunkett's being in it?

Moyer. I know him firſt, my Lord, to be made Primate of Ireland, ingaging that he ſhould propagate the Roman Faith in Ireland, and to reſtore it to the Catholick Government; and I know the time by relation, that I came to Rome within two months after his being made Primate of Ireland, upon the ſame Conditions that have been related to you; and I was brought into the Convent of St. Francis in Rome, by one Father and this Father was very intimate with Cardinal Spinola, and when he uſed to go abroad he uſed to carry me along with him as a Companion, and there I found ſeveral of the Roman Cardinals ſay, That the Kingdom of Ireland ſhould come under the Catholick Government by the way and means of the Lord Primate Plunkett:

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of your ſelf?

Moyer. As I was coming then from Rome, I happen'd to come into a Convent of the Order of St. Francis, and there came out of Ireland a young Gentleman of the Family of the O Neales, who hath been my Lord Primate's Page.

Plunket. I never had a Page.

Moyer. You termed him ſo my Lord in Ireland, and as I came, this young man had a packet of Letters with him, as tho' they were commendations to enter him into the Colledge de propaganda fide, directed to the Secretary of that Colledge. And thinking them to be Letters of Recommendation, an old Father, called one Thomas Crawley, and I thought it not prejudicial to open the Seal; and the Contents were theſe, I tranſlated them five Years ago, and here are the Contents following, if you pleaſe they may be read, I will do my beſt to read them in Engliſh, the original were in Latin, and ſome phraſes in Italian. And when I was ſurprized by Mr. Murfey the laſt year and taken ſuddenly, all my Papers were taken away before I could return back again, by the Soldiers and the Tories, I only kept a Copy of this Letter I had in Engliſh as near as I could, and if I did not diminiſh any thing by the Tranſlation; upon the Oath I have taken, I have not put any thing in it, but what the Contents of the Letter were.

L. C. Juſt. Was that Letter under his own hand?

Moyer. My Lord cannot deny that.

Plunket. Do you know my own hand-writing?

Moyer. Does your Lordſhip deny that I know your hand?

Plunket. Pray Sir will you anſwer it?

Moyer. Yes I do very well.

Plunket. When did you leave Ireland?

Moyer. I will tell you that, my Lord, 'tis ſome 14 or 15 Years ago.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You were giving an account of the Letter, read it.

Moyer. Here is the Contents, Illuſtriſſime Domine, It was directed to Seignior , who is now Secretary of the Colledge de propaganda fide. (So then he read his Paper.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay, you tranſlated that out of a Letter under the Priſoner's own hand?

Moyer. Yes, I tranſlated it immediately, and to prove it, I have ſtatutes which his Lordſhip made in the general National Council, which are under your own hand my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you make this Tranſlation?

Moyer. Five Years ago.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you make it?

Moyer. I made it out of the Original in Ireland.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is the Original?

Moyer. When I was taken by Mr. Murfey and Mr. Hetherington the laſt Year, the Soldiers and Tories came and took them away, with other Papers I had of the ſame buſineſs.

L. C. Juſt. Was the Paper you tranſlated from, of his hand-writing?

Moyer. No my Lord, the Paper I took this out of, was a Copy of the Original.

L. C. Juſt. Was the Original of his hand-writing?

Moyer. Yes, it was.

L. C. Juſt. Where did you take it?

Moyer. In Caprennica, when I met with my Lord's Page.

L. C. Juſt. What made you take a Copy of it?

Moyer. It was in Latin and Italian, and I tranſlated it afterwards.

L. C. Juſt. And the Engliſh Father, you ſay, made bold to open it.

Moyer. Yes, becauſe he thought 'twas a Letter of Recommendations; but the Original of the Statutes made at Clouds, I did take the Original and gave a Copy to the Page.

L. C. Juſt. Have you the Original here?

Moyer. Yes my Lord, under his own hand.

Plunket. That's another thing.

L. C. Juſt. But we would know that other thing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I deſire that he would produce it, 'tis his own hand-writing, ſee whether his Grace can deny it.

Moyer. The ſigning of it is his own hand-writing, I got the writing along with the Letter, and thinking to have a Copy of the one as well as of the other; it was the Statutes I got, and I never knew I had them till I was in Madrid in Spain.

Then the Paper was ſhewn to the Priſoner.

Plunket. My Lord, 'tis my hand.

Moyer. Indeed my Lord, it is your own hand.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He owns it.

Moyer. And there is an Order in thoſe Statutes, wherein Ireland was bound to ſend ſo much mony to Rome upon ſuch a deſign.

Then the Witneſs read the Title in Latin.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Look out that Clauſe for the raiſing of the mony.

Moyer. My Lord, 'tis that I look for. Cum toti Clero in Hibernia neceſſarium ſit.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. That is but negotia generally.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That was to ſolicite their Affairs.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis 500 l. in the whole.

728 The Tryal of Dr. Oliver Plunket. 33 Car. 2

Plunket. Is it 500 l.?

Moyer. 'Tis in Figures a 5 and two (00.)

Plunket. My Lord this is counterfeit, 'tis put in by other Ink.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Like enough ſo.

L. C. Juſt. Nothing more ordinary, you leave a blank for the Sum, and then, may be, you put it in with other Ink.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. How much do you ſay was the mony, Dr. Plunket?

Plunket. My Lord, every Agent that is kept at Rome hath a maintenance, as all Countries have their Agents at Rome.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. How much was it?

Plunket. It was 50 l. a Year.

L. C. Juſt. Look you Mr. Plunket, conſider with yourſelf, 50 or 500 in this Caſe is not 5 farthings difference, but the mony was to be raiſed by your Order.

Plunket. Ay, but whether it was not raiſed to this Effect. There is never a Nation where the Roman Catholick Religion is profeſſed, but hath an Agent for their Spiritual Affairs at Rome, and this was for the Spiritual Affairs of the Clergy of Ireland.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And the Letter was for Spiritual Affairs too, was it not?

Plunket. I deſire nothing, that is a truth, every Nation hath an Agent, and that Agent muſt be maintained; and the reaſon is this, becauſe we have many Colledges beyond Sea, and ſo there is no Country of Roman Catholicks, but hath an Agent in Rome.

L. C. Juſt. You had better reſerve your ſelf till by and by, to anſwer that and the Letter together; for this is but a ſmall part of the Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. About this Letter you were ſpeaking of, pray, will you tell what fell out about it.

Moyer. I will tell you how it fell out afterwards. Then I came along into Marſeilles in France, and there were two Captains that had as much notice as I had in that Letter, for they were diſcourſing that they would advance themſelves in the French King's ſervice, and hoped, that by the King of France's help to have the Roman Catholick faith ſet up in their own Country; why, that diſcourſe paſſed off, for I was mightily afraid of any ſuch thing, becauſe I was of another opinion; for perhaps I might think the Roman Catholick Faith would flouriſh as well as ever it did, and hoped ſo as well as any body elſe, but not by the Sword. As I came to Madrid, there came one Hugh O Donnell, Son to O Donnell, with Letters of Recommendation, and thoſe Letters were to intitle the young man Earl of Tyrone; and likewiſe that his Majeſty, the King of Spain, ſhould help him for Ireland, according to the form of the Letters he had. And then as I came for Ireland, ſpeedily after there came Letters of Recommendation to me, that I ſhould preſent my ſelf to my Lord Primate, to hear Confeſſions and be heard preach. I came to his Lordſhip at his own Houſe the 9th of December (74,) and there he kept me ſeveral hours, and approved me; and the Copy of the Approbation I have to ſhew. And after a long diſpute we went aſide, and went to look Father Patrick, and there he ſhewed me ſuch and ſuch things. And after a long diſcourſe I told my Lord Primate, I ſee your Lordſhip's Letter, which you ſent by young O Neale, in ſuch a place, and he ſhew'd me the Contents of it and ſaid, Ay, my Lord, 'tis a good Intention and Deſign, if it can be done without Bloodſhed: Then my Lord muſed a little, and he ſaid, Well Father Francis, (which is my Name in Religion, my Chriſtian Name was John) pray will you keep it ſecret? Well my Lord, ſaid I, you need not fear; for, ſaid he, whatever I have done herein was not for my own good, but for the publick good of the Catholicks. Well ſaid I, 'tis well. Then does he commend me into the Pariſh of where this Mr. Murfey here was to put in a Bull, that I had from my Lord Primate, which Bull was brought here laſt year; and there he proffer'd me high Promotions, if I would further ſuch things, and ſolicite ſuch Gentlemen as I knew would be private in ſuch a buſineſs, ſuch as were old Commanders among my Friends and Relations. Shortly after this I ſaw Plunket and Biſhop Tyrrell, and Captain Con O Neale, practiſing to bring Soldiers ready for Ireland, aſſoon as they could get opportunity. This Captain Con O Neale coming to the place where we kept our Priory, and he and his Brothers were Sons to General O Neale. And there Captain Con comes in the Night-time and lodges with us, and diſcourſed with his Brother and I, becauſe I was his Companion beyond Sea, about theſe matters, That he expected my Lord Primate and Biſhop Tyrrell's coming thither that Night, to make ſome propoſals about the Church and other Affairs. After 10 a Clock, or thereabouts, my Lord Primate and Biſhop Tyrrel came, with others in their Company, and there they and Father O Neale did conſult amongſt themſelves, that they ſhould ſend Captain Con to France and to Barcelona, with ſuch and ſuch Inſtruments; and ſending thoſe Inſtruments away, Captain Con departs the Country and goes for France ſoon after; and ſpeedily my Lord Primate undertook, that he and Biſhop Tyrrel ſhould view Munſter and Ulſter, and other parts of Ireland, to ſee how Affairs ſtood. Soon after my Lord Primate calls a General Provincial Council, and ſends out his Orders to levy ſuch and ſuch Taxes and Subſidies, and Warrants to all the Pariſh Prieſts, that they ſhould give them new Liſts to know whether the Numbers they had ſent to Rome before, would comply with that Liſt. And then O Neale went to view the Forts of Charlemont and Dun-Gannon, whilſt thoſe Lords did collect the mony: The Orders I have ſeen with my own proper Eyes, and his own man confeſſed before the Council in Ireland, that my Lord gave them under his hand.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Year was this?

Moyer. It was in (76) to the beſt of my remembrance.

L. C. Juſt. Look you Sir, was this at a Provincial meeting?

Moyer. Yes, my Lord, a General National Council, to ſend over Inſtruments, to tell them, that they were ready to aſſiſt any foreign Army, that ſhould help on the deſign.

L. C. Juſt. And to raiſe mony?

Moyer. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Have you paid him any mony?

Moyer. I was exempted myſelf, but I have ſeen others.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. How many?

Moyer. I believe 30.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. It was not a ſecret thing then, but openly done by them.

Moyer. Yes, I ſaw them when they came with orders, orders, there were four Prieſts, and they had a great Cloak-bag going with orders up and down.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Why were you exempted?

Moyer. Becauſe I am a Regular Prieſt.

Sir Fra. Wythins. You ſay you ſaw the Orders for raiſing of mony, how do you know for what it was to be employ'd?

Moyer. It was there ſpecified down.

Plunket. Can you ſhew any of the Orders?

Moyer. I could not take them, they did not concern me.

Sir Fra. Wythins. How was it ſpecified?

Moyer. To levy ſo much mony per Prieſt. I cannot remember the particular Sum; but that every Prieſt ſhould give ſo much towards an Agent in Rome to ſolicite their Buſineſs, and forward it.

L. C. Juſt. What year was it?

Moyer. (76.)

L. C. Juſt. Was any of the mony ſpecified for raiſing an Army, or bringing in the French?

Moyer. It was both for the Agent and to ſummon a National Council, to get things ready prepared to entertain and accept the French Army when it ſhould come. I am not ſo good in expreſſing myſelf in Engliſh.

L. C. Juſt. Your ſenſe is good, 'tis no matter for your expreſſion.

Mr. Jones. What more do you know?

Moyer. I know that he had the ſame Council, and that they did agree upon the buſineſs, and this I know by one Patrick Borne, and I being willing that this wicked Action ſhould be hinder'd, ſent to the next Juſtice to diſcharge my ſelf of it, which Juſtice was as favourable to the buſineſs as my Lord himſelf was.

L. C. Juſt. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Mr. Plunket?

Plunket. I deſire to know when he left Ireland.

Moyer. I cannot tell how to number the years, but I think it was in 62 or 63, to the beſt of my remembrance it was 16 or 17 years ago.

Plunket. When did you return?

Moyer. I came back in 74, you know it my Lord.

Plunket. Very well, when did you ſee the Letter with the young man in Caprennica?

Moyer. In (72.)

Plunket. How then did you know my hand, which you had never ſeen?

Moyer. I have ſeen it ſeveral times to ſeveral Inſtruments, to Seignior and I have ſeen ſeveral other Letters of your hand.

Plunket. How did you know my hand?

Moyer. I cannot poſitively ſay, I then knew your hand, but according to relation, I heard it from thoſe Cardinals I converſed with at Rome.

L. C. Juſt. But now you are acquainted with his hand, is it the ſame hand which you have ſeen up and down in writings with his name to?

Moyer. Yes my Lord, it is the very ſame hand.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I ask you Sir, when you came back again and told him you had ſeen ſuch a Letter under his hand with O Neale, did he own it to you?

Moyer. Yes, he did own it, and that he did not do it for his own benefit, but for the publick.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he deſire you to be ſecret?

Moyer. Yes, he did, and to be diſcreet, and he would ſee me highly promoted. And my Lord, you ſent Propoſals to me, to give me 100 l. that I ſhould not proſecute you, according as they told me, and they gave me one Guinea in hand for it.

L. C. Juſt. Some of it came to the hands of Murfey I believe.

Plunket. My Lord, I cannot ſay any thing to this, my hands are tied, becauſe my Witneſſes are not here. My Lord, if I had my Witneſſes and Records, I did not care for all theſe Witneſſes.

L. C. J. But you know, you had time to bring them.

Plunket. My Lord, I deſire to know whether this be his hand (ſhewing the Paper to Mr. Moyer.)

Moyer. Yes, I believe it is.

Plunket. I deſire it may be read.

Moyer. Yes, I am very well ſatisfied it ſhould.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. For my Reverend Father Anthony Guardian of Armagh, Your Letter and Citation —— 'Tis dated in July (78.)

Plunket. He can beſt read it himſelf.

Cl of Cr. Read it right (the Paper being delivered him)

Moyer. My Lord, I pity him with all my heart, that a Man of my own Function, ſhould be brought into Queſtion for ſuch things as theſe are, (he reads) Very Reverend Father Guardian, 'tis dated 1 July (78) Your paternities paternal Letter and Citation homeward, I did inſtantly peruſe. As for my Lord Oliver Plunket, I wrote a Letter to him the day before I ſaw your Reverends laſt, that he might cauſe my fame, which is as dear to me as my Life, to be recalled, or I ſhould cauſe his Name to be fixed at every publick place, which by the Almighty I will do, nature and all reaſon compelling me to do it.

Plunket. My Lord, I ſay this, he ſays he came to my Houſe when he came over, and I imparted this Secret to him, yet you ſee I had denounced him throughout my whole Dioceſs, and he here calls me by all thoſe Names of Elymas, Simon Magus, and Barjeſus, and 'tis impoſſible if I had communicated ſuch a Secret to him, that I would deal ſo with him

Mr. J. Dolben. He does not ſay, you imparted this Secret to him, but he ſays when he told you of the Letter, you anſwered him, but you ſeemed ſurprized and amuſed firſt.

L. C. J. You ſeemed to flatter him then, and told him you hoped to ſee him the beſt of his Order, highly promoted.

Mr. J. Dolben. How came you to fall out, Moyer?

Moyer. When firſt they had this meeting at Brantry, ſeeing a Cloud a coming, and dreading a War, and the Conſequences of it, I went and applyed my ſelf to Sir Hamilton one of His Majeſties Privy Counſellors in Ireland, and I gave in all my Informations the 7th December (76.)

Mr. J. Dolben. And thereupon he denounced you Excommunicate?

Moyer. Yes, and afterwards, when he ſaw I was in Communication and Familiar with theſe Privy Counſellors, then he was certain I had diſcovered the matter, and then he got a great many Devices to get the Letters out of my hand.

Plunket. You ſhall ſee under his own hand all the Stratagem of this, if I had my Witneſſes here here, you ſhould then ſee under his own hand, upon what account he fell out with me. Pray my Lord ask him if this other Letter be his hand.

Moyer. I believe it is my own hand.

L. C. J. Read it.

Moyer. (Reads) Very Reverend Father Guardian (then ſpeaking) My Lord, you know that I was loth to diſcover my ſelf, being among People knowing of the Plot.

L. C. J. Well, read it over.

Moyer. (Reads) The 23d of April (78.) I was ſomewhat comforted by your Letter. But now I hope your Reverence hath conſider'd what wrong I have ſuſtained, by my envious Adverſaries Calumnies, only for ſtanding, as I have a Soul to ſave, for your Rights and Priviledges, as alſo for endeavouring to hinder my Native Countries ruin and deſtruction.

Mr. J. Dolben. Read that again. (which he did.)

Plunket. Obſerve, that I was his Adverſary, for ſtanding for the Rights and Priviledges of the Fryars.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. As alſo for endeavouring to hinder his Countries ruin and deſtruction.

L. C. J. The one and the other were the reaſon of your falling out.

Moyer. (Reads on.)

Moyer. My Lord, I was, I confeſs, a begging Fryar, and ſtood up for the Priviledges of the Fryars.

Plunket. Did you write any Proceſs to Rome againſt me?

Moyer. No, I never did.

Plunket. My Lord, does not he ſay I was in diſgrace at Rome?

Moyer. No, nothing of that.

L. C. J. I don't hear it, but what if he did? what is that to the purpoſe?

Plunket. To ſhew his Contradictions, now he ſays, I was great in Rome, and but then in his Letter he ſays, I was in diſgrace at Rome. Now he ſays, all that he had againſt me, was for his Fryars, and to hinder the deſtruction of his Country, becauſe I hindred the Fryars to beg there, is the deſtruction of the Country, as he was doing there. Upon that he fell out with me, and upon that his own Superiors ſent this Order.

L. C. J. We can't meddle with your Superiors Orders, they are nothing before us.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I think for the preſent, We have done our Evidence.

Plunket. My Lord, to ſhew what was part of the falling out, I would ask him if he was Indicted for any Crime, and found Guilty by a Jury?

Moyer. That was for diſcovering, for I diſcovered it before.

Plunket. My Lord, he confeſſes he was Convicted for giving Powder and Shot to the Rebels.

Mr. J. Dolben. No, he does not ſay ſo, produce the Record, if you have any ſuch thing.

Moyer. To ſatisfie the Court.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Look you Dr. Plunket, if you will ask him any Queſtions, that by Law he is bound to anſwer, do it of Gods Name, we will not interpoſe, but if you ask him any Queſtions that may tend to accuſe himſelf, we muſt tell you he is not bound to anſwer them.

Plunket. He hath been Convicted and found Guilty, he will confeſs it himſelf.

L. C. J. He is not bound to anſwer ſuch a Queſtion.

Moyer. It was a Tory ſwore againſt me, that you did abſolve.

Mr. J. Dolben. Don't tell us a Story of your Tories.

L. C. J. Look you Mr. Plunket, don't miſpend your own time; for the more you trifle in theſe things, the leſs time you will have for your Defence, I deſire you now to conſider, and well husband your time for your Defence; what have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Plunket. My Lord, I tell you, I have no way to defend my ſelf, in that I was denied time to bring over my Records and my Witneſſes which are 10 or 12. And if I had them here, I would ſtand in defiance of all the World to accuſe me; but I have not ſufficient time to bring over my Records and my Witneſſes, and I am brought here out of my Native Country; were I in Ireland, there both I and they ſhould be known: but when I was to be tried, they would not appear; and it is all falſe and only Malice. Theſe Men uſed to call me Oliverus Cromwellus out of Spight.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. You are very like him, a deſtroyer of the Government.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Were not you acquainted with him?

Plunket. This is all I can ſay. If I had my Witneſſes here, I ſhould make my Defence.

L. C. J. Here are ſome things, that if you can give an Anſwer to, you will do well to do it; for they ſtick cloſe to you. They do teſtifie againſt you here, that you did undertake to raiſe a body of Men in Ireland, 70000 Men they ſpeak of out of your own Nation, and all theſe were to joyn with the French for the introducing the Religion of the Romiſh Church into Ireland, and ſettling that again there. And that you in order to this, did take a Survey of all thoſe Roman Catholicks that were able to bear Arms, from 16 to 60; and there is plentiful Evidence, that you did go a Circuit there to peruſe all Towns, and ſee which might be moſt convenient for the taking in and entertaining the French, and landing their Forces; and Charlemont, you did deſign that for one ſtrong place to be taken, and Dun Gannon for another, and that you did deſign the French Army to land at Carlingford, and all that was with you, tells the reaſon you gave, why that ſhould be the place, that they might come up with a burdened Ship to the very Gates of the Town, that you did in order to the entertaining theſe Foreign Forces, raiſe Money, That you did ſend out your Orders ſub pœna ſuſpenſionis to all that were of the Roman Clergy, and that this Money was received, ſeveral of them teſtified that they paid it to you, and this Man hath ſeen great numbers of Perſons pay Money to you upon theſe Accounts. All theſe are Treaſon: what ſay you to them? It does import you to conſider what Anſwer you can give.

Plunket. My Lord, firſt as to the firſt point, I anſwer, that I never receiv'd a Farthing of Money out of my own Diſtrict, and but for my own Livelihood, and that I can prove by thoſe that have received it for me, that I never received over threeſcore Pound a Year in my Life, unleſs ſome Gentleman would now and then give me 10 s. for my relief. For, my Lord, this is the way in Ireland, every Prieſt hath ſo many Families allotted to him, and every Roman man Catholick Family gives 2 s. a Year) as they that profeſs that way, know) and the Prieſts give me who am Superior over them, in my own Diſtrict, ſome 20 s. ſome 30 s. and I never got ſo much in my Life as to maintain a Servant, and this was atteſted before the Council in Ireland.

Mr. J. Dolben. Ay, but the Witneſſes ſay, out of your own Diſtrict you ſent into another Biſhops Dioceſs to Collect Money.

Plunket. My Lord, I ſay I could never get ſo much as to keep a Servant, and till now I never got a Farthing out of my own Dioceſs, unleſs I have been called to an Arbitration or ſome ſuch thing, it may be for my Journey and Expences 40 or 50 Miles they would give me ſomething for my Maintenance. If you ſhould find any thing elſe, I will be content to ſuffer, and if my Evidence were brought from Ireland, there is nothing but what would be made clear, both under their own hands and by Records, and that is all well known, and was atteſted in his Preſence before the Council in Ireland, which threeſcore pounds was a very ſmall thing to maintain me, and I never had above one Servant, and the Houſe I lived in was a little thatch'd Houſe, wherein was only a little Room for a Library, which was not 7 foot high, where once this fellow came to affront me, becauſe I hinder'd him from begging, and that's for the mony. For the Men, I defie any one that ever ſee me make a Liſt of Men in my life, or can produce any Liſt made by my order. I was never in my life at Kingſale, at Corke, at Dun-Gannon, at Lymerick, &c. or thoſe parts of Munſter which were the chief Ports where the French ſhould come in, and not in Carlingford, which is the narrow Seas in Ulſter, which any one that knows the World will judge to be a very improper place for the French to land in. 'Tis all one as to ſay that the French ſhould come in at a poor place where they could get nothing, it being at the narrow Seas, and they never ſaw me there in their lives.

L. C. Juſt. Yes, one does ſay, he was with you.

Plunket. Well, one does ſay he ſaw me there, but if I had my Witneſſes here, I could prove he was a Fryer, and declared an Apoſtate by his own Provincial, as this Gentleman is, and becauſe I hinder'd them to beg in my Diſtricts, therefore they have this malice againſt me, that is all. Well my Lord, that is for that, I was never in my life in Connaught; and they cannot ſay, I took any Liſt in Ulſter, nor was 12 miles in Munſter in my life. But thus my Lord, ſometimes there would be, as our way is, ſo many Families aſſigned to every Prieſt, (and this is the plain truth,) this Prieſt perhaps complains to me of the Inequality, my Companion near me hath 150, and I have but threeſcore, which I muſt rectifie; tho' I never knew but one of theſe Complaints. And if I had my Witneſſes from Ireland and the Records, I would defie all theſe Witneſſes together. For my ſending to Rome, I never had an Agent in Rome for theſe ſeven years paſt, becauſe I was not able to maintain him, and indeed it was a great ſhame to us; becauſe there is never a Community of Fryers, that hath a Colledge beyond Sea, but hath ſome Agent at Rome.

L. C. Juſt. 'Tis a ſhame to have one there, not to want one.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Well, if you have Witneſſes, I cannot tell what to ſay.

Plunket. If I had gotten but to the latter end of the Term, I had defied them all together. And your Lordſhip ſhould have ſeen under their own hands what they were.

L. C. Juſt. You forget this all this while, your own Letter; wherein this matter is, that you had ſearched the Towns and conſider'd it.

Mr. Att. Gen. He does deny there was ſuch a Letter, he does not own there was ſuch a Letter.

Plunket. I, my Lord, I never did write ſuch a Letter. And that young Man that he ſpeaks of, I could prove, if I had my Witneſſes, that he never was in any Service or Company in Ireland, nor writ any Letters by him.

L. C. J. Did you never ſend any Letter by one O Neale?

Plunket. No my Lord, but he went over a begging.

Moyer. This young Man's Brother in Law will teſtifie, that he was your Lordſhips Page.

Plunket. I have 3 Witneſſes that he came there begging naked, and was ſick Three Months, and went over a begging, and was at Rome as a Stragler.

Moyer. Call Hanlet, (who came in.)

Sir Fran. Wythins. Did you know Neale O Neale?

Hanlet. Yes.

Sir Fran. Wythins. Whoſe Servant was he?

Hanlet. My Lord Plunket ſent him to Rome; he was ſent there with his Letters, and I ſaw the young Man and his Letters.

Mr. Jones. Did he come a begging there?

Hanlet. No.

Plunket. Where did you ſee him?

Hanlet. At Mant.

Plunket. Where is that?

Hanlet. In France.

Plunket. And you ſaw him with my Letters?

Hanlet. Yes.

Plunket. And this Man ſays, the Letters were opened at Caprennica, becauſe he thought they were Letters of Recommendation.

Hanlet. Why, he went that way afterwards, and they were not opened, when I ſaw them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you know he was the Doctors Servant?

Hanlet. Yes, he was.

Plunket. Did you ſee him in my Service?

Hanlet. I ſaw him in Mant.

Mr. J. Dolben. How do you know he was the Biſhop's Servant?

Hanlet. Becauſe he ſhew'd me his Letter.

L. C. J. Was he owned for his Servant, and was he taken for his Servant?

Hanlet. Yes.

Plunket. Did he go on Foot, or on Horſeback.

Hanlet. He went on Foot.

Plunket. He was in a poor Condition in a place not above four Miles from Rome, that I can prove.

L. C. J. Did he beg as he went?

Hanlet. No.

L. C. J. Mr. Plunket, if there is any Queſtion you will ask of the Witneſſes; or if there be any Evidence you would give your ſelf, this is your time for the doing of it; if not, we muſt leave your Caſe to the Jury, who have heard the Evidence all along.

Plunket. Only this my Lord, your Lordſhip ſees how I am dealt with. Firſt and foremoſt, I have not time to bring my Witneſſes or my Records, which if I had, I would not weigh one Farthing to leave my Cauſe with any Jury in the World. Beſides all this, I am brought out of my own native Country, where theſe men lived, and I lived, and where my Witneſſes and Records are, which would ſhew what theſe People are. I ſent by the Poſt, and did all that I could, and what can I ſay when I have not my Witneſſes againſt theſe People, they may ſwear any thing in the World. You cannot but obſerve the Improbability of the thing in itſelf, and unto what a Condition I am brought. My Lord, my Life is in imminent Danger, becauſe I am brought out of my own Country, where theſe People would not be believed againſt me.

Records

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I think this matter lies in a narrow Compaſs, the Evidence hath been long; I would only repeat the ſhort heads of that which hath been given at large. He is indicted for a Conſpiracy to kill the King, the Overt Act is an Endeavour to introduce a foreign Power into Ireland, to raiſe an Army, and levy War there; and the Proof of it hath been very full. The Proof in general, that there was a Plot to introduce the French, is plain by all the Witneſſes, and the Proof in particular upon this Perſon at the Bar, hath been as plain as any thing can be. They prove to your Lordſhip in general, that there was an Expectation that the French ſhould come in, that there was an Invitation of Florence Wyer the firſt Witneſs, to go over into France, and ſpeedily he ſhould have a Command upon his return, in Ireland, that there were Preparations; for this appears by the Oath of Secrecy given to ſeveral men. Forty men that came along with Biſhop Tyrrel to keep it private during their Lives. And there was a farther Proof of that general Conſpiracy by Duffy, that when there was a general meeting of ſo many thouſand People for Confirmation, there was by the Gentlemen at that meeting a ſecret Conſultation how to carry on the Deſign, and how to look out the old Officers in the late Rebellion, and to ſee what Poſture they were in, as to the management of this Deſign; and this comes now particularly to the Priſoner, who was by at this Conſultation, ſo the Witneſſes do tell you. But that that comes nearer to him, is, that he did iſſue out Orders for the raiſing of mony, and that he did raiſe mony purſuant to thoſe Orders, and did receive mony for that very purpoſe: This is proved by three Witneſſes, Duffy, and Mac Legh, who paid the mony, and by Moyer the laſt Witneſs, who ſaw him receive it from ſeveral Perſons. This is poſitive upon him; nay, they ſay farther, that there was a Liſt made of the ſeveral men, in the ſeveral Pariſhes, that were able to bear Arms upon occaſion, from ſixteen to ſixty, and there was a Liſt of a matter of threeſcore thouſand men that were ready upon any Occaſion to riſe for the Purpoſe, and this Liſt was deliver'd over into the hands of the Priſoner at the Bar. There is one Witneſs, Duffy, that ſays farther, that he ſaw a Letter under his hand in France to the Cardinal Bouillon, to invite the French King into Ireland; and he did wonder that he ſhould ſpend his Time and Blood in Wars againſt Spain, which was a Roman Catholick, and not come into Ireland to extirpate the Hereticks And this Letter is confirmed by another Letter, which was ſeen by Moyer, a Copy of which is produced, which he tranſlated from the Original in Latin, and the Letter was ſent to Rome by Neale O Neale, whom the Priſoner ſays he had no Concern for, but to give him ſome Recommendations.

Plunket. I gave him no Recommendations.

L. C. Juſt. No, he ſays he did not give him any, nor ſent any Letter by him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then he urged, that he went along begging by the way; but 'tis proved he was ſent by him, and ſent with Letters, and that by his Brother-in-Law, who met him at Mants. And 'tis proved by Moyer, who ſaw the Letter opened, taking it to be but a common Letter of Recommendation, he read the Letter and took a Copy of it, and tranſlated that Copy, which Tranſlation is enough to verify all the matter which the Witneſſes have ſworn, for 'tis agreeing to what he ſaid to Cardinal Bouillon in his other Letter, that it was more proper for the Catholick Princes to agree together to extirpate Hereſy, than to vary amongſt themſelves; that now was the time; for there were threeſcore thouſand men ready to riſe upon ſuch an Invaſion. This is the Subſtance of the Letter, and this proves fully the Conſpiracy this man was ingaged in, his receiving mony, his liſting men, and his Invitation of foreign Princes. And this is fully proved.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And ſo his viewing the Ports too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was likewiſe agreed that Carlingford ſhould be the Port, and 'tis like enough to be the Port, for 'tis a very large Port, that Ships of the greateſt Burden may come up to the Town, and the Town itſelf but a weak Town. This is the Subſtance of the Evidence, and this is Proof enough, we think, to convict any man of this Fact.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I ſhall trouble you but with one word that hath been omitted. I think 'tis a Cauſe of great Example, and that thing which the Priſoner ſeems to make his Excuſe, hath been anſwered by a Favor and Indulgence from the Court in a very extraordinary manner. For, in as much as this Gentleman would make it a very hard Caſe, that he is brought out of his own Country, and hath not his Witneſſes; it is very well known that by a particular Favour of the Court, which is not uſual in theſe Caſes, he had between five and ſix weeks time for preparation for his Tryal: So that truly as to what does appear, I think all the Witneſſes that have been examined, are Witneſſes to be credited, except you Gentlemen, of your ſelves can convict upon your own Knowledge theſe Perſons of any Miſdemeanor, which I think you cannot, much leſs of Perjury. But beſides, the Witneſſes we have produced, all which ſpeak to the Plot in general, and four of them fix it upon the Perſon at the Bar; they ſpeak particularly, and every one agrees in Circumſtances, and that other that ſpoke mincingly, I put it upon; it is the greateſt Evidence that can be. For that perſon that could come before a Grand-Jury, and there be the main Witneſs, but when he comes here, muſt be ſcru'd and pump'd to diſcover the ſeventy thouſand men. And I ſuppoſe you did obſerve how difficult it was to know of him, whether this perſon was Primate of Ireland, or whether it were from the Authority of the King or the Pope; a very probable thing, that he ſhould be ſuch a one as the King deſigned to be Primate and Superintendent of of Ireland. Further my Lord, this I desire to take notice of too, that Wyer, the first Witness, fixes four particular things upon the Prisoner at the Bar, which have not yet been taken notice of. First, he fixes a Discourse with another Person that was Competitor with him for this very Office, Bishop Duffy, and he gives the Reason why he was admitted into the Office rather than the other, because he was a Man of greater Ability to carry on the Design, and tho' he does not give you an account of the Design; yet the rest of the Evidence do, and make it to be the Design then carrying on. Another thing is, he tells you of the sending one into France, that was to come back again in order to this Design, I think his Name was Mac Donnel, and then the great Tory Flemming and he were to come back again Colonels in the Army that was to be raised. The next Person, that fixes it upon him, is Mr. Han O Neal, and he gives the plainest Circumstances, That at a time in August when Bishop Tyrrel came to the House of one Bradey with so many Men well equipped with such and such Arms, and took the Oath of Secrecy; he himself, but not only he, but the other Priest Mac Legh, was present at the same time, and took the said Oath, and he does tell you that that very Priest was sent to Dublin to discover it at that very time, and so he hath fixed the Person, and Time, and the Business they came about. Then Mac Legh comes and tells you the same thing in every Circumstance; ay, but says the Prisoner at the Bar, and would make it to be a great Objection, How chance that they have concealed this all the while, and not discovered it to some Justice of the Peace? Why, says one, I was under your Jurisdiction in that place that is the very reason he gives wherefore he durst not, and says another, I was concerned and as earnest as the Prisoner or any body else, but going into France, I observed the Slavery that all the Subjects were under, under the Tyranny of that King, and apprehending that the same King was to come into Ireland by the means of these Gentlemen; I was concerned at it, and had rather the Devil should reign over us than such an one, and therefore I will discover it. And he said very well I think, that he had rather have the Devil to reign; for it seems to be him, or one in his shape that reigns after that manner. And there are two Persons that swear to the very Year that they were obliged to raise the Money, and swear positively, they saw his Orders, Sub pœna suspensionis, I do not know whether they meant hang'd or suspended from their Office. But it seems it was so terrible, that it made them pay twenty Shillings apiece for three Years successively. And there is another Gentleman that tells you, that out of a small Living, wherein he was concerned only as Curate to a third Person it had been paid two or three times, and another tho' he was exempt himself from the Payment, yet so great a Confident was he of the Prisoner's at the Bar, that he was present when he saw thirty or forty pay this Tax, and whereas the Prisoner at the Bar would make it thought a strange thing, that he should raise so much Money, who had but an house seven foot high, it seems there is above that thatched House a Chappel.

Plunket. There is no Chappel.

Sir. Geo. Jeff. But now my Lord, that which substantially proves what these Witnesses say, is the Letter that is sent to Rome to the Secretary of the College de propaganda Fide, which is the last Letter that the last Gentleman speaks of, wherein he does particularly take notice, that he had taken care to raise such Moneys, and view all the Ports and Places of Strength. And my Lord, that which is a very great Circumstance to back the Evidence of the first Letter to the French Cardinal Bouillon, which was taken notice of by the first Witness, and there is such a Passage in this too that the Catholick Princes should not spill one anothers Blood, when they might better employ it here in Ireland for the Propagation of the Faith; this last Letter takes particular Notice of this very Instance too, that instead of drawing their Swords against one another, they had better come to promote the Catholick Faith in Ireland. These four Witnesses are punctual and precise in every particular Circumstance of the Case, and against them there is nothing but the common Objection. If I had such Records, and Witnesses here, I could make my Defence, that is, if he had those things that he has not, he might appear to be another Man than he is; but I am sure, as it appears upon the Evidence that hath been given by all the Witnesses, there is a plain Proof, and a full Proof of every Treason laid to his Charge.

Plunket. My Lord, I desire these Witnesses may be called [giving in a Paper.]

Cryer. David Fitz-Gerard, Eustace Commines and Paul Gormar.

L. C. J. Who gave him this Paper? he had it not before.

Stranger. I was told that these were good Evidences for Dr. Plunket, and I gave him the Names.

L. C. J. Where are they?

Stranger. They are hard by.

Mr. Att Gen. Where is Eustace Commines? for he was one that gave in Evidence against the Prisoner.

Then Paul Gormar appeared.

L. C. J. What would you ask him?

Plunket I desire to know of him, whether Mr. Moyer did allure and intice him to swear against me?

Gormar. Indeed my Lord he never did.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more?

Gormar. But this my Lord, Mr. Moyer and I were in Discourse, and he said if there was Law to be had in Ireland, he would shew Mr. Plunket his share in it.

L. C. J. Well, what of that?

Gormar. My Lord, I did come out of Ireland to reveal what Plots the Irish had against the King, and as for this Mr. Plunket, as I have a Soul to save, I never heard of any Misdemeanor of him.

Mr. J. Dolben. How came you here to day?

Gormar. I was summoned.

Mr. J. Dolben. By whom? Was it the Attorney General or Plunket that summoned you?

Gormar. Here is the Summons.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It is a common Subpœna.

Plunket. I never sent for him.

Gormar. It was not against you, they knew I had nothing against you, I thought you did more good in Ireland than hurt, ſo I declare it.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes? If Fitz-Gerard or Commines will come, we will hear them.

Plunket. My Lord, I have not any more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen of the Jury, This Gentleman here Mr. Plunket, is indicted of High-Treaſon, and 'tis for Conſpiring the King's Death, and endeavouring to bring the French Army into Ireland for to invade that Kingdom, and to plant the Romiſh Religion in that Kingdom. You have had Evidence againſt him that hath been fully examined. And theſe things do ſeem to be very plain by the Witneſſes, That he himſelf hath taken a Commiſſion, or a Grant, or what you will pleaſe to call it, from the Pope to be Primate of Ireland, that he hath taken upon him to make Laws as the Provincial, and that he hath undertaken and endeavoured to ſettle the Popiſh Religion in that Kingdom, and in order to that, he hath invited the Aid of the French Army, and that he hath for the better landing of them, looked out what places were moſt convenient for them; That he hath ſet a Tax upon the Clergy within his Province for the facilitating of all this, and for the making Preparations for the Entertainment of this Army. This the Witneſſes teſtifie againſt him, and that there were ſome Towns, as Dungannon and another Town, that were to be betrayed to the French. Now you muſt conſider concerning theſe Witneſſes: If you believe the Evidence that hath been given, and which hath been repeated by the King's Council, and if you believe that he did deſign to bring in a French Army, to eſtabliſh the Roman Religion there again, and that he took upon him to raiſe Money for that purpoſe, ſurvey'd the Ports, and made ſuch Proviſions, as the Witneſſes ſpeak of, and was in that Conſpiracy; you muſt find him Guilty. I leave it to you, it is a pretty ſtrong Evidence, he does not ſay any thing to it, but that his Witneſſes are not come over.

Plunket. I can ſay nothing to it, but give my own Proteſtation, that there is not one Word of this ſaid againſt me is true, but all plain Romance, I never had any Communication with any French Miniſter, Cardinal, nor other.

Then the Jury withdrew for a quarter of an Hour, and being returned gave this Verdict.

Cl. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up thy hand. How ſay you, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Plunket. Deo gratia, God be thanked.

Then the Verdict was Recorded, and the Court roſe. And the Keeper went away with his Priſoner.

On Wedneſday 15 Junii, 1681. Oliver Plunket was brought to the Bar to receive his Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment againſt the Priſoner Oliver Plunket.

Cl. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up thy Hand; Thou haſt been Indicted of High-Treaſon, thou haſt been thereupon Arraigned, thou haſt thereunto pleaded not Guilty, and for thy Tryal haſt put thy ſelf upon God and the Country, which Country hath found thee Guilty, what haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon thee, and Execution be thereupon awarded according to the Law.

Plunket. My Lord, may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I have ſomething to ſay, which if your Lordſhip will conſider ſeriouſly, may occaſion the Courts Commiſeration and Mercy. I have my Lord for this Fact been Arraigned in Ireland, and brought to my Tryal there. At the Day of my Tryal all the Witneſſes voluntarily abſented themſelves, ſeeing I had Records and Witneſſes to convince them evidently and ſhew what Men they were, and the prepenſed Malice that they did bear to me, and ſo finding that I could clear my ſelf evidently, they abſented themſelves, on the Day of my Tryal no Chriſtian appeared, but hither over they came, and procure that I ſhould be brought hither, where I could not have a Jury that knew the Qualities of my Adverſaries, or who knew me, or the Circumſtances of the Places, Times, and Perſons; the Juries here as I ſay were altogether Strangers to theſe Affairs, and ſo my Lord they could not know many things that conduce to a fair Tryal, and it was morally impoſſible they ſhould know it. I have been accuſed principally and chiefly for ſurveying the Ports, for fixing upon Carlingford for the Landing of the French, for the having of ſeventy Thouſand Men ready to joyn with the French, for collecting Money for the Agents in this matter, for aſſiſting of the French and this great Utopian Army. A Jury in Ireland conſiſting of Men that lived in that Country, or any Man in the World that hath but ſeen Ireland in a Map, would eaſily ſee there was no probability that that ſhould be a place fit for the French to land in, tho' he never was in Ireland, yet by the Map, he would ſee they muſt come between the narrow Seas all along to Ulſter, and the Rocks, and ſuch places would make it very dangerous; and by their own Confeſſion it was a poor Town, and of no ſtrength, a very ſmall Garriſon, which had not been ſo, if it had been a place of any Conſideration. And whereas I had Influence only upon one Province, as is well known, tho' I had the Title of Primate of all Ireland, as the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury hath of all England; yet the Arch-Biſhop of York will not permit him to meddle with his Province; and 'tis well known by the Gentry there, and thoſe that are accuſtomed to the place; That in all the Province of Ulſter, take Men, Women, and Children of the Roman Catholicks, they could not make up ſeventy Thouſand. This, a Jury there my Lord had known very well, and therefore the Laws of England, which are very favourable to the Priſoner, have provided that there ſhould be a Jury of the Place where the Fact was Committed, as Sir Thomas Gaſcoine, as I have heard, had a Yorkſhire Jury, tho' he was tried at London. And then after my coming here, I was kept cloſe Priſoner for ſix Months, not any Chriſtian was permitted to come at me, nor did I know any thing, how things ſtood in the World. I was brought here the third of May, to be Arraigned, and I did petition your Lordſhip to have ſome Time for my Tryal, and I would have it put off till Michaelmas, but your Lordſhips did not think fit to grant ſo long, but only till the eighth of this Month, when my Witneſſes who were ready at the Sea ſide, would not come over without Paſſes, and I could not get over the Records without an Order from hence; which which Records would have ſhewn that ſome of the Witneſſes were Indicted and found Guilty of high Crimes, ſome were impriſoned for Robberies, and ſome of the Witneſſes were Infamous People, ſo I petition'd the eighth of this Month, that I might have time but for twelve Days more, but your Lordſhip thought, when the Motion was made, that it was only to put off my Tryal, and now my Witneſſes are come to Coventry yeſterday morning, and they will be here in a few Days, and ſo for want of time to defend my ſelf in, I was expoſed to my Adverſaries, who were ſome of my own Clergy, whom for their debauched Lives I have corrected, as is well known there. I will not deny my ſelf, but that as long as there was any Toleration and Connivance, I did execute the Function of a Biſhop, and that by the ſecond of Elizabeth is only a Premunire, and no Treaſon. So that my Lord, I was expoſed Defenceleſs to my Enemies, whereas now my Witneſſes are come on, that could make all appear. I did beg for twelve Days time, whereby you might have ſeen as plain as the Sun, what thoſe Witneſſes are, that began the Story, and ſay theſe things againſt me. And my Lord, for thoſe Depoſitions of the ſeventy thouſand Men, and the Monies that are Collected of the Clergy in Ireland, they cannot be true, for they are a poor Clergy that have no Revenue nor Land; They live as the Presbyterians do here, there is not a Prieſt in all Ireland, that hath certainly or uncertainly above threeſcore Pounds a Year, and that I ſhould Collect of them forty Shillings a piece, for the raiſing of an Army, or for the Landing of the French at Carlingford; if it had been brought before a Jury in Ireland, it would have been thought a meer Romance. If they had accuſed me of a Præmunire for the exerciſe of my Epiſcopal Function, perhaps they had ſaid ſomething that might have been believed, but my Lord, as I am a dying Man, and hope for Salvation by my Lord and Saviour, I am not guilty of one point of Treaſon they have ſwore againſt me, no more than the Child that was born but yeſterday. I have an Atteſtation under my Lord of Eſſex's hand concerning my good Behaviour in Ireland, and not only from him, but from my Lord Berkly, who was alſo Governor there, which the King's Attorney ſaw; But here I was brought, here I was tried, and having not time to bring my Witneſſes, I could not prove my Innocency, as otherwiſe I might. So that, if there be any Caſe in the World that deſerves Compaſſion, ſurely my Caſe does: and 'tis ſuch a rare Caſe, as I believe you will not find two of them in Print, that one arraigned in Ireland, ſhould be tried here afterwards for the ſame Fact. My Lord, if there be any thing in the World that deſerves Pity, this does, for I can ſay, as I hope for Mercy, I was never Guilty of any one point they have ſwore againſt me, and if my Petition for time had been granted, I could have ſhewn how all was prepenſe Malice againſt me, and have produced all Circumſtances that could make out the Innocency of a Perſon. But not having had time enough, and being Tried, I am at your Mercy.

L. C. Juſt. Well, you have nothing further to ſay in Bar of Judgment, you have ſaid all you can?

Plunket. I have nothing further to ſay, but what I have ſaid.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, while Judgment was paſſing upon the Priſoner.

L. C. Juſt. Look you Mr. Plunket, you have been here indicted of a very great and heinous Crime, the greateſt and moſt heinous of all Crimes, and that is, High Treaſon; and truly yours is a Treaſon of the higheſt Nature, 'tis a Treaſon in truth againſt God and your King, and the Country where you lived. You have done as much as you could to diſhonour God in this Caſe; for the bottom of your Treaſon was, your ſetting up your falſe Religion, than which, there is not any thing more diſpleaſing to God, or more pernicious to Mankind in the world. A Religion that is ten times worſe than all the Heatheniſh Superſtitions; the moſt diſhonorable and derogatory to God and his Glory of all Religions or pretended Religions whatſoever, for it undertakes to diſpenſe with God's Laws, and to pardon the breach of them. So that certainly a greater Crime there cannot be committed againſt God, than for a man to endeavour the Propagation of that Religion; but you, to effect this, have deſign'd the Death of your lawful Prince and King. And then your deſign of Blood in the Kingdom where you lived, to ſet all together by the Ears, to deſtroy poor innocent People, to proſtitute their Lives and Liberties, and all that is dear to them, to the Tyranny of Rome and France; and that by introducing a French Army. What greater Evil can be deſigned by any man? I mention theſe things, becauſe they have all been fully proved againſt you; and that you may take notice, and repent of them, and make your Peace with God, by a particular Application for Mercy for all theſe Faults; for it ſeems to me, that againſt God, your Prince, and Fellow Subjects, you have behaved yourſelf very ill, deſigning very great Evil to all theſe; and now it hath pleaſed God to bring you to Judgment.

I muſt tell you, peradventure what you urge for yourſelf might introduce pity, if it were to be believed; that is, that you are innocent, and had Witneſſes to prove it; but we cannot ſuppoſe any man innocent, that hath had a legal and a fair Tryal, and a Tryal with as much Candor to you, as your Caſe could bear, or as perhaps any man in ſuch a Caſe ever had. You had time upon your Requeſt to ſend for your Witneſſes, to help you in your Defence, and to have proved your Innocence, if you could have done it; Time long enough to your own Content, you yourſelf thought it ſo, at the time it was given. To give a Priſoner under your Circumſtances, five or ſix weeks time to ſend for Witneſſes, is not uſual; we could have put you upon a preſent Defence, and hurried you out of the World by a ſudden Tryal, if we had had any deſign againſt you; but we go on in a fair way, and with legal Proceedings, and with as much Reſpect to you, as in ſuch a Caſe could be uſed, for we gave you all the fair Hearing and Liberty that you deſired to have.

Look you, as to what you urge, that your Tryal was in this Kingdom, whereas your Offence was in another, that is a thing that does not become you by any means to object; for you have had a Tryal here by honeſt Perſons, and that according to the Laws which obtain in this Kingdom, and that too of Ireland, which is by a Statute not made on purpoſe to bring you into a Snare, but an ancient Statute, and not without Presidents of its having been put in Execution before your time: For your own Country will afford you several Presidents in this Case, as O Rurke, and several others that have been Arraigned and Condemned for Treason done there. So that you have no reason to except against the Legality of your Tryal. You say, now you have Witnesses that could prove all this matter; why that lies in the mouth of any man that is condemned to say; but pray consider with yourself, what regard ought to be given to this. We cannot help it, if your Witnesses don't come; you may remember they wanted not Time nor Opportunity to come over; but you told us they would not come unless they had a Passport.

Plunket. My Lord, they got a Pass to come over afterwards, and so in eight days they came hither.

L. C. Just. You might have provided yourself, if they wanted such a thing. In the first place, no body is bound to give it them, much less could you expect it for them without asking.

Plunket. I could not get the Copies of the Records neither by any means, unless I had an Order from the Council, and they would not give that Order, unless your Lordship appointed it.

L. C. Just. We cannot tell that, you should have petitioned in time.

Plunket. How could any one foresee, unless he was God Almighty, that they would deny it, or that he could not get out a Copy of a Record, paying for it, without a Petition. All the Friends I had, told me, upon motion there it might be had; but here I have it under the Lieutenants and Councils hands, that they would give no Copy of Records without Order from hence, which before I could know it, it was impossible for me to have them ready against my Tryal.

L. C. Just. Look you Sir, I do speak this to you, to shew you that those Objections, which you seem to make against your Tryal, have no weight at all; but in this Case it is not the Jury that are so material as the Witnesses themselves. I appeal to all that heard your Tryal, if they could so much as doubt but that you were guilty of what you were charged with. For consider, here were Persons that were of your own Religion, the most of them Priests, I think almost all of them in Orders.

Plunket. There were two Fryers, and a Priest whom I have endeavoured to correct this seven Years, and they were Renegadoes from our Religion, and declared Apostates.

L. C. Just. Look you Sir, they gave an Evidence very home to your matter; you had Liberty to examine them, and they gave you a rational Account of any thing you ask'd. Let me but put you in mind of one thing. You made Exceptions to one's Evidence, (and indeed that was very much of your Exception to all) why he did not reveal this in all that time: Truly he told you he was of your mind, till he went into France, and saw what a Slavery and Mischief you endeavoured to introduce upon his and your own Countrymen, and this his Spirit rose against, to see what a Condition Ireland was like to be brought into. And pray, did he not give you a full Answer to that Question?

Plunket. I had sufficient Witnesses to prove he was an Apostate, and was chastised by me, and therefore had prepensed malice against me.

L. C. Just. Therefore I have spoken this to the Satisfaction, I hope, of yourself and all that hear it. I do now wish you to consider, you are near your end. It seems you have lived in a false Religion hitherto; it is not too late at any time to repent, I wish you may have the Grace to do so: In the mean time there is no room for us here to grant you any kind of mercy, tho' I'll tell you, we are inclined to pity all Malefactors: Whoever have done evil, we are inclined to pity them, and wish heartily that they may repent, as we do that you may, of what you have done. But all we can do now, is to say what the Law says, and that is to pass Judgment upon you.

Plunket. May it please your Lordship to give me Leave to speak one word. If I were a man that had no care of my Conscience in this matter, and did not think of God Almighty, or Conscience, or Heaven, or Hell, I might have saved my Life; for I was offer'd it by divers People here, so I would but confess my own Guilt, and accuse others. But my Lord, I had rather die ten thousand Deaths, than wrongfully accuse any body. And the time will come when your Lordship will see what these Witnesses are, that have come in against me. I do assure your Lordship, if I were a man that had not good Principles, I might easily have saved my Life, but I had rather die ten thousand Deaths, than wrongfully to take away one farthing of any mans Goods, one day of his Liberty, or one minute of his Life.

L. C. Just. I am sorry to see you persist in the Principles of that Religion.

Plunket. They are those Principles, that even God Almighty cannot dispence withal.

L. C. Just. Well, however the Judgment which we give you is that which the Law says and speaks. And therefore you must go from hence to the place from whence you came, that is to Newgate, and from thence you shall be drawn thro' the City of London to Tyburn; there you shall be hang'd by the Neck, but cut down before you are dead, your Bowels shall be taken out, and burnt before your Face, your Head shall be cut off, and your Body be divided into four Quarters, to be disposed of as his Majesty pleases. And I pray God to have Mercy upon your Soul.

Plunket. My Lord, I hope I may have this Favor, of Leave, for a Servant and some few Friends that I have, to come at me.

L. C. Just. I think you may have Liberty for any Servant to come to you, I know nothing to the contrary.

Plunket. And some few Friends that I have in Town.

L. C. Just. But I would advise you to have some Minister to come to you, some Protestant Minister.

Plunket. My Lord, if you please, there are some in Prison, that never were indicted or accused of any Crime, and they will do my Business very well; for they will do it according to the Rites of our own Church, which is the ancient Usage, they cannot do better, and I would not alter it now.

L. C. Just. Mr. Richardson, you may let his Servant come to him, and any Friend in your Presence, to see there be no Evil done, nor any Contrivances that may hereafter have an Influence upon Affairs.

Mr. Just. Jones. Be you present, or somebody.

Plunket.

Plunket. My Servant I hope may come, without his being preſent.

L. C. Juſt. Yes, yes, his Servant may be with him alone. Well Sir, we wiſh better to you than you do to yourſelf.

Plunket. God Almighty bleſs your Lordſhip. And now my Lord, as I am a dead man to this World, and as I hope for Mercy in the other World, I was never guilty of any of the Treaſons laid to my Charge, as you will hear in time; and my Character you may receive from my Lord Chancellor of Ireland, my Lord Berkley, my Lord Eſſex, and the Duke of Ormond.

Then the Keeper took away his Priſoner, and upon Friday the firſt of July, he was executed according to the Sentence.

The TRYAL of Sir Miles Stapleton, Bar.

33 Car. 2. 1681.

SIR Miles Stapleton, Baronet, was indicted at a Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer at the Weſt Riding of the County of York, and the Indictment was removed by a Writ of Certiorari to the King's Bench, where Sir Miles Stapleton having been arraigned and pleaded to the ſame Not Guilty, was ſent down to be tried in the County of York. The Indictment was as followeth.

' Sir Miles Stapleton late of Carleton in the ' County of York, Baronet, ſtands indicted, for ' that he as a falſe Traytor againſt our illuſtrious ' and excellent Prince, King Charles the ſecond, ' his natural Lord, not having God before his ' eyes, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, ' but by the inſtigation of the Devil being mov'd ' and ſeduced, the cordial Love, and true, due, ' and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our Lord the King ſhould bear ' to him, and of right are bound to bear, wholly ' withdrawing, deviſing, and with all his power ' intending, to diſturb the Peace and common ' Tranquillity of this Realm, and to bring and ' put our ſaid Lord the King to death and final ' deſtruction, and the true Worſhip of God in ' this Kingdom by Law eſtabliſhed and uſed, to ' alter to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, ' and to move and ſtir up War againſt our ſaid ' Lord the King in this Realm, and to ſubvert ' the Government of this Kingdom, the 30th ' day of May, in the thirty firſt Year of our ſaid ' Lord the King's Reign, at the Pariſh of Barwick in Elmett in the ſaid County of York, in the ' Weſt Riding of the ſame County, with divers ' other falſe Traytors unknown, did traiterouſly ' compaſs, imagin and intend, the death and ' final deſtruction of our ſaid Lord the King, ' and to change and alter, and wholly to ſubvert ' the ancient Government of this Realm, and to ' depoſe and wholly to deprive the King of the ' Crown and Government of the ſaid Kingdom, ' and to root out the true Proteſtant Religion: ' And to fulfil and accompliſh the ſame moſt ' wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Imaginations ' and Purpoſes, the ſaid Sir Miles Stapleton, and ' other falſe Traytors unknown, on the ſaid 30th ' of May in the thirty firſt Year aforeſaid, with ' Force and Arms, at the Pariſh of Barwick aforeſaid, adviſedly, deviliſhly, maliciouſly and traiterouſly, did aſſemble, unite and gather themſelves together, and then did deviliſhly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, craftily and traiterouſly, conſult and agree, to bring our ſaid Lord the ' King to death and final deſtruction, and to depoſe and deprive him of his Crown and Government, and introduce and eſtabliſh the Religion of the Roman Church in this Realm; ' and the ſooner to fulfil and accompliſh the ſaid ' moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes, the ſaid Sir Miles Stapleton, ' and other unknown Traytors, then and there ' adviſedly, maliciouſly and traiterouſly, did further conſult and agree to contribute, pay and ' expend divers large ſums of mony, to divers of ' the King's Subjects, and other perſons unknown, to procure thoſe perſons traiterouſly ' to kill our ſaid Lord the King, and to introduce ' the Roman Religion into this Realm, againſt ' the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace ' of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and ' Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute ' in ſuch Caſe made and provided.

Clerk of Aſſize. Hold up thy hand Sir Miles, thou haſt heard the Treaſons and other miſdemeanors whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted; Art thou guilty thereof or not guilty?

Sir Miles. Not guilty.

Clerk of Aſſize. How wilt thou be tried?

Sir Miles. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Aſſize. Culprit, God ſend thee a good deliverance.

Clerk of Aſſize. Sir Miles, this underſtand you, that theſe Gentlemen that are now to be ſworn, are returned by the Sheriff of this County, to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you for your Life; therefore if you will challenge any of them, you are to challenge them as they come to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

The Jury being called, Mr. Juſtice Dolben took notice to Sir Miles that there were but few appeared, and therefore told him he would do well not to challenge too many of them. Sir Miles thereupon ſaid he ſhould not challenge many; and enquired whether thoſe that ſerved on the Lady Tempeſt's, Mr. Thwing's and Mr. Ingleby's Juries did now appear; and the Judge anſwered him, that if they did, care ſhould be taken that they ſhould not be ſworn.

Then the Jury being called to the Book, Sir Miles challenged theſe, viz.

Sir David Fowles, Bar.	Robert Bell, Gent.
John Eaſtoft, Eſq;	John Dixon, Gent.
William Bethel, Eſq;	Thomas Wood, Gent.
William Caley, Eſq;	Robert Turner, Gent.
Towers Driffeild, Eſq;	John Beckwith, Gent.
Marm. Trueman, Eſq;	Simon Warrener, Gent.
John Wright, Eſq;	Gervaiſe Hatfeild Gent.
John Green, Eſq;	John Coats, Gent.

And

And only two of the {Tho. Fletcher, Rob. Gudgeon,} were ſworn. Jury returned, viz.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Sir Miles, I ſee you muſt ſtay till the next Aſſizes, for you challenge ſo many, here will not be a Jury gotten.

Sir Miles. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I ſhall be content, and do deſire the Jury may be called that ſerved the firſt day; nay, all the three Juries if you pleaſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. That is, you would chuſe all of one way, and leave the others; where is the Indifferency of the Tryal then? but come call them, I cannot deny it.

The three Juries called, and five challenged, viz.

Tho. Worſley, Eſq; Samuel Tennant, Gent. Robert Buſhel, Gent. } { Roger Stretwel, Gent. Roger Lee, Eſq;

And theſe ſworn, viz.

Sir Tho. Pennyman, Bar. Thomas Rokely, Eſq; William Stone, Thomas Conyers, } { Chriſtopher Tankerd, Eſq; who was excepted againſt by Sir Thomas Stringer, as one that diſparaged the Evidence of the Plot, and called his Dogs by the names of Oats and Bedloe; which the Judge allowed to be a good Exception; but there being no witneſs in the Court to prove it, he was ſworn.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Sir Miles, you muſt ſtay till the next Aſſizes, we have not a full Jury.

Sir Miles. Here are Gentlemen in the Court, your Lordſhip may take whom you pleaſe.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. I cannot do it without the King's Council move for a Tales, which as this Caſe ſtands they will not do.

And ſo he was remanded to Priſon, and Remanet pro defectu Juratorum until the 18th day of July 1681.

And at the Aſſizes then holden for the County of York before Mr. Juſtice Dolben and Mr. Baron Gregory, was proceeded againſt as followeth.

Clerk of Aſſize. Sir Miles Stapleton hold up thy hand, thou ſtandeſt indicted by the name of Miles Stapleton late of Carleton in the County of York, Bar. &c. prout in the Indictment.

After not Guilty pleaded to the Indictment and other Formalities of Court, as before, theſe Gentlemen following were called.

Sir Thomas Maliverer, Kt. Challenged by the King's Council.

Sir Roger Beckwith, Kt. Challenged by the King's Council.

Sir Miles. Are any Challenged?

Mr. J. Dolb. Yes, there are two Challeng'd for the King.

Sir Miles. I hope they muſt ſhew cauſe why they Challenge them.

Mr. J. Dolb. Yes, they ſhall, but they are not bound to ſhew cauſe before the Pannel be gone through, and then, if you deſire it they will ſhew cauſe: but I ſuppoſe Sir Thomas Maliverer married a Kinſwoman of yours, and if ſo 'tis a good Exception.

Sir Miles. I deſire it may be proved.

Richard Audbrough, Eſq; Challenged by the King.

John Dodſworth, Eſq; Challenged by the King.

Iſaac Fairfax, Eſq; Chriſtopher Bradſhaw, Eſq; } Challenged by Sir Miles.

Theſe following were called and Sworn, viz.

Sir Barrington Boucher, Kt.
Sir John Jennings, Kt.
Richard Hutton, Eſq;
Wellbrough Norton, Eſq;
Tobias Hodſon, Eſq;
John Beverly, Eſq;
Anthony Frankland, Eſq;
John Addams, Eſq;
Francis Battery, Eſq:
Francis Fuldgam, Eſq;
Humphry Brook, Eſq;
Thomas Lee, Eſq;

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together and hear your Evidence.

Clerk of Aſſize. Sir Miles Stapleton, Hold up thy hand (which he did) Gentlemen, you of the Jury that are Sworn, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Charge; you ſhall underſtand that he ſtands Indicted by the Name of Sir Miles, &c. prout in the Indictment; upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereupon pleaded not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon his Country, which Country you are, &c.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence, and Sir Thomas Stringer, one of the King's Council aggravated the Indictment as followeth.

Sir Miles Stapleton. I deſire my Lord the King's Evidence may be put apart, not to hear what each other Swears.

Mr. J. Dolb. No, no, Sir Miles, that muſt not be, would you have the ſame for your Witneſſes?

Sir Tho. Stringer. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; Sir Miles, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands here Indicted of the greateſt and blackeſt Treaſons that can be invented by the worſt of Men; He ſtands here Indicted for endeavouring to depoſe the King from his Crown and Dignity; and imagining and compaſſing the Death of the King, to alter the Eſtabliſhed Government, and rout out the true Proteſtant Religion, and to Eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion among us. Gentlemen, to compaſs theſe wicked Deſigns we ſhall prove there hath been ſeveral Conſults where the Priſoner at the Bar hath been, and where he hath contributed Money to carry on theſe wicked Deſigns: And Gentlemen I muſt acquaint you there hath been a horrid Plot againſt the King and Government, and I need not do it, for it hath been made notoriouſly known; not only Parliaments have declar'd it ſo, but there have been Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Prieſts, nay, ſome Men have been found guilty for carrying on the horrid Deſign, and have receiv'd their Deſerts. This Plot, Gentlemen, is no new Plot, not a Plot of a Day, nor of an Age; But a Plot that hath been carry'd on for a hundred Years. My Lord, ſince we were deliver'd by God's Mercy from the Popiſh Religion by the Reformation; ever ſince that time, the Pope, the Jeſuits, the Prieſts and thoſe of the Popiſh Perſuaſion, have, my Lord, been from time to time, and ever ſince, endeavouring to carry on this wicked Deſign, and had deſtroyed us long ſince, if we had not been by God Almighty from time to time deliver'd from their Power. And you Gentlemen of the Jury, I muſt tell you, this Plot was carry'd on in Queen Elizabeths time; And as they did in this Plot carry on their Deſigns, with the the King of Spain, at Validolid in Spain. The King of Spain, he join'd with the Popiſh Party here; but it pleaſed the Lord to take the Queen to his Mercy, before that Plot was effected. And I muſt tell you, the ſame Men of the ſame Quality that carry'd it on then, have now endeavoured to carry it on in theſe Days. My Lords, the King of Spain, tho' he was a Papiſt, yet it was ſo horrid a thing that he left them to carry on their wicked Deſign, and God Almighty did preſerve the Queen. My Lords, they reſted not here, but in King James his time they deſign'd to have deſtroy'd both King and Parliament at one blow, and thereby the whole Nation in its Repreſentatives, and this they manag'd by Guy Vaux and others. And all King Charles his time the ſame Plot was on foot, and pray how far did they bring it? they brought it to the Death of that Gracious King, and the ſad effects of a Civil War; and they have brought it in theſe Days, to raiſe Officers, Generals, Major Generals, and other Officers, and proceeded ſo far that actual Commiſſion was deliver'd for deſtroying our King, and if this had not been by God's Mercy prevented, what would have been the evil effects thereof, e're this Day? And Gentlemen, I muſt tell you that which is now before you is the greateſt, and moſt wicked Deſign that ever was before Men; and tho' you be of the Relations and Kindred, yet I know if you have but Conſcience and Right in you, you will give a Verdict according to the juſtneſs of the thing and the Evidence you ſhall have.

Sir John Ottwith. We call Mr. Smith firſt who will give you an Account of the Plot in general.

Mr. John Smith call'd, and Sworn.

Mr. J. Dolb. Mr Smith pray tell the Court what you know of the Plot.

Mr. Smith. I muſt ſpeak of it then what I have done beyond-Sea my Lord.

My Lords, I remember when I had been firſt beyond-Sea, I became acquainted with one Abbot Montague and Mr. Tho. Car, at Paris, and they told me then, if I came to the Romiſh Religion what Preferment I ſhould have here in England; they told me what Friends they made in England, they nam'd ſeveral Perſons about the Court, and ſeveral Gentry in England which I did not then know to be Papiſts. I ſtay'd ſome time among them in Paris, and all this while I did not pervert to the Romiſh Religion; tho' they told me how many Jeſuits they had ſent over into England. After I left France, I was for going for Rome, where I met with Father Anderton Rector of the Engliſh College, and Father Southwel and Father Campion, who introduc'd me into the acquaintance of Cardinal Grimaldi, which is an Italian Name, but he is Arch-biſhop of that place, I happening there, they carried me to ſpeak to the Cardinal, and he told me what likelihood there was for introducing the Romiſh Religion into England, and he told me he would prefer me very well there, if I would turn to their Religion; and gave me Letters to ſeveral Friends in Italy: At laſt I was perverted to the Romiſh Religion by vertue of this Cardinal, and this Gentleman at laſt ask'd me if I had a mind to ſtudy, I told him yes, ſo I came into an Italian College, and became acquainted with all the Secular Prieſts, both Engliſh, Scotch, and French; who told me what intereſt they had made in England during the coming in of Cardinal Norfolk, and ſaid there was but one Man in the way, meaning the King, and ſaid they ſhould ſoon remove him.

Mr. J. Dolb. Did they mean the King?

Mr. Smith. Yes my Lord, they ſaid there was but one Man in the way, and that they would ſoon make an end of him, and that they had Men ready in England for it. After this, my Lord, I left this Italian College, and came to the Engliſh College (for I had a Mind to come there) and I made Friends with the Jeſuits: After I came to the Engliſh College, my Lord, I was inform'd of one Father Anderton Rector of that College, and Father Mondford, who told me that by means of this Cardinal Norfolk they did not doubt but to take the King out of the way; and that they would give me all Privileges that could be for a young Man in that time. When I was coming away, my Lord, from Rome, and had my Letters Emiſſaries, by Cardinal Perorin (He ſent for me when I was coming away, and as is uſually done to all Scholars, and they kiſs the Pope's Toe, and he gives them his Bleſſing and particular Indulgence; which I had when I came into England) ſaid he to me there is one Man in the way who hath made us fair Promiſes but will perform nothing, therefore we muſt take him out of the way, and that I might be inſtrumental in the Deſign; with this, my Lord, I took leave of the College, and we came five into England as Prieſts, and I made my Application to the Arch-Prieſt which was in London, one Purrat, and I was employ'd a long time by him in England; but Proclamations coming forth for the apprehending Popiſh Prieſts, I was conſtantly after at the Portugal Embaſſador's Chappel, where this Purrat had a Chamber, wherein I diſcours'd with ſeveral of the Clergy in England, who ſaid they doubted not but Popery would ſoon be ſettled in England. I came after that to live at one Mr. Jenniſon's Houſe, where the Clergy had ſeveral Meetings, and we were all of Opinion that courſe would be taken with the King unleſs he brought in Popery. And this my Lords is all I can ſay in general.

Mr. J. Dolb. Do you know of any Conſpiracy in Yorkſhire?

Mr. Smith. My Lord I am coming to that. When I came to Mr. Jenniſon's Houſe, there was one Mr. Thwing a Prieſt, who has ſuffer'd as a Conſpirator, he was well acquainted in the Houſe before I came there, and did very much to perſwade me that I would intreat Mr. Jenniſon to ſend his Daughters to a place called Dolbank, where a Nunnery was to be erected, and I knew ſeveral that were there. This Mr. Thwing came to me oftentimes, and ſeveral Prieſts in this City, and they all preſs'd me to it, but I was againſt it, knowing what their deſign was.

Mr. J. Dolb. But do you know any thing againſt the Priſoner?

Mr. Smith. All that I can ſay to the Gentleman at the Bar is this. I never ſaw him before to my knowledge; but Mr. Thwing when we were at Mr. Jenniſon's and diſcourſing of the Plot, ask'd me how they gave Money in Biſhoprick, I told him ſome gave more, ſome leſs.

Mr. J. Dolb. What were thoſe Collections for?

Mr.

Mr. Smith. My Lord it went among our ſelves under the notion of killing the King, and rooting out the Proteſtant Religion; but we gave it out that it was repairing a College at Doway, which if granted, had been penal by Law. Then I ask'd him how doth the Collections go among you in Yorkſhire. Some, ſaith he, give freely, but ſaith he, my Uncle and his Friends are engaged another way; for ſaith he, they are going to make a Founder for Dolbank; ſeveral Perſons he named, among which he nam'd this Gentleman.

Mr. J. Dolb. What ſaid he of Sir Miles?

Mr. Smith. He ſaid Sir Miles was very zealous for promoting the Roman Catholick Religion, and had contributed largely for the introducing of it into England.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. You ſay that amongſt your ſelves you gave it out that the Money that was rais'd was for the killing of the King, and rooting out the Proteſtant Religion; pray by what way and means was it to be done, was that ever diſcours'd among any of you, was it for raiſing of an Army, or what was it for?

Mr. Smith. Where ever I was my Lord, it was reſolv'd that that was the moſt effectual means for the introducing of Popery.

Mr. Robert Bolron call'd, and Sworn.

Sir Tho Stringer. Mr. Bolron, acquaint my Lords and the Jury, what you know of Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Bolron. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I came to live with Sir Thomas Gaſcoine in 1674. as Steward of his Cole works; and was then a Proteſtant, but was perſwaded by Mr. Ruſhton, Sir Thomas and others to turn Roman Catholick; when I had turn'd Roman Catholick, about 1676. they came and ask'd me what I would do for the Romiſh Religion, if it ſhould come to it; I told them I would venture my Life in that Cauſe, and then I went to Barmbow Hall, where I took the Oath of Secrecy, after that I went to Barmbow Hall, where Sir Miles Stapleton was at a Conſult in 1677.

Mr. J. Dolb. At what time in 77?

Mr. Bolron. It was about Whitſontide, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolb. That was the Whitſontide after you had taken the Oath of Secrecy?

Mr. Bolr. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolb. Who was there?

Mr. Bolr. Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, Mr. Gaſcoyn his Son, my Lady Tempeſt, Lawyer Ingoldby, Mr. Thwing, Father Ruſhton and ſeveral others.

Mr. Baron Gregory. What was there done at that Conſult?

Mr. Bolr. My Lord, the Conſult was about killing the King, and eſtabliſhing a Nunnery at Dolbank near Ripley; Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn gave 90 l. per Annum, and 300 l. for killing the King; and I remember very well Pickering was mention'd about killing the King; and they ask'd Sir Miles Stapleton what he would give? and he ſaid 200 l. for killing the King.

Mr. J. Dolb. Are you ſure that in the preſence of Sir Miles Stapleton it was reſolved the King ſhould be killed?

Mr. Bolr. Yes, my Lord, it was reſolved both by him and all others that the King ſhould be killed; and my Lord I heard them further ſay, if the Duke of York did not pleaſe that they would ſerve him, as they would ſerve his Brother.

Mr. Baron Greg. Who ſaid theſe latter Words?

Mr. Bolr. Sherby of Stone-houſe ſaid theſe latter Words, and Mr. Shereburn ſaid ——

Mr. J. Dolb. No matter what Mr. Shereburn ſaid. What ſaid Sir Miles?

Mr. Bolr. The Gentlemen ſaid that Sir Miles ſhould be a Privy Counſellor, and that they would procure the Duke's conſent to it.

Mr. J. Dolb. Is that all?

Mr. Bolr. My Lord, I was further at a Conſult in Seventy-eight, about the thirteenth or fourteenth of June.

Mr. Baron Greg. What time was that?

Mr. Bolr. The thirteenth Day of June 78. and there it was agreed upon the taking of Hull, the letting in of the French there, as the fitteſt place for the French to land at.

Mr. J. Dolb. Where was this?

Mr. Bolr. At Barmbow and likewiſe they did diſcourſe, that my Lord Bellaſis had cauſed the Block-houſes to be almoſt ruined, that the French might more eaſily come in; and we had all Pardons for our Sins.

Mr. Lawrence Mowbray called, and ſworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Mr. Mowbray, tell my Lords and the Jury what you know againſt Sir Miles Stapleton the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lords, you have heard what Mr. Smith, and Mr. Bolron ſay to the Plot in general, what I ſay ſhall be very brief in relation to Sir Miles Stapleton and no further. Sir Miles Stapleton being preſent with Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, my Lady Tempeſt, Eſquire Gaſcoyn and ſeveral others, they held ſeveral Diſcourſes concerning a Deſign of killing the King, ſubverting the Government, and bringing in Popery, and accordingly they would fire London.

Mr. Bar. Greg. When was this?

Mr. Mowbray. This was in 76. where Father Ruſhton gave him an Oath of Secrecy, and he promiſed to be true to the Deſign, and would venture his Life and Eſtate for the promoting ſo good a Cauſe.

Mr. J. Dolb. Did you hear Sir Miles Stapleton ſay he would adventure his Life and Eſtate for killing of the King?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolb. And was it reſolved at that Conſult?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolb. And he conſented to it?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, and took the Oath of Secrecy from Father Ruſhton.

Mr. J. Dolb. This is not the time that Mr. Bolron ſpeaks of.

Mr. Mowbray. No my Lord he ſpeaks of 76. and 78. this was in 78.

Mr. Bolr. I have in 75. a colluſive Conveyance of Sir Miles Stapleton's Eſtate to Sir John Daney.

Mr. J. Dolb. Where did you ſee it?

Mr. Bolr. I did ſee it at Sir Thomas Yarbroughs, and he asking me when Sir Miles Stapleton was at Sir Tho. Gaſcoyns; may it pleaſe you, ſaid I, I can tell you ſomething where you are concerned with Sir Miles Stapleton; as ſoon as he heard that he bluſh'd, and away he went and would hear no further.

Sir Tho. Stringer. What ſay you Mr. Mowbray, of an Indulgence you had?

Mr. Mowb. Yes my Lord I had an Indulgence.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Was it for the time to come, or the time paſt?

Mr.

Mr. Mowb. It was for the time paſt; for I was to enter into the Roſary.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Did you ever attend Ruſhton at the Altar?

Mr. Mowb. Yes I did.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Mr. Bolron you ſay you ſaw a colluſive Conveyance made by Sir Miles Stapleton to Sir John Daney; pray what was the forfeiture of it?

Mr. Bol. It was —

Mr Juſt. Dolb. Was it Sir Tho. Yarbrough, or Sir John Daney you told of it?

Mr. Bol I told it to Sir John Daney.

Mr. Mowb. I drew a Copy of that very Conveyance.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Truly my Lord we want Mrs Bolron, one of the moſt material Evidences againſt Sir Miles, being ſick at London.

Mr. Bayns called and ſworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Come Mr. Bayns declare to the Court what you know againſt Sir Miles.

Mr. Bayn. I know nothing againſt Sir Miles, only I have ſeen him at Barmbow-Hall in 77.

Sir Tho. String. Pray tell us this, whether you obſerved in the Year 76, Sir Miles Stapleton come to ſeveral meetings with Sir Tho. Gaſcoigne, and my Lady Tempeſt, and others?

Mr. Bayns. Yes my Lord I have.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. But do you know what diſcourſe they had?

Mr. Bayns. No my Lord, but I remember we were once diſcourſing about ſome Nuns beyond Sea, and they were called galloping Nuns.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. They were Gallopers indeed.

Mr. Juſt Dolb. Sir Miles, you have heard what hath been proved againſt you——

Sir Miles. My Lord there is nothing of truth in it at all; I hope to make it appear to your Lordſhip. I call God to witneſs I am as innocent of what they ſay, as any Child unborn.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. That is an eaſy thing to ſay.

Sir Miles. I hope to make it appear to your Lordſhip. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give me leave to ask the Witneſſes ſome Queſtions?

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. That you may have allowance in.

Sir Miles. Then I deſire to ask Bolron this Queſtion; Did you accuſe me in your Information to Juſtice Lowder?

Mr. Bol. No my Lord, I did not.

Sir Miles. Did I or any other deſire you to keep any ſecret for me?

Mr. Bol. Yes my Lord, I have been deſired.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. But did Sir Miles ever deſire you?

Mr. Bol. No my Lord he did not, but Ruſhton did, when I was introduced by the Prieſts to the Conſult.

Sir Miles. Did you and Mowbray know that each other was concern'd in the Plot?

Mr. Bol. Yes we did.

Sir Miles. Name the perſons that were private at the Conſult.

Mr. Bol. There was Sir Tho. Gaſcoign, my Lady Tempeſt, Eſquire Gaſcoign, Mr. Ingleby, Mr. Thwing, Mr. Ruſhton, Mr. Addiſon, Mr. Metcalf, and ſeveral others.

Sir Miles. How long did the Conſult laſt?

Mr. Bol. Some ſix or ſeven hours.

Sir Miles. What Servants were there?

Mr. Bol. I took no notice of the Servants.

Sir Miles. What Room was it in?

Mr. Bol. In the old Dining-Room.

Sir Miles. How long did it laſt?

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Six or ſeven hours he tells you.

Sir Miles. Was there any other at Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn's?

Mr. Bol. None elſe that I can remember.

Sir Miles. Upon what occaſion did he mention Mowbray in his Information to the Council?

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. There hath no Information to the Council been mention'd here.

Sir Miles. Pray what was the occaſion you were turn'd out of Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn's ſervice?

Mr. Bol. My Lord I know not; they ſay it was about a Trunk: Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne ſent him to York, and he was to come again. I know there was a deſign to take away Mowbray's Life, but I never told him ſo much; and my Lady accuſed him for a Ring; I never durſt tell him this, but this was the thing contriv'd againſt him to take away his Life; I can make it appear where he bought the Ring.

Mr Juſt. Dolb. What tell'ſt thou us of a Ring? can'ſt thou not as well tell us it was for that he left Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn's ſervice?

Sir Miles. When did you firſt become a Proteſtant?

Mr. Mowb. When I made my firſt Information.

Bar. Gregory. When was that?

Mr. Mowb. That was in 9, and a little before that I kept correſpondence with Father Addiſon.

Sir Miles. I deſire to know whether he ſaw a Liſt of Names?

Mr. Mowb. Yes I did.

Sir Miles. Whoſe Names were there?

Mr. Mowb. There was your Name for one, and Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn's.

Sir Miles. What was it for?

Mr. Mowb. It was a Liſt of thoſe that were Actors and Contributors for killing the King.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. You are ſure Sir Miles Stapleton's Name was in the Liſt?

Mr. Mowb. Yes my Lord, I am.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Was it Parchment or Paper?

Mr. Mowb No my Lord, it was Paper.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Were you to aſſiſt in killing the King?

Mr. Mowb. My Lord, I was to be an Actor in killing the King.

Sir Miles. Whether did I, or any other deſire you to keep any ſecret for me?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, Father Ruſhton did.

Sir Miles. Did I ever do it?

Mr. Mowb. No Sir Miles, you never did.

Sir Miles. Did any body elſe deſire you?

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Father Ruſhton he tells you did.

Sir Miles. Was the diſcourſe ſo loud that Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne could hear it?

Mr. Mowb. Sir Thomas could hear well enough when he would.

Sir Miles. Was it in 79 that you diſcover'd the Plot?

Mr. Bol. Yes I went to London, and there diſcover'd the Plot in——79 I think it was.

Sir Miles. You ſaid I was not concern'd, you only accus'd Sir Thomas Gaſcoyne and ſome others in your Information, but did not name me.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Did he ſo, you may prove that upon him.

Sir Miles. It was ſo in his Information, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolb. Well then let it be ſo, Call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Lowder call'd and examin'd.

Sir Miles. I desire Mr. Lowder to acquaint your Lordships and the Jury, what was in the Information Mr. Bolron gave in, whether he accus'd me or no.

Mr. Lowder. All I know of it is, that in January 79, on Sunday Evening, as I think, about the 24th day of the month, Robert Bolron came to me and told me he had something of Secrecy to impart to me, and I ask'd him if he would go into the House with me; he told me it was matter of High Treason; I ask'd who was concern'd, he answer'd, Sir Thomas Gascoyne and several others: Then I order'd my Clerk to bring a Bible and Pen and Ink to take his Information. I desired him to be very cautious, telling him that several Lives were at stake: At that he began to be fearful and chang'd Colour; I ask'd him for what cause that fear was; he said if that were upon my Conscience that was upon his, for concealing it so long, I should be as fearful as he. I bid him seriously consider what he had to say; he then said he had deliver'd his Information to Mr. Tindal. Well then, said I, why is it you come to me? said I, Mr. Tindal is to be at my House the 25th day, and I shall discourse it with him, and we shall take it together. Mr. Tindal did come, and Bolron came and deliver'd in his Information.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You did not give him his Oath at that time?

Mr. Lowder. No my Lord, for it seems he had not then deliver'd in his Information, but only a writing of his to Mr. Tindal.

Bar. Greg. You took no Examination then?

Mr. Lowder. No my Lord, not at that time, but afterwards he came and he gave in his Information to us, and I think we were about two hours about it; and then he did not charge any person but Rushton and Sir Thomas Gascoyn; but said he had more to recollect: Well, said I, if you recollect any more you may come again.

Bar. Gregory. Pray who did he name?

Mr. Lowder. He nam'd Father Rushton and Sir Thomas Gascoyn; he nam'd my Lady Tempest, but spoke that as from another. And when he came again he said he would trouble us with no more, but would go to the King and Council to deliver in the rest.

Mr. Just. Dolb. He said then he should recollect more?

Mr. Lowder. Yes my Lord he did, and when he came again, he said he would not trouble us with it, but would inform the Council of it: When we saw him so positive, he had a Letter of Recommendation from Mr. Tindal to the Council; and he lost that Letter at Ware, but he went on, and deliver'd his Information to the Council.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Do you know it?

Mr. Lowder. Yes my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You cannot know it, were you there then?

Mr. Lowder. No my Lord, but I do know it.

Mr. Just. Dolb. How do you know it?

Mr. Lowder: I have a Copy of the Order under several of the Council's hands.

Mr. Just. Dolb. That is not Evidence, you are not to speak what another man knows. But that is not the matter, it seems he went to give in his Information to the Council, for indeed he could not otherwise have been safe.

Mr. Lowder. After this, he goes up to London again, and comes down and brings me another Order of Council to examin Mr. Mowbray and one Hickeringil, and I ask'd him if he knew any thing about Sir Miles Stapleton's being concern'd in the Plot, and he said no, he believ'd he was very clear.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You say, that Bolron brought you another Order of Council to examin Mowbray.

Mr. Lowder. Yes my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Did Bolron bring you in writing what Mowbray could say?

Mr. Lowder. My Lord, I know not whether it was by writing or by word of mouth.

Mr. Just. Dolb. What was it he told you Mowbray could say?

Mr. Lowder. He told me he could say he saw Sir Miles Stapleton at Barmbow when the Consult was; but, said he, there will others come against Sir Miles.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Pray let us ask Bolron that: Did you say to Mr. Lowder you knew nothing against Sir Miles Stapleton, but there was others would do it?

Mr. Bol. No my Lord, not that I remember.

Mr. Lowder. Bolron himself had never said any thing against Sir Miles.

Bar. Greg. Did you ask Bolron if he knew whether Sir Miles was concern'd in the Plot or no?

Mr. Lowder. Yes my Lord I did, and he answer'd he knew nothing against him.

Mr. Just. Dolb. He was not then upon his Oath?

Mr. Lowder. No not then; but after this he delivered his Information, and did swear to the same effect that Mowbray did swear, that Sir Miles was at Barmbow, and that they all did conspire the killing of the King, and introducing the Romish Religion; and he said my Lady Tempest came to him, when he was in the passage, and said to him, Mr. Mowbray it is fitter for you to be treating of Sir Miles Stapleton's Servants in the Larder: And he ask'd me whether he had best go and apprehend Sir Miles or Mr. Ingleby first.

Mr. Just. Dolb. This was your discourse with Bolron.

Mr. Lowder. Yes my Lord.

Mr. Bol. May it please your Lordship, I did not know then that Mr. Mowbray was at all concerned in the Plot.

Mr. J. Dolb. He tells you, how you told him what Mowbray would say before he came to him, and what he would say against Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Bol. No my Lord, I never said any such thing.

Mr. J. Dolb. You say you did not know what Mowbray would say, Mr. Lowder saith otherwise.

Mr. Bol. My Lord, I did not know what it was before he brought it himself, and he brought it in writing.

Bar. Greg. Mr. Lowder, did he tell you the particulars, or he only said he was to depose things against Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Lowder. My Lord he told me he could swear Sir Miles was at the Consult at Barmbow, and did there conspire the death of the King, and introducing the Romish Religion.

Mr. J. Dolb. How long was this Mr. Lowder, you had that discourse with Bolron before Mowbray came to give in his Information?

Mr. Lowder. It was my Lord two or three days before, before, and I order'd him to come again, when Mr. Tindal was to be at my Houſe.

Mr. J. Dolb. Were you ever with Mr. Lowder, and knew when he and Mr. Tindal order'd him to come to him?

Mr. Bol. I went to Mr. Mowbray, and we came to Eſquire Lowder's, and there Mr. Tindal was; but I knew nothing of what he had to ſay; my Lord, Mr. Mowbray was there at that time he doth affirm.

Mr. J. Dolb. Mowbray, before you came to Mr. Lowder's had you acquainted Bolron with what you had to ſay?

Mr. Mowb. I might acquaint him I had ſomething to ſay, but did not tell him the particulars.

Mr. J. Dolb. Did you tell him you had any thing againſt Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Mowb. 'Tis poſſible my Lord I might, but I am not poſitive in that.

Bar. Greg. Did he tell you Mr. Lowder, what Mr. Mowbray could ſwear againſt Sir Miles, and was it not the day which he tells here of?

Mr. Lowder. No my Lord, it was not.

Bar. Greg. It was not the ſame day?

Mr. Lowder. No my Lord, I ſhall be poſitive in it, if I be brought to my Oath.

Mr. J. Dolb. Come another Witneſs, Sir Miles.

Sir Thomas Yarbrough call'd and examin'd.

Sir Miles. I deſire Sir Thomas to ſpeak what he heard Bolron declare what he knew of the Plot after Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn was taken.

Sir Tho. Yarbrough. The 10th of Auguſt 79, Mr. Bolron came to my Houſe about 10 or 11 a Clock at night, and knock'd at my Door; I thought him very unſeaſonable; but my Servants looking out at the Window, ask'd who was there; he ſaid a Friend that would ſpeak with Sir Thomas: my Servant came and told me, and I order'd my Servant to go down and bring him into my Chamber; in the interim I put on a Morning-Gown: As ſoon as he came in he told me he had an Order of Council to ſearch all ſuſpicious places for Popiſh Prieſts, and I have great cauſe to believe that there is one Ruſhton a Prieſt now at Sir Miles Stapleton's. What would you have me to do, ſaid I, would you have me go with you myſelf? He ſaid no, but a Servant. Said I, Mr. Bolron will you ſhow me the Order; and finding his name in the Warrant, I ask'd him, Was that the Perſon that inform'd againſt Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn? His Anſwer was this, that if I pleas'd he would ſhew me the Article againſt Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn; when I obſerv'd the Article, I ask'd him if he knew any thing of Sir Miles Stapleton's being concern'd in the Plot: No I proteſt, ſaith he, I know nothing of Sir Miles Stapleton's being concern'd in it, for he is a very honeſt Gentleman; only this I muſt ſay, that I know he hath made a colluſive Conveyance of his Eſtate, and I believe moſt of the Roman Catholicks in England have done it for the ſecuring of their Eſtates.

Mr. J. Dolb. What do you ſay to this, Bolron?

Mr. Bol. My Lord when I deliver'd in my Information to the Council I did accuſe Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. J. Dolb. Did you ſay this to Sir Thomas?

Mr. Bol. No I did not, if it was not in the Information I gave to the Council, believe not one word that I have ſaid.

Mr. J. Dolb. Its poſſible it might be in the ſecond Information to the Council that you accuſed Sir Miles: Was Sir Miles Stapleton's name in the Paper you gave to him?

Mr. Bol. Yes my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolb. This was the 10th day of Auguſt 79. Had you then inform'd the Council of any thing before that time againſt Sir Miles Stapleton's being at Barmbow Hall at the Conſult?

Mr. Bol. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I was called out when I was before the King and Council, and there was ſomething I did not deliver in.

Mr. J. Dolb. Then you did not do it at that time?

Mr. Bol. No my Lord, I did not.

Mr. J. Dolb. I ask you again, before the 10th of Auguſt 79, had you inform'd the Council of any thing againſt Sir Miles?

Mr. Bol. No my Lord, I had not.

Mr. J. Dolb. Then it could not be in the Information that you ſhew'd him.

Mr. Bol. No my Lord, it was at the ſecond time.

Bar. Greg. Was it before you had this diſcourſe with Sir Thomas Yarbrough?

Mr. Bol. No my Lord, it was not before that: I ſhall not ſpeak one word of a Lie.

Sir Miles. Every word you ſpeak is a Lie.

Mr. Bol. It is no Lie, before this honorable Court.

Mr. J. Dolb. Were theſe Informations incloſed in the Letter from the Council?

Mr. Lowd. Yes my Lord, your Lordſhip may ſee the Letter mentions it, (holding the Letter forth in his hand with the Informations) which Mr. Juſtice Dolben took and ſilently read them over, after which he made his report thereof to the Court.

Mr. J. Dolb. Mr. Lowder, I have read all theſe things over, and there is nothing of any Conſult in them: How ſhould then the Accuſation of Sir Miles be mentioned in them?

Bar. Greg. I do believe Sir Thomas you miſtake times.

Sir Tho. Yarb. No my Lord, I do not.

Mr. J. Dolb. In the bringing of this Order of Council to you, did you ask Mr. Bolron if he knew any thing againſt Sir Miles Stapleton?

Sir Tho. Yarb. Yes my Lord I did, and he ſaid he believed he was innocent.

Sir Tho. String. Pray Sir Thomas why did you ask him that about Sir Miles?

Sir Tho. Yarb. Becauſe I knew Sir Miles was related to Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn, and was often there.

Sir Tho. String. It ſeemed Sir Thomas you fear'd it.

The Lady Yarbrough call'd and examin'd.

Sir Miles. Madam pray acquaint the Court what you heard Bolron ſay when he diſcourſed your Husband.

Lady Yarb. All I can ſay is, that I was in bed then, and heard him ſay all theſe things, and I heard the Order read, and there was mention of ſeveral at the Conſult, among whom there was no mention of Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. J. Dolb. Does your Ladyſhip very well remember that Sir Thomas Yarbrough ask'd him if Sir Miles was concern'd, and he ſaid not that he knew of?

Lady Yarb. Yes my Lord, and he ſaid more than that, for when he returned from taking Prieſts in the Afternoon, there was a great deal of Company in the Houſe, and when he came he brought one of the Sons along with him, and they came into the Hall, there Mr. Bolron was with them, and among the reſt there was one Mr. Anby, who being a little merry, he takes him by the Arm, and comes and brings him to us as we were ſitting in the Porch, and ſaid, Heark you Mr. Bolron, I hear you are a Diſcoverer of the Plot? Yes I am, ſaid he: Then I pray you, who are they that are concerned? But he would not tell him. So ſaid he, is Sir Miles Stapleton in it? He anſwer'd he had nothing to ſay againſt Sir Miles, but he was an honeſt Gentleman for ought he knew, excepting that he had made a colluſive Conveyance of his Eſtate.

Mr. Normanton call'd and examin'd.

Mr. Norm. In June 79, came Rob. Bolron to me, and ſaid, that Sir Tho. Gaſcoyne would give 1000 l. for killing the King, and Lady Tempeſt would have hang'd him for breaking a Trunk, but now he would be even with her; and that Sir Miles Stapleton kept Prieſts in his Houſe, but he would apprehend them preſently, for he might have twenty pound a piece for taking of them.

Bar. Greg. You ſay Bolron told you this?

Mr. Norm. Yes my Lord, he told me this in my own Houſe, and I told him he might go to Eſquire Tindal, and I lent him eighteen pence, and borrowed him a Horſe in the Town.

Richard Pears, Sir Miles's man, call'd and examin'd.

Richard Pears. My Lord Bolron came to Carleton.

Mr. J. Dolb. Carleton, what is that?

Rich. Pears. To my maſter's houſe.

Mr. J. Dolb. Who is thy maſter?

Pears. Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. J. Dolb. What then?

Pears. I going to an Ale-houſe where Bolron was, he ask'd me how I did, I thank'd him.

Mr. J. Dolb. Did you know him then?

Pears. Yes my Lord, and he called for a Pot of Ale, and wiſhed me to drink with him, and he ask'd me if they did not blame him for accuſing my maſter Sir Miles? and I ſaid I did not hear him named; he ſaid it was not him, but he might not tell who it was.

Mr. J. Dolb. When was this?

Pears. Three or four days after my maſter was taken into Cuſtody; and he ſaid he would have gone to have ſeen Sir Miles; but I think, (ſays he) he does not know me: and he ask'd me if Mr. Legget would be at our Houſe and he deſired me to give him a Letter; and I ſaid I ſhould not ſee him; then he ſaid I might burn it, and I did burn it my Lord.

Sir Tho. String. How came you acquainted with Bolron?

Pears. At the Cole-pits, my Lord.

Sir Tho. String. Did you never ſee him at Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn's?

Pears. No my Lord.

Stephen Thompſon called and examined.

Mr J. Dolb. Have a care you ſpeak nothing but truth, tho' you are not ſworn, yet we can puniſh you, and God Almighty will puniſh you if you ſpeak falſe.

Steph. Thompſon. An't like your Honor, Robert Bolron was ſervant to Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, as ſteward of his Cole-pits; Sir Thomas put him out of his Cole-pits, and there was a great deal of mony due, and he knew not how to get it, and therefore he would take threeſcore Pounds for it, becauſe he knew not how to get it, and he would take thirty two Pounds at one time, and twenty eight at another, and he came to me to be bound with him, which I was unwilling to; ſaith he, here is thirty eight Pounds good Debt, and I ſhall take care to get the other, and if Sir Thomas be not kind, I ſhall do him an ill turn.

Mr. J. Dolb. What is this to Sir Miles Stapleton?

Thomp. He did ſwear, this Plot being diſcovered, they thought he knew ſomething of Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, and he ſaid before the Plot broke out, there was never a Catholick in Yorkſhire was concerned in it, if there were any it was above.

Bar. Greg. This was before his Information, I'll lay a Wager.

Mr. J. Dolb. How could he do him an ill turn?

Thomp. My Lord this is the ill turn, Mr. Legget ſaid he did it not for need: O Rob. Bolron ſaid I, do you thus requite Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn's kindneſſes?

Bar. Greg. Did he ſpeak any thing to you concerning Sir Miles?

Sir Miles. I conceive when they reflect upon Sir Thomas, they reflect upon me.

Mr. J. Dolb. No, not ſo, you might be guilty, and Sir Thomas innocent, or you might be innocent and Sir Thomas guilty.

Sir Miles. My Lord I think that as there was a Conſult at Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn's, certainly if any one was guilty, we were all guilty.

Bar. Greg. There are ſome that conceive, and I think not without grounds, that there are no conſiderable Catholicks in England, but they are concerned in the Plot.

Mr. J. Dolb. There was one Dixon came at Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn's Tryal, and ſaid he heard Bolron and Mowbray down a pair of ſtairs, ſpeaking of Revenge againſt Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn and my Lady Tempeſt, and thinking theſe Witneſſes might now be produced, we called at Leeds to view the ſtairs, and I am ſure neither my Brother nor I could ſee any probability in it.

Bar. Greg. For ſatisfaction we made two go up into the Chamber and ſtand where the Witneſſes were, and they ſpoke as loud as People do uſually when they diſcourſe, and I am ſure I could neither perceive what they ſaid, nor ſee them, unleſs I went three or four ſteps up.

Mr. J. Dolb. This is but occaſioned by your jeſting upon the matter.

Nathaniel Wilſon call'd.

Mr. J. Dolb. Sir Miles I would put you in mind of one thing; produce thoſe two Witneſſes that were produced at Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn's Tryal.

Sir Miles. I have none of theſe Witneſſes.

Mr. J. Dolb. Certainly theſe Witneſſes would be as material as any you can have to do it.

Sir Miles. I have them not here my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolb. Nay, that is becauſe you dare not; the King's Council will prove that what they ſpoke they were hired to, and had mony from Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, which they confeſs'd.

Sir Miles. My Lord they made Affidavit of it.

Mr. J. Dolb. Tho' they did, yet they confeſs'd they were hired to it.

The

The Lady Vavaſour called and examined.

Sir Miles. My Lord, I call my Lady Vavaſour to tell whether Sir Walter was there at the Conſult they tell us of at Barnbow.

Mr. J. Dolb. That will be hard for her to do, but call her then. Who was called: But ſpeaking ſo low ſhe could not be heard by the Court, and ſtanding beſides Mr. Juſtice Dolben, he repeated her words to the Court. My Lady ſaith this, Gentlemen, ſhe believes her Husband was not there in any part of the Year, becauſe he was infirm at York. Now Gentlemen, I would only know whether that be concluſive Evidence when it is only poſſible.

Mr. Legget called and examined.

Sir Miles. Mr. Legget, pray what mony would Mr. Bolron have given you when I was taken?

Legget. Mr. Bolron deſired me to lend his Wife ſome mony to go to market with, and I did: The ſame day between Tadcaſter and York, Mr. Bolron ask'd me what Allowance Dr. Oats had, I told him I heard he had five hundred Pounds a Year; and he anſwered I deſerve as much, for I have done as much good as he: As I was going for York, I met with Mr. Mowbray, and it raining I put in at Tadcaſter; when the Rain was over, we ſet forward for York; ſaid Mr. Mowbray, Mr. Bolron hath ſent for me; ſo I went to Mr. Bolron to the George, and he ſent for Mr. Mowbray, and he pulls out his Information, and after he had read it, he ask'd nim if he knew any thing of that, and he ſaid he did not know of it.

Mr. J. Dolb. Well, what is this to the purpoſe; Did you hear him ſay any thing againſt Sir Miles?

Legget. I have heard Mr. Bolron ſay that he had nothing to ſay againſt Sir Miles Stapleton, but only he had made over his Eſtate to Sir John Daney.

Mr. J. Dolb. How came he to name Sir Miles to you?

Mr. Leg. He voluntarily told me of it, when we went to Allerton to apprehend ſome Prieſts, and when I returned, I told him I took but one of theſe Perſons, old Mr. Metcalf, and he ſaid he cared not if I had but taken one Addy.

Mr. J. Dolb. You muſt not talk of this faſhion.

Sir Miles. It ſhews but what a kind of a man he is.

Mr. J. Dolb. So may we examine to the end of the Chapter. Do you ſay Bolron read over his Information to Mowbray, and he ſaid he knew nothing of it as to Sir Miles Stapleton?

Leg. No my Lord, but of Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn; he ask'd him nothing my Lord but againſt Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn; after they went out and had been together, Mr. Bolron told me Sir Miles Stapleton was to be taken into Cuſtody, and he ſaid you may as well have it as another, but I'll go half Snips with you: At laſt he told me if I have an hundred Pounds of Sir Miles, you ſhall have Twenty of it.

Mr. J. Dolb. Had you any Warrant at that time to take Sir Miles?

Leg. No my Lord.

Bol. I know nothing of any ſuch thing.

Mrs. Eliz. Holmes Called and Examined.

Mrs. Holmes. An't pleaſe you my Lord, at Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn's Tryal, Mr. Bolr. and his Wife they were at our Houſe at Dinner, after Dinner they askt me if I would go to Sir Thomas's Tryal, I anſwer'd yes, ſo Mrs. Mowbray came and called her Husband out of door, and I askt her about Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, and ſhe ſaid———

Mr. J. Dolb. Tell us what ſhe ſaid.

Holmes. She ſaid they were hard People, but ſhe thought they were innocent to the Plot, and ſhe had nothing to ſay againſt them, as God ſhall judge her Soul. Then another time, my Lord, after Bolron came from York, he met me, How now Siſter, I underſtand you are to be a Witneſs againſt me at York, but if you'll be kind to me I'll be kind to you, and ſpeak as favourably as I can; and he ſaid if he had known he ſhould have been no better rewarded, he would never have been a Witneſs; the Devil ſhould have been a Witneſs as ſoon as he.

Mr. J. Dolb Againſt whom?

Holmes. Againſt Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn and Sir Miles my Lord, and he bid me be careful what I ſwore; for if we did ſwear falſe he would have us at the Pillory, and unleſs I would unſay what I had ſaid in my Ladies Tryal, he would puniſh me ſufficiently.

Mr. J. Dolb. Who ſaid this, know you?

Holmes. Mr. Bolron, my Lord.

Bar. Greg. Where do you live?

Holmes. I live, my Lord, in Baldwin's Garden.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Did you ever tell any that if they would come and ſwear againſt the Evidence againſt Sir Miles Stapleton, they ſhould be ſufficiently rewarded.

Holms. No, never in my Life.

Sir Miles. When did you ſee me laſt, Bolron?

Bolr. I have ſeen you in 78. ſeveral times.

Mr. J. Dolb. He hath ſeen you in Priſon.

Bolr. My Lord, I have ſeen him at Barnbow Hall in 78.

Sir Tho. Stringer. You know Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Bolr. Yes, very well; and I have ſeveral times talked with him.

Sir Miles. I deſire to know whether he hath ſeen Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn and me diſcourſe about any thing?

Mr. Bolr. No not ſince the Plot broke out.

Sir Miles. He ſwore in Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn's Tryal he heard me and Sir Thomas diſcourſe about Oats and Bedloe.

Mr. J. Dolb. Well, how material will that be?

Sir Miles. I ſhall prove that he ſwore falſe, for Sir Thomas and I was never together ſince the Plot broke forth.

Mr. J. Dolb. That is hard to do.

Mr. Baron Greg. You have an excellent Witneſs that can ſwear that.

Sir Miles. In all probability I can do it.

Mr. J. Dolb. But that muſt not go before a poſitive. Well, have you done?

Sir Miles. There is another Witneſs or two if it be not too tedious.

Mr. J. Dolb. No, we will ſtay here all day if you pleaſe.

Edward Cooper called and examined.

Cooper. My Lord, all that I can ſay is, we having been at Autherton Fair, we met with Mr. Mowbray, knowing him and being acquainted with him, pray, ſaid I, whether there is any thing of a truth in this that Bolron ſwears againſt

Sir

Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn, or no? No ſaith he, he might as well have ſworn it againſt you or another Perſon; for I have been in the houſe as he, and I never knew any ſuch thing.

Mr. J. Dolb. This was before Mowbray had diſcover'd any thing, for Mowbray was then a Papiſt, and had taken the Oath of Secrecy; beſides 'tis not much what Mowbray ſaid he was going on a high-way: If it had been before a Juſtice of Peace, or if he had been upon his Oath, then it had been more material.

Madam Shereburn called and examined.

Sir Miles. Madam Shereburn, pray declare what Bolron ſaid at your houſe.

Madam Shereburn. Mr. Bolron and Mowbray came to our houſe under the pretence of ſearching for Prieſts, and Bolron took ſeveral Parcels of Silver away with him.

Judge Dolb. Away, away, if you have any thing againſt him on the behalf of this Gentleman, Madam, ſpeak it; but you would prove him a Thief, and ſay he went to ſeek for Prieſts, and he ſtole money from them.

Mowbray. We went to ſeek for Prieſts, and we took ſome Chalices and other Popiſh Trinkets away.

Mr. J. Dolb. Do not ſpend your and our time in ſaying that Bolron and Mowbray were knaviſh Boys; we it may be are guilty of Extravagances in that particular.

Mr. Bar. Greg. They themſelves confeſs they have been very bad; They took the Oath of ſecrecy, and it is as ill as ever was ſpoke or writ in ſo few words.

Mr. J. Dolb. I know they have been very bad Men. Well, have you any more Witneſſes?

Sir Miles. I can produce my Neighbours and thoſe of the Church of England, that can ſay no otherwiſe than that I have been of good behaviour.

Sir. Tho. Stringer. It is generally concluded by all that Sir Miles hath been a very good man until he fell into this great Action.

Mr. J. Dolb. Brother, have you any thing more to ſay? if not I'll proceed.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Only I deſire that Dixon and Wilſon may be called in to ſwear that they were hired at Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn's Tryal.

Mr. J. Dolb. Call them then.

Dixon call'd and ſworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury what Witneſſes were hir'd, and whether you were hired to teſtifie for Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, or no?

Dixon. My Lord in November 79. John Bayly ſent John Wilkinſon for me, and when I came there, Batley was there; and they deſir'd me to go and there call'd me into the Garden, and ask'd me if I would be a Witneſs for Sir Thomas Gaſcoyn, and would give me forty Shillings.

Wilſon call'd and ſworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Were you offer'd any thing by Mr. Babbington to be a Witneſs for Sir Miles?

Wilſon. I was, my Lord.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray, tell my Lord what you were offer'd, and what he would have you to ſay?

Dixon. Batley would have him to be a Witneſs.

Mr. J. Dolb. Well, but what was he to ſay?

Dixon. He was to ſay he never ſee Bolron nor Mowbray at his houſe. Saith Batley, I ſaw them at the door. Thou never didſt ſee them in my houſe. Yes, ſaith he, I ſee them once, and my Lord, the third time before they departed he might ſay that in 79. he came in and found them there. This he preſt on me, telling me it was but telling a Lye, for no Oath was required in this caſe.

Mr. Bar. Greg. Did Mr. Babbington offer you money, what would he have you to teſtifie for it?

Mr. J. Dolb. What money would he have given you?

Wilſon. He would have given me 10 l. and Hickeringill proffer'd me 10 l.

Mr. J. Dolb. Is Babbington a Solicitor for Sir Miles?

Bolr. Yes, my Lord, here he is.

Dixon. Batley did preſs me to ſay again, that he never did ſee Mr. Bolron and Mowbray in his houſe, and he made a Contrivance of that.

Chriſtopher Langley and Richard Cocker called and ſworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray tell my Lords and the Jury what you have been proffer'd, and by whom to give Evidence for Sir Miles.

Chr. Langley. My Lord an't pleaſe you, I kept a publick houſe, ſo William Batley and John Roſs came and called for a quart of Ale, and this Richard Cocker was with us, and he ſaid if you'll go and be a Witneſs for Sir Miles in thoſe things we ſhall direct you, you ſhall have a couple of Oxen and half a ſcore of Sheep.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Who profer'd you this?

Langley. Will. Batley and John Groſs.

Cocker. Well, it is the ſame my Lord. I went with him into his houſe, and he proffer'd him a couple of Oxen, and half a ſcore of Sheep, if he would be a Witneſs for Sir Miles.

Mr. Bayns called and ſworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Speak whether Mrs. Holmes would have had you to have recanted any thing againſt Sir Miles.

Mr. Bayns. She proffer'd me ſince I came into the Kingdom of England threeſcore Pound a year to have holden my Tongue, if I had any thing to ſay againſt Sir Miles: I told her not whether I had any thing or no, and ſhe profer'd me 60 l. per Annum. Mrs. Hewit ſaid ſhe would give me more if I would ſay nothing againſt Sir Miles.

Mr. J. Dolb. Did they make an aſſurance?

Bayns. I askt them, do you know another Gentleman's Purſe? they ſaid they knew it very well that he would give it.

Mr. Miles. Pray let Mrs. Holmes be call'd again.

Mr. J. Dolb. Well, ſhe denies it. What is that Hewit?

Bayns. He married another of my Daughters, my Lord.

Mr.

Mr. J. Dolb. She only appear'd zealous for Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn, and ſhe would be the ſame for Sir Miles Stapleton. Have you any thing more Sir Miles?

Sir Miles. No, my Lord; only Mrs. Holmes denies it.

Mr. J. Dolb. She does ſo.

Sir Miles. I heve not ſo much to ſay againſt Mr. Bayns.

Mr. J. Dolb. I do not hear he ſaith much againſt you.

Mr. Bar. Greg. He had got his Money pretty eaſily if he ſaid nothing more againſt you; he had ſcarce earn'd his Money.

Sir Miles. I deſire the Jury may conſider what Credit was given to their Evidence formerly in the former Tryals; for I ſpeak ſeriouſly, I never ſpoke any ſuch thing, nor was ever at any Conſult about any ſuch thing; I believe there is none that knows me will believe it.

Mr. J. Dolb. Is that all?

Sir Miles. The Evidence is very improper; I never thought ill againſt the King in my life; what reaſon was there for it?

Mr. J. Dolb. No reaſon at all that either you or any Papiſt ſhould do it, but only through the mad fiery Zeal of the Jeſuits; for ever ſince the Reformation you have enjoy'd your Eſtates and Religion without any moleſtation, but you could not endure we ſhould quietly enjoy ours. But if you have any matter on Record againſt them we will hear it; It may be you will ſay he is an idle fellow and the like; there will be no end of ſuch reflections.

Mr. Baron Greg. You ſee what is produc'd on your behalf, Sir Miles, though not by your Direction, yet on your behalf, and they ſaid it was but telling a lie.

Sir Miles. No, my Lord, not I; I never gave any ſuch Directions.

Mr. J. Dolb. Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir Miles Stapleton ſtands indicted for a very foul Treaſon, for endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, change the Religion, and to bring in Superſtition and Idolatry; which he could never do, without compaſſing the Death of the King, he being the only obſtacle in the way. This is his Charge. The Proof of this depends upon Bolron and Mowbray; Mr. Smith, the firſt Witneſs, he only relates he hath been in Rome and France, and among all the Prieſts he convers'd with there was ſuch a Deſign on Foot; But againſt Sir Miles he knows nothing, but things told him by Mr. Thwing, which I muſt tell you is no Evidence againſt Sir Miles Stapleton. Bolron and Mowbray, do poſitively ſwear the thing as plain as any thing can be; they both ſwear they were preſent at ſeveral Conſults, where it was reſolv'd the King ſhould be kill'd, and that Sir Miles did agree to it, and did agree to contribute 200 l. to carry on this Deſign. Captain Bayns, being Examined, he ſaith he did really ſee Sir Miles at Barmbow-Hall at that time, but he doth not know whether it was about that or no.

Againſt this, Sir Miles ſaith it cannot be, but this is an Invention of Bolron and Mowbray, and to prove this, he produceth ſeveral Witneſſes, that Bolron ſhould deny, and that he ſhould ſometimes ſay that Sir Tho. Gaſcoyn knew nothing of it; ſometimes that Sir Miles knew nothing of it: I muſt tell you at this time, that they were then diſcours'd withal, they at that time were Papiſts themſelves, and lay under the Oath of ſecrecy. But now here are three Witneſſes, Sir Tho. Yarbrough, my Lady Yarbrough, and Mr. Lowder; and they do ſpeak as much as any of the other doth concerning Bolron and Mowbray, and they ſpeak it when it was a time pertinent; for what they ſpoke to a Juſtice of Peace at that time ſeems ſomewhat probable: You heard what Mr. Lowder ſaith, they came to him to accuſe them the 25th. day of January 79, and he put them off for that time, and he gives you Reaſons why he did it; and then he brings an Order of Council to examine Mowbray, and he tells him what Mowbray would ſwear, and he tells him he would ſwear againſt Sir Miles Stapleton, that he was at the Conſult at Barmbow-Hall; you have heard him often deliver this, and becauſe it was ſomewhat material, we deſir'd him to ſpeak it again and again: Bolron denies it, he never told what Mowbray could ſwear; ſo that depends upon the Credit of the Witneſſes.

Sir Thomas Yarbrough tells us that Bolron came to him, and knocked him up out of Bed, for his Warrant to ſearch for Ruſhton a Prieſt, who he ſaid was at Sir Miles's, and thereupon he asked him if he could tell any thing of Sir Miles Stapleton, and he ſaid no, with many Aſſeverations; now if that Information were the ſame that was ſent to Mr. Lowder, then 'tis of no ſuch weight, and it hath been preſuppos'd by the King's Council, that Sir Thomas might forget himſelf, neither was there any thing in theſe Papers relating to Sir Miles.

And my Lady Yarbrough being in Bed in the ſame Chamber, ſhe ſaith ſhe heard the Papers read, and her Husband ask'd him of Sir Miles Stapleton, but he deny'd that he was concern'd in the Plot: And ſhe ſaith further, in the Afternoon, a Gentleman brought him into the Porch where they were ſitting, and the Gentleman ask'd him who was Plotters, but he would not tell him; then he ask'd him if Sir Miles Stapleton was concern'd, and he poſitively deny'd it. Theſe things hang not well together, I know not how to make any Obſervations upon it; he denies that he ſaid ſo, they ſay he did. The reſt of the Witneſſes are not very much material, only as I told you before, what Talk they would have talked before they changed their Religion: There is nothing proved againſt them, but they are good Witneſſes in the Law; there is no Records, nor Perjuries, nor any thing elſe that takes off their Evidence, they have ſworn it ſeveral times, and ſtand to it. Now you have heard and taken notice what Objections have been made againſt it.

Mr. Bar. Greg. My Brother has open'd it ſo fully, I ſhall trouble you with very little, only to let you ſee that my Obſervations were the ſame, and that I concur in the Evidence with my Brother; for there is full Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar. The matter they ſwear is Treaſon of the higheſt Nature imaginable: There are but two that ſwear poſitively, but they ſwear of ſeveral Conſults, and of the particulars that were agreed on by Sir Miles Stapleton for the carrying it on; and there is no material Witneſſes againſt them. For the latter Witneſſes of their denying it, it muſt be before they were of the Proteſtant Religion; when they were concern'd as much to conceal it, as any Perſons that were guilty of it: Beſides in a Diſcourſe a Man is not bound to tell a Neighbour all things that he doth know, he cannot be ſafe to tell it to a private Perſon at that time. It is very true, as my Brother hath told you, they were reſolved when they diſcover'd it they would have ſecurity for themſelves: I ſuppoſe they needed not have fear'd Sir Miles flying from being apprehended, but if Sir Miles was at large they might have fear'd it. But when they came to be examin'd upon their Oaths before Mr. Lowder and Mr. Tindale, there could not be any thing to excuſe them; It is true, to my apprehenſion, there was no probable Reaſons why theſe two Gentlemen ſhould ask them if Sir Miles were concern'd in the Plot; for in the Information they ſaw his Name was not mention'd; thus they were as much afraid as Sir Miles was, it may be, it was their care of him knowing what Religion he was of, and knowing him to be related to Sir T. Gaſc. Now, it doth depend upon the Credit of what they have ſworn, they deny what is charged upon them by theſe Gentlemen; by Sir Thomas Tarbrough and by my Lady; and 'tis true, Mr. Lowder was as a Magiſtrate too, and Sir Thomas was as a Magiſtrate too; it is true, he was not upon the Examination of them upon Oath at that time, therefore that was not as before a Magiſtrate; but Mr. Lowder they came to him as a Magiſtrate; therefore it muſt be for you to conſider whether or no there might be a forgetfulneſs of them in their ſpeaking, or a miſunderſtanding of them; there is nothing elſe that I know can tend to the reconciling of it: For if there were a miſtake by the one, or a forgetfulneſs in the other, then it might alter the underſtanding; but if they heard well and remembr'd true, then it will be, as I have ſaid before, more difficult to be reconciled. But Gentlemen, upon the whole matter, it will depend upon the Conſtruction and Reputation of what they ſwear, and theſe Gentlemen ſpeak, which you are to conſider.

Having Sworn a Bailiff, the Jury withdrew for about half an hours Conſultation together, and then return'd into Court, and gave in their Verdict NOT GUILTY.

The TRYAL of George Busby, July 25.

33 Car. 2. 1681.

THE Court being ſate, and the uſual Formalities preceding Buſineſs over, the Pannel of the Grand Jury was called over, and nineteen of them ſworn. The Names of which Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, which found the Bill of Indictment, &c. againſt George Busby, were as follows.

1. Sir Henry Every of Eggington, Baronet.
2. Sir Robert Coke of Langford, Baronet.
3. Sir William Boothby of Aſhborn, Kt. and Bar.
4. Sir Robert Clark of Chilcote, Knight.
5. William Fitz Herbert of Tiſſington, Eſq;
6. Henry Cavendiſh of Douebridg, Eſq;
7. William Mundy of Darley, Eſq;
8. John Lowe of Denby, Eſq;
9. William Berriſford of Bently, Eſq;
10. John Allen of Greſely, Eſq;
11. William Hopkinſon of Bonſall, Eſq;
12. William Lees, Gent.
13. Lionel Parſhaw of Dionfield, Gent.
14. Joſeph Harpur of Yeavely, Gent.
15. John Stuffin of Hopton, Gent.
16. Matthew Smith of Denby, Gent.
17. John Whigly of Cromford, Gent.
18. Paul Jenkinſon, Gent.
19. George Birds of Stanton, Gent.

The Indictment being brought into Court, Billa vera.

Clerk of the Aſſizes. Goaler, ſet George Busby to the Bar. (Which was done.)

Clerk of the Arraignments. George Busby, hold up thy hand. (Which he delayed to do.)

Clerk again. George Busby, hold up thy hand.

Which he did not do, but inſtead thereof, preſented a Petition to the Court to this effect; That he was committed to the Goal in March laſt, for being a Popiſh Prieſt, and that great Induſtry has been uſed to procure Witneſſes to ſwear againſt him, and that having obtained his Habeas Corpus to be removed to London, the Under-ſheriff falling ſick, and being ſince dead, the Habeas Corpus was not executed; he prays he may be removed to the King's Bench, that he may have time to make his defence, he depending upon his Habeas Corpus, his moſt material Evidence to clear him, and to prove his being an Alien, being then in London, &c.

Baron Street. Mr. Busby, notwithſtanding I muſt proceed to try you, the Grand Jury having found the Bill Billa vera; you ſay you are an Alien; if that be ſo, then you are without this Law of the 27th of Eliz.

Busby. I had not my Habeas Corpus, and ſo am deprived of my Witneſſes to prove that I am an Alien born.

Baron Street. If they prove you not a Native, then the Indictment falls.

Then the Clerk of Arraignments proceeded to arraign the Priſoner.

Clerk. George Busby, hold up thy hand, (which he did.) 'Thou ſtandeſt indicted by the Name 'of George Busby, late of Weſt Hallam in the Coun-'ty of Derby, Clerk, for that thou being a Sub-'ject of our Soveraign Lord the King that now 'is, and being likewiſe born within this King-'dom of England, was made and ordained a Prieſt 'by the Authority derived and pretended from 'the See of Rome, after the Feaſt of the Nativity 'of St. John Baptiſt, in the firſt Year of the Reign

'of

' of our Lady Elizabeth late Queen of England, &c.
' and before the 16th day of March, in the 33d
' Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord
' Charles the ſecond, of England, Scotland, France
' and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c.
' the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom of Eng-
' land little weighing, nor the Puniſhments in the ' ſame contained not at all regarding; with
' Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of Weſt-
' Hallam aforeſaid, in the County of Derby afore-
' ſaid, being within this Kingdom of England,
' voluntarily, freely and treaſonably, the 16th
' day of March, in the 33d Year of the Reign
' aforeſaid, hath been and remained, contrary to
' the form of the Statute in that Caſe made and ' provided; and againſt the Peace of our Sove-
' reign Lord the King, his Crown and Digni' ty, &c.

Baron Street. How ſayeſt thou George Busby, art thou Guilty of this Felony and Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Busby. This Indictment, my Lord, is not full; it recites not the particular Caſe in the Statute of Queen Elizabeth, viz. that I took Orders beyond Sea; and another point, that I am a Native of the King's Dominions.

Baron Street. You may be made a Prieſt in England by the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, as well as at Rome.

Busby. How can I be made a Prieſt in England by the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, where there is no ſuch Authority?

Baron Street. You muſt plead to your Indictment as it ſtands.

Busby. Then my Lord, I humbly beg I may be allowed Council.

Baron Street. If any point in Law ariſe you ſhall be allowed Council.

Busby. The time and place is not ſpecified in the Indictment.

Baron Street. If that be ſo, 'tis material. But upon View of the Indictment, 'twas found right.

Clerk of Arraignments. George Busby hold up thy hand; Art thou Guilty of this Indictment, or not Guilty?

Busby (then holding up his hand) ſaid, Not Guilty.

Clerk of Arraign. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Busby. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Baron Street. Now we will ſee if your Objections be of any weight; you hear the Indictment read, which was ut ante, being a Subject of the King's, born within this Realm; you may be made a Prieſt by the Authority of Rome, in England, Ireland, or Germany, or any where elſe, and that will make you a Prieſt within this Law.

Busby. I am no Native, I was born beyond the Sea.

Baron Street. Your being a Native, is matter of Fact, and muſt be proved.

Busby. My Lord, I move I may have right of challenging the Jury.

Baron Street. Sure we muſt have the Jury before us firſt, before you can challenge any of them.

So the Jury being called, Busby challenged peremptorily near the number allowed by the Law, viz.

John Burrows, Gent.
Henry Goodyer Gent.
John Hawkſworth Gent.
Thomas Cockayn Gent.
Cornelius Dale Gent.
Thomas Wetton Gent.
Thomas Wingfield Gent.
William Kirkland Gent.
John Agan Gent.
Henry Wild Gent.
Thomas Coxon
James Dawſon.
John Roſe.
William Salt.
John Hurd.
John Stone.
Robert Rowland.
Robert Cooper.
Edward Ridge.
William Alſop.
James Cooper.
John Wallat.
Gregory Seele.

The King's Council did except againſt two perſons only, viz. Robert Doxey, Chriſtopher Holmes.

Baron Street. Have a care, Mr. Busby, at your Peril, if you challenge peremptorily above the number of 35.

The Names of the Petty-Jury ſworn.

1. Samuel Ward Gent.
2. Tho. Wilſon Gent.
3. John Steer.
4. John Ratcliff.
5. Ed. Wolmeſly Gent.
6. William Horn Gent.
7. George Tricket Gent.
8. Jeremiah Ward.
9. John Roper.
10. John Creſwel Gent.
11. Edmund Woodhead.
12. Anthony Bowne.

Then Mr. Bridges, Council for the King, opened the Indictment.

Mr. Bridges. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar George Busby, ſtands indicted for High Treaſon, as it is alledged in the Indictment, that he being born within the King's Dominions and made a Prieſt, and having received Orders by pretended Authority from the See of Rome, did the 16th day of March laſt come into the Realm of England, as 'tis laid in the Indictment, to Weſt-Hallam in the County of Derby, and there he did abide, contrary to the Form of the Statute; and this is laid to be traiterouſly done. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; and we are to prove it upon him, by the King's Evidence, whom we are now to call.

Mr. Coombes. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment read and opened, you will preſently have it fully proved, and highly aggravated by our Evidence; for, Gentlemen, we ſhall prove that the Priſoner at the Bar is not only a Popiſh Prieſt, but a Jeſuit, and this by his own Confeſſion; and that his Name was inſerted in Sir William Waller's Warrant, when he came down into this Country to ſearch for Jeſuits: That he has held a ſecret and dangerous Correſpondence with Harcourt, Ireland, and other Popiſh Traytors: That he has been their Procurator, and disburs'd and received great ſums of mony for them.

Gentlemen, the Priſoner hath been a perſon highly ſuſpected, as well as dangerous to the Government for ſome Years; for treaſonable matters of another nature than he ſtands indicted of, have been depoſed againſt him upon Oath at the Council Board, and thereupon a ſtrict Warrant to apprehend him was directed to Mr. Gilbert, (a worthy Gentleman and Juſtice of Peace of this County) Mr. Gilbert, Gentlemen, will preſently tell you the manner of his taking him in an obſcure place in the Roof of one Mr. Powtrel's Houſe at Weſt Hallam in this County. But here I muſt beg leave to digreſs, for I cannot but take notice of the malicious Temper and baſe Practices of this ſort of Men; for tho' Mr. Gilbert acted by vertue of a Warrant from the Lords of the Council, and has ſince received an approbation from his Majeſty of what he did, under the hand of a Secretary of State, yet could not thoſe people forbear to raiſe falſe and ſcandalous Reports of, and make falſe Accuſations againſt him, upon this very account; but what is it they will not do to diſcourage Proteſtant Magiſtrates from doing their Duty againſt them? I confeſs nothing is to be wonder'd at, ſince the barbarous Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. But to proceed, Gentlemen, we ſhall alſo prove to you that the Priſoner is ſo little a friend even to the Civil Government of this Nation, that he would not ſuffer his Nephew Mr. Powtrel to take ſo much as the Oath of Allegiance, which is ſcrupled only by the Jeſuits, for I think their ſecular Prieſts will generally take it. Gentlemen, the things I have already opened, are matters of high Aggravation, and come in by way of Indictment. But that which in this caſe we rely upon is this, that the Priſoner has baptized, married, confeſs'd and abſolved in the Popiſh way, that he has given the Sacrament, and ſaid Maſs very frequently in his Popiſh Veſtments; and for proof of this we have a Cloud of Witneſſes.

Gentlemen, you hear the Priſoner is indicted upon a Statute made in the 27th Eliz. which makes it Treaſon for any Subject born to take Orders from the See of Rome, and afterwards to remain in England; which Law I conceive was not only made for the ſecurity of the Government, but alſo in favour of the Lay Papiſts themſelves; for tho' ſeveral Statutes were made to keep them within the bounds of their Allegiance, and to ſecure the Government from their villainous Deſigns; yet it was experimentally found true, that no Dangers or Penalties whatſoever, could deter or hinder them from plotting againſt the State, in order to bring us back again to the ſlavery of Rome; whilſt thoſe juggling managers of their conſciences were ſuffer'd to come amongſt us: and therefore I may well call this Statute, upon which the Priſoner ſtands indicted, an Act of Charity to the common Papiſts; for it was made to prevent the dangers they would otherwiſe run themſelves into, as well as the Nation. 'Tis true indeed, Gentlemen, that the lively execution of this Law has (by the Clemency of our Princes, and good nature of the Government) been many times ſuſpended, and might yet have continued in the ſhade, had not the Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits rouſed up this ſleeping Lyon againſt themſelves by a damnable and helliſh Plot againſt his Majeſty's Life, the true Religion and well eſtabliſh'd Government of this Nation; the reality of which has been confirmed to us, not only by the unanſwerable evidence of Coleman's Papers, and other loyal Proofs, but alſo by frequent Proclamations, and the uniform Votes and Reſolutions of ſeveral Parliaments. I may therefore very well borrow the words of a great man upon the like occaſion, and ſay, That at this time of the Day its much better to be rid of one Prieſt than many Felons: And therefore Gentlemen, if our Evidence ſhall make good the Indictment, I hope you will do your King, your Country, and yourſelves the right to find the Priſoner guilty.

Mr. Coombes. We ſhall call our Evidence.

Call Mr. Gilbert, (who was ſworn.)

Pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you can ſay concerning the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, I dwell within two miles of Mr. Powtrel's Houſe at Weſt Hallam, the place where the Priſoner was taken, and have heard that he hath been a Prieſt in that Family ſix or ſeven Years, tho' I did never know him perſonally, nor to the beſt of my knowledge, ever ſaw him till I apprehended him, which was the ſixteenth of March laſt, the very day on which the Judges went out of Derby the laſt Lent Aſſizes; the firſt enquiry I made after him was occaſioned by a Letter and a Meſſenger from Sir Simon Degg about November 1678, at which time I ſent a Warrant to the Conſtable of Weſt Hallam to ſearch for the ſaid George Busby, but he could not then be found; at that time it was reported that he was a Jeſuit, and concerned in the Plot, which I had reaſon to believe, becauſe when Mr. Gray came to ſearch Mr. Powtrell's houſe for ſome Jeſuits the January following, by Order from the Lords of the Council, (in which ſervice he commanded me to attend him) we perceived Mrs. Powtrel (who is Busby's Niece) to be much troubled, and in a great paſſion, the cauſe whereof Mr. Powtrel declared to be for fear the ſaid ſearch was made for her Uncle Busby, who, as I heard afterwards, was then in the houſe, tho' at that time he was reported to be fled.

However the Government had a jealous eye on this Busby above two Years ago, as may appear by a Warrant from the Lords of the Council, which Warrant I have ready, and humbly pray your Lordſhip it may be read openly in Court.

Baron Street. Let it be read.

Clerk. 'Whereas Information hath been given 'to his Majeſty in Council upon Oath, that 'George Busby late of Weſt Hallam in the County 'of Derby, is a reputed Prieſt and Jeſuit, and has 'had a conſiderable part in the late Conſpiracy 'againſt the Life of his ſacred Majeſty, and the 'peace of the Government; theſe are therefore 'to will and require you to repair to the place 'aforeſaid, or where-ever elſe the ſaid George 'Busby ſhall be found, and him to ſeize and ap'prehend, and convey to the next County Gaol, 'there to remain in cloſe Cuſtody, until he ſhall 'be delivered by due courſe of Law. And all 'Mayors, Sheriffs, Juſtices of the Peace, Con'ſtables, and other his Majeſty's Officers and 'loving Subjects are to be aſſiſting unto you in 'the Execution hereof, as they will anſwer the 'contrary; for which this ſhall be your Warrant. 'Dated at the Council-Chamber in White-Hall, 'the 19th day of March, 1678.

Indorſed to Henry Gilbert Eſq; at Lockco in the County of Derby.

Worceſter, Clarendon, Ailsbury, H. London, Sunderland, Eſſex, Folconbridge.

John Nicolas.

(Then Mr. Gilbert proceeded.)

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, I received this Order on Saturday the 22d day of March, 1678. And on Sunday Afternoon I ſent to Mr. John Bagnall of Derby, who was then Under-ſheriff, requiring him to meet me early on Monday the 24th, at Mr. Powtrell's houſe at Weſt Hallam, about ſome earneſt buſineſs lately ſent down from the Lords of of the Council, wherewith I would acquaint him at our meeting: As ſoon as he came I ſhewed him the Warrant, after which we ſearched very diligently in every place we could ſee, but could not find him; tho' afterwards I was informed he was in the Houſe at that time alſo.

About Auguſt 1679. Mr. Powtrel obtained a Licenſe from his Majeſty to travel beyond Sea, and it was confidently reported by the Papiſts, that this Mr. Busby was gone over too, inſomuch that when Sir William Waller came into theſe parts in January 1679. with Warrants to ſearch for Jeſuits, (in one whereof I ſaw Busby's name) and would have ſearched at Hallam, I diſſwaded him, and did aſſure him I believed he was gone beyond Sea, and told him how often I had ſearched for him in vain; whereupon Sir William Waller diverted to another place, tho' I have been informed ſince, that Busby was never out of England, ſince the diſcovery of the Plot.

But about Chriſtmaſs laſt, and ſince, I having had notice that Busby was in England, and particularly at Weſt Hallam, and had been ſeen laſt Corn-Harveſt to walk in Mr. Powtrel's Garden with one Ann Smally a Widow. I thought it my Duty to make ſome further enquiry after him, which I did on the firſt day of March laſt, and came to the Houſe to buy ſome Wood for my Cole-pits, and then brought five or ſix perſons with me, and ſent for the Conſtable to help me to ſearch for him, which we did moſt part of the Afternoon, but could not find him, tho' he was ſeen to be walking in the Garden with the ſaid Ann Smally when I came firſt into the Houſe, as I was afterwards informed; but when I ask'd the ſaid Ann Smally for him, ſhe affirmed with many Proteſtations, that he was in Flanders, and not in England, and that if I had any buſineſs with him, I muſt go beyond Sea to him, for ſhe had not ſeen him for above two Years; tho' ſhe had helped to convey him out of the Garden into his hiding-hole, but a few minutes before: However, I proceeded in my ſearch, and found in the Chamber where Busby lodged, a Crimſon-Damask Veſtment, wherein was pack'd up a Stole and Maniple of the ſame, (as the Papiſts call them) an Altar, Stone, Surplice, and a Box of Wafers, Maſs-Books, and divers other Popiſh things: Then I told Mrs. Braylsford, (a Kinſwoman of Mr. Powtrel's) and the ſaid Ann Smally, thoſe things did ſignify that a Prieſt belonged to the Houſe, for the Book had lately been uſed, as was apparent by the String which was put betwixt two Leaves, whereof Feſta Februarij was on the one ſide, and Feſta Martij was on the other ſide; but they ſtiffly affirmed that no Prieſt had been there of above two Years before, and jeer'd me when I could not find him, and ſaid if there was a Prieſt in the Houſe, why did I not take him?

When I had done ſearching, and could not find him, I took away the Veſtment, and other things which I brought to the Aſſizes a Fortnight after, and did ask Mr. Juſtice Charlton (who came that Circuit) his Opinion what I ſhould do with them; he told me they muſt be burnt according to Law; I intreated his Favour, that I might ſend them again to the ſame place, for two or three days to make the Prieſt more confident, that I might better apprehend him; he told me he could give no ſuch permiſſion, but inſiſted, that they ought to be deſtroyed.

When all the buſineſs was done at the Aſſizes on the Crown ſide (where I was obliged to attend) on March the 15th day at night, I went to the Judge again, and craved his Lordſhips Pardon for preſuming to ſend back the Popiſh things contrary to his Opinion, but acquainted him that I intended to go after them to Weſt-Hallam that night, and if I could not catch the Prieſt, I reſolved to bring the ſame things again; and after I had asked his Lordſhip ſome Queſtions, and received his Directions, I came to my own houſe, and went about eleven of the Clock at night (with ſome Company to aſſiſt me) to Hallam, and ſet two Men to watch in the Garden, and one in the Church-yard (joyning to another ſide of the Houſe,) to ſee if they could ſpy any Light, or hear any Walking, in the Lofts or falſe Floors, when I made a noiſe on the other ſide of the Houſe. I ſent a Man before to call up the Conſtable, and when he and two or three more came, I knock'd at Mrs. Anne Smally's Window, about twelve of the Clock in the night, and ſaid aloud, Mrs. Smally, open the Doors, I am come to ſearch for a Popiſh Prieſt; ſhe ſtarted up, and ſaid Who was there? I told her, It was I, ſhe knew me well enough, I dwelt at Locko. Then I ſtaid a pretty ſpace of time, and called aloud to her again, and ſpoke the like Words, but by that time, I ſuppoſe ſhe and her Bedfellow Mrs. Braylsford, were gone to give the Prieſt Notice, and to help him to his hiding hole for no body anſwer'd me; then after a pretty ſpace, I called to her a third time, And required her in the King's Name to open the Doors, for I was come to ſearch for Busby the Jeſuite, who was a Traytor by Law, and if ſhe would not open the Doors, I would cauſe the Conſtable to force them open; and when I could have no Anſwer from her, I went to Joſeph Dudley's Chamber Window, and called there, charging him in the King's Name to open the Doors, but no Anſwer at all was returned; for he alſo was gone into the Prieſt's Chamber, and found Anne Smalley buſy in helping Busby to ſecure himſelf, as the ſaid Joſeph Dudley did afterwards inform me.

After I had ſtayed about a quarter of an hour, I commanded the Conſtable, in the King's Name, to break the Doors open, which was done; and when we came into the Prieſts Chamber, I found the Fire had been lately extinguiſhed, the Counterpain and the Blankets laid in confuſed heaps on the Bed, and ſome part of them warm and ſome part cold; the upper part of the Feather-bed was cold, which I wondred at, then I put my hand underneath, and the Bed was warm; for they had turned it. I looked for the Pillow, Sheets, Cap, &c. but Anne Smally (as I was afterwards informed) had taken them into the Chamber where ſhe lay. I asked her divers Queſtions about the Perſon, that had lain in that Bed that night, and particularly, Whether or no it was not Busby? She told me, no body had lain in that Bed that night, I told her I was ſure ſome Perſon had lain there; for the Feather-Bed was warm on the under ſide: She took many Proteſtations, That no Body had lain there of divers Nights before: I replyed, if ſhe would diſcover the Perſon who had lain there, it would ſave her and me much trouble: But when all I could ſay would not prevail, I told her, I muſt ſearch, for I was confident, That Busby was in the Houſe, becauſe ſhe would not declare who it was that lay there.

I began to ſearch about one of the Clock, and continued till after ten next Morning before I could find him: And tho' the Watchers in the Garden told me, They heard his Paces and Steps very plainly amongst the Lofts and false Floors, and described on the out-side of the House the place where they last heard him, within the space of nine and ten Foot where he was hid; yet were we almost so many hours before we could find him.

At last when the Searchers were almost all tyred, Anne Smally, and others of the Family scoffed at us, and asked, What have you not found him yet, you said there was a Priest in the House, why do you not find him then? Why do you not take him? I said, All in good time; I was resolved to find him, or starve him out: Nay, the Foot-boy of the House, seeing my Servant look within the Kitchin-Chimney, where there hung a Port-Mantua, said, jeering to my Man, Look if he be not in the Port-Mantua.

After those Persons had pleased themselves a good while with mocking us for our disappointment, I perswaded two or three of the Searchers once again to climb upon the Lofts (which I could not do my self, by reason of a Lameness in my Shoulder,) and look well near the place where Busby's last steps were heard. Which when they had done some while, and found nothing, I took my Sword and Scabbard, (being in the Room underneath) and knocked on the Plaister-floors over my head, and caused them to answer me with the like knocking as near the same Place as they could, and when we had examined the Floors in this manner, I knocked near unto a stack of three Chimneys, but they could not answer within a Yard; I knock'd again in two or three places near the Chimneys, yet still they could not answer near those places, but told me there was nothing but Tiles and Roofing, I bid them break open those Tiles, which they did, and espied under them a wooden Door, and a little Iron Hinge, I bad them break the Door, then one of the Searchers put in his hand into a little hole that was broken in the Door, and felt a Hat, then he told me some body was in that place, for a Man had thrown his hand off the Hat, then I caused them to break open the entrance, which when they had done, Busby spoke to them, and desired them to be civil; when they told me what he said to them, I charged them to be civil to him, and bring him to me, which they did. Then I arrested him in his Majesty's Name, for High-Treason, and after he had refreshed himself a little, I told him he must get on his Boots, and prepare himself to go to Derby.

Soon after his Apprehension, (I perceiving him to be a little dismay'd) I encouraged him, and said, he should have all the Favour a Person in his Circumstances could expect, for I told him I understood he was a Gentleman of a good Family in Buckinghamshire or Oxfordshire, and that his Brother lived at Coddington in Oxfordshire, which he acknowledged, and thanked me for my Civility.

I was so well satisfied that we had apprehended him, after much tedious watching and searching, that I never thought of sending any Man to look what was in the hiding hole with him, but after an hours stay, or thereabouts, I took him away from Hallam between eleven and twelve a Clock on the 16th of March last, and brought him to Darby between one and two of the Clock where, after I had taken his Examination, I made a Mittimus and committed him to Derby-Goal.

On Saturday following, I writ a Letter to Oxford to the Right Honourable the Earl of Conway, one of his Majesties principal Secretaries of State, informing his Lordship of the Apprehending and Commitment of Busby, and inclosed a Copy of his Examination, to which his Lordship writ me a Letter in Answer, that he had acquainted his Majesty with my Proceedings, who did very well approve of what I had done.

Busby. My Lord, I am an Alien, born at Brussels.

Bar. Street. Was your Father of that place? It is a very good Family.

Busby. My Father lived at Coddington, my Mother was an Heiress, and here is an Affidavit ready to be produced of what Children my Father had before he went beyond-sea, born at Coddington, out of the Register of that place; I have had no time to bring a particular Certificate where I was born, and what other Children my Father had beyond sea; my Father went over about the beginning of the Troubles, and I am about forty years of Age.

After the Judge had told Busby of the Act for Naturalization.

Mr. Busby. I suppose (my Lord) that Act may stand good as to Priviledges of the Subject, but not as to Penalties.

Baron Street. Yes as to all Intents and Purposes.

Anno XXIX Caroli II. Regis.

An Act for the Naturalizing of Children of His Majesties English Subjects, born in Foreign Countries during the late Troubles.

'WHereas during the late unhappy Troubles in England, which began in the year of our Lord, One thousand six hundred forty one, and continued until the time of His Majesties most happy Restauration, divers of His Majesties English Subjects, as well of the Nobility as others, did either by reason of their Attendance upon His Majesty, or for fear of the then usurped Powers, reside in parts beyond the Seas out of His Majesties Dominions, and it may hereafter become difficult to make proof of the occasion of such their residence; Now for preventing of all Disputes and Questions that may arise, whether the Children of such His Majesties Subjects of this Realm are Natural born Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, and to express a due sense of the merit of all such Loyal Persons, as out of their Duty and Fidelity to His Majesty and his Father of blessed Memory, did forego, or were driven from their Native Country.

'Be it Declared and Enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and

'the

'the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſ-
'ſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame,
'That Charles Gerard, and Elizabeth Gerard Chil'dren of the Right Honourable Charles Lord
'Gerard of Brandon, Trever Wheler, and Dorothy
'Elizabeth Wheler Children of Sir Charles Wheler Ba-
'ronet, Anne Ravenſcroft the Wife of Edward
'Ravenſcroft of Bretton in the County of Flint
'Eſq; one of the Daughters of Sir Richard Lloyd
'Knight deceaſed, born at Calice in France, and 'all other Perſons who at any time between the 'Fourteenth day of June in the ſaid Year of 'our Lord One thouſand ſix hundred forty one,
'and the Four and twentieth day of March in
'the Year of our Lord One thouſand ſix hundred
'and ſixty, were born out of His Majeſties Do-
'minions, and whoſe Fathers or Mothers were 'Natural born Subjects of this Realm, are here-
'by declared and ſhall for ever be eſteemed and 'taken, to all intents and purpoſes, to be and 'to have been the Natural born Subjects of this
'Kingdom; and that the ſaid Children, and all o-
'ther Perſons born as aforeſaid, and every of them,
'are and ſhall be adjudged, reputed, and taken to
'be and to have been in every reſpect and degree,
'Natural born Subjects, and Free to all in'tents, purpoſes and conſtructions, as if they
'and every of them had been born in Eng-
'land.

'And be it further Enacted and Declared by
'the Authority aforeſaid, That the Children,
'and other perſons as aforeſaid, and every of
'them, ſhall be, and are hereby enabled and
'adjudged able, to all intents, conſtructions
'and purpoſes whatſoever, as well to demand,
'as to have and enjoy any Titles of Honour,
'Manors, Lands, Tenements and Hereditа-
'ments, and all other Privileges and Immuni-
'ties belonging to the Liege People and Natu'ral Subjects of this Kingdom, and to make his 'or their reſort or pedigree, as heir to his, their
'or any of their Anceſtors, Lineal or Collate-
'ral, by reaſon of any Deſcent, Remainder,
'Reverter, Right or other Title, Conveyance,
'Legacy or Bequeſt whatſoever, which hath,
'may or ſhall deſcend, remain, revert, accrue,
'come or grow unto the ſaid Children, or
'perſons born as aforeſaid, or any of them, as
'alſo to have and enjoy all Manors, Lands and
'Tenements, or other Hereditaments, by way
'of Purchaſe or Gift of any perſon or perſons
'whatſoever; as alſo to proſecute, purſue,
'maintain, avow and juſtifie all and all man-
'ner of Actions, Suits and Cauſes, and all other 'things to do as lawfully, liberally, freely and
'fully, as if the ſaid Children, and the perſons
'born as aforeſaid, and every of them, had been
'born of Engliſh Parents within this Kingdom,
'or as any other perſon or perſons born within
'this Kingdom may lawfully in any wiſe do;
'any Law, Act, Statute, Proviſion, Cuſtom,
'or other thing whatſoever, had, made, done,
'promulged, proclaimed, or provided, to the 'contrary thereof in any wiſe notwithſtanding;
'Provided always, That no perſon, other than
'the perſons expreſly named in this Act, ſhall
'have any benefit thereby, except ſuch perſon
'ſhall within ſeven Years next enſuing, receive
'the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and within
'one Month next after ſuch Receiving the Sa-
'crament, take the Oaths of Allegiance and Su-
'premacy in ſome of His Majeſties Courts at
'Weſtminſter, and deliver into the Court at the 'ſame time, a Certificate of ſuch his Receiving
'the ſaid Sacrament, and then make proof
'thereof by Witneſſes to be examined viva voce
'upon Oath.

'And be it further Enacted, That no perſon
'or perſons, other than the perſons expreſly
'named in this Act, ſhall have any benefit there-
'by, until he or they ſhall have received the 'Sacrament, and made proof thereof by Certi'ficate and Witneſſes, and taken the ſaid Oath
'in manner aforeſaid.

'And for the better manifeſtation and proof
'of ſuch qualifications as may entitle any per-
'ſon to the benefit of this Act, which in pro-
'ceſs of time may be very hard to be proved;
'Be it futher Enacted, That any perſon having 'received the Sacrament, and made proof
'thereof by Certificate and Witneſſes, and taken
'the ſaid Oaths within the time aforeſaid, in 'any of His Majeſties Courts, in manner afore-
'ſaid, ſhall and may be admitted to make proof
'of ſuch his qualification in the ſaid Court by
'Witneſſes viva voce to be examined upon Oath;
'and if he ſhall make proof thereof to the ſatis-
'faction of the ſaid Court, he ſhall thereupon
'have a Certificate thereof under the Seal of 'the ſaid Court, to be likewiſe Enrolled in the
'ſaid Court, and for ever after upon ſhewing
'ſuch Certificate or Enrollment thereof, every
'ſuch perſon ſhall have full benefit of this 'Law, as if he had been therein expreſly
'named.

Bar. Street. Then you are a Natural born Subject by the late Act of Parliament; whereby it appears that all Perſons born abroad in the late Troubles, who went out of this Kingdom by reaſon of their ſufferings for the King, are made Natural born Subjects, as if born here.

[Then Joſeph Dudley was called and Sworn.]

Bar. Street. Joſeph Dudley, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar? Look upon him.

Joſeph Dudley. I have known him theſe ſix years and more, to belong to Mr. Powtrells at Weſt-Hallam, to whom I was at that time a Servant, where he officiated as a Prieſt, and was kept to do that Office; where I have heard him ſay Maſs, Preach, Pray, and have ſeen Ten, Twenty, or Thirty, or more at a time before him in the Chappel there, when he hath officiated with his Prieſtly Robes upon him; and likewiſe ſeen Children brought to be chriſtened by him, others to be catechiſed, which he frequently did, as if he had been a Pariſh Prieſt, but with what Privacy he could: and I my ſelf have taken care of the doors at ſuch times, which care they left to me, tho' I was not of their Opinion; yet upon my promiſing to be ſo, they did repoſe that truſt and confidence in me.

Bar. Street. Tell us what you know concerning Mr. Busby's being an Alien, as he pretends, which I cannot believe.

Joſ. Dudley. He tells you that when the Civil Wars were here in England, his Father and Mother, with their Family, went beyond-ſea, where he was born; but my Lord, in diſcourſing with my Maſter and others of the late Wars, I have heard Mr. Busby relate what hapned to their Family in thoſe times, and that their houſe was often plundred, and his Father and Mother living at Coddington in Oxfordſhire (as he tells tells you) the first time the Soldiers came to plunder the house, he was about two years old or more, and being frighted at the Soldiers, he hid himself behind the Bed in the Curtains, so that while they were there, none of the house knew where to find him, which made them believe thatthe Soldiers had taken him,or made him away, but when the Soldiers were gone, his Mother and some of the Family lamenting for him in her Chamber, he hearing them, appear'd; so that with great Joy they receiv'd him. My Lord, I think the place was Coddington, where he tells you his Mother lived, and that it was hers, she being an Heiress. At least I am very certain I have heard him speak of the place where he was born, to be in or about Oxfordshire, I think it was Coddington; for it is the place where Mr. Charles Busby his eldest Brother now liveth, and he saith, that from thence his Father and Mother went beyond-sea.

Busby. When did you hear me discourse any such thing as you have related, and with whom; you speak this by hear-say, do you not?

Jos. Dudley. Several times with my Master and others, as I said before, when they have been talking how some Families have been ruined by the great Oppressions of those times, some being plundered, other sequestered, and forced to leave their Estates and Friends, which you have said was your Mothers case; for their great Sufferings forced them to go from their own house: And my Lord, when he was about five years old, he did also say that he could remember Soldiers coming again to plunder, and he being at that time in the Garden or Orchard, he did hide himself in the Hedge, where he did continue till they were gone, and then he came forth when it was late in the Evening, but his Mother nor any of the Family knowing where he was, did very much fear they had lost him; but when he came to them they were not a little joy'd: but after this they went immediately beyond-sea, and took him with them, where his Mother continued several years, and had several Children there, the which I have heard her say of her self, and of her being at Brussels.

Bar. Street. Mr. Busby, the Evidence says that you told a Story of your Mothers house being plundered, and how you hid your self in the Curtains, when you was two years old, and in the Garden-hedge, when five years old, for fear of the Souldiers, and that soon after your Mother went beyond-sea, where she had several Children, which your self told, from your own mouth, and he had it not from other people.

Bar. Street. But Mr. Dudley, What can you say as to his being a Priest or Jesuit?

Jos. Dudley. My Lord, my Master and his Family, and all Papists that were acquainted with him, ever owned him to be a Jesuit; and several of them have many times told me so: Besides he himself hath owned that he was of the Society of Jesus, particularly one time, when I should have been his Convert; telling me, While I was out of the True Faith, I could not be saved; and there was no way to be saved, but by believing the Catholick Church, which was the Roman Catholick, as Tradition makes appear; for God help me, I was a poor Heretick, and led by weak and blind Pastors; for they had their Religion only from Calvin and Luther, and every silly Fellow was made now a Preacher of the Gospel before he understood it: but that he and all Jesuits were Fifteen years labouring in their Studies and Degrees before they came to be Ordained.

Busby. I pray you where and when was it it I said all this to you?

Jos. Dudley. In the Gardens at West-Hallam, where my Master Mr. William Powtrell and Mrs. Anne Smalley, after great perswasions, sent me to you; and told me they had sent you before: and that I should find you there where I did. And your first Discourse was of the Gardens, withal giving me a Description of the Jesuits College in Liege, where you did (as I remember) own your receiving Orders. Besides I have heard my Master, Mrs. Smalley, Mrs. Winifred Attwood, and George Harrison (who lived in the Colleges beyond-sea) own it. And your self said. That Mr. Evers, my Lord Aston's Priest (who hath been with you at West-Hallam) was your Master and Tutor, when as I think you were a Scholar at St. Omers.

Busby. How long do you say you have lived at West-Hallam?

Jos. Dudley. Betwixt six and seven Years.

Busby. When was that I talked of the Gardens at the College of Liege? And whether I told you I was a Jesuit when I spoke of Liege Gardens? What time was it, what year?

Jos. Dudley. I cannot say the time, but twas since I lived at Hallam, and 'twas when you perswaded me to be a Catholick.

Busby. You take a compass of six years, this is a meer Story? pray what were my Arguments?

Bar. Street. You were about to convert him, and then you told him this; 'tis enough you have endeavoured to make him change his Religion, but it seems your Arguments were not of so much weight as to be remembred.

Busby. I pray you, was I ever with you alone to tell you I was a Jesuit? Let me know the year and time, and what induced me to say so?

Jos. Dudley. I cannot satisfy you when the Discourse was, but I have been alone with you in the Garden a hundred times and more; when you did satisfy me that you was a Jesuit, was the time when you did move me to be of your perswasion; the which I did so far condescend to, that ever since there was none of the Family more trusted than I; for, my Lord, I did give them all the Assurance that might be of being of their Religion, but the times being troublesome, and the fear of disobliging my Friends, particularly one or two, who had the care and management of a house of mine (which was then in trouble) then I durst not consent, yet my seeming Inclination did ever much please them, and they did so far credit me that my Master did intend (as he told me) to take me beyond Sea with him, nor did I know the contrary, till I was upon the Road for Dover, and then he told me that his Uncle Busby was inserted in the Pass (by the Name of Thomas Jackson) which he shewed me; but he having no mind to go, stayed in England (and for the most part at Hallam) so that my Master commanded me back, to look after his Affairs there: And for some time before he was to return, he said he would send for me over. Ever since he left Hallam, Mr. Busby hath continued privately there, for

none beſides Mr. George Brent and my ſelf and the Women of the houſe, were ſuffered to know of him; nay ſome of his Relations who have lain in the houſe, have not known but that he was beyond Sea, tho' they were Papiſts, yet he would not ſuffer them, but concealed himſelf.

Busby. I pray will you tell me what day, month, or year it was, you and I had this Diſcourſe you ſpeak of; and tell me how it came that I was ſo familiar with you?

Bar. Street. What need you impoſe it upon him, when he ſaith he hath lived with you ſix years and more? he cannot remember it, but he tells you that it was in the Garden, where he has been with you an hundred times and more, not thinking further of it; 'tis impoſſible to ſatisfy you the particular time; therefore why do you ask him ſuch a fooliſh queſtion?

Busby. I deſire you will let me know how you (as you pretend) come to know I was a Jeſuit.

Joſ. Dudley. Sir, it is what you know to be truth, and I am ſure you cannot but remember, it was in the Walk at the head of the Orchard, where you was before me expecting my coming to you, and did then uſe all the perſwading means that might be to confirm me in your Opinion; in which I ſeemed ſo well ſatisfied, that you told me you would leave me to conſider of it, but that I ought to forſake my Friends, and whatever elſe, to come to God Almighty, of which you did not doubt; but bid me be careful, for delays were dangerous: And my Lord, as to his being a Jeſuit, he did own it when my maſter was committed to Priſon for refuſing the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance; (for he was then private at Weſt Hallam) withal ſaying, in his Conſcience he ought not to take them, for their Church would not allow it, but on the contrary did expreſly forbid it: Nevertheleſs Mrs. Powtrel, Mr. William Powtrel, and divers of the Family did argue for his ſo doing, eſpecially after Mr. Thomas Cannynge came from St. Thomas in Staffordſhire, and ſaid that his Uncle Fowler, he, and all belonging to him, had taken the Oath of Allegiance: And that it was the Opinion, and with the conſent of Mr. Fitter their Prieſt, that they might do it; and for that reaſon Mr. Cannynge came to adviſe my maſter the like: But Mr. Busby did reject the motion, and ſaid no ſecular Prieſt could give leave ſo to do, and for his part he was abſolutely againſt it, and ſo was all the Society: But if Seculars gave too much liberty, he would not be guilty of their fault; ſo when all would not prevail with him, then Mrs. Powtrel and I went to Mr. William Brent at Fox Coat in Warwick-ſhire, her Grand-father, and Mr. Busby's Father-in-Law, a Councellor, to have his advice; and upon his writing ſeveral Letters to my maſter, and Mr. Busby, that it was proper for my maſter ſo to do, nor could he avoid it; then in compliance to Mr. Brent, he did not much oppoſe the taking of the Oath of Allegiance: And thoſe Letters, the next night after Mr. Gilbert had taken Mr. Busby, Mrs. Smally (for fear he ſhould find them) did burn, but ſhewed them to me as ſhe was looking over many papers more, the moſt of which ſhe did likewiſe burn.

Mr. Gilbert. For your Lordſhips and the Juries further confirmation, that the Priſoner is a Jeſuit as well as a Prieſt, and that he held a dangerous Correſpondence with ſome of his Order, which have been executed for their Treaſons in relation to the Plot; I muſt acquaint your Lordſhip that this Busby was Procurator for the Jeſuits, and that he received the Rents of their Lands, from 1673 till 1677, and that he diſburſed and returned ſeveral great ſums of mony to divers Jeſuits, as may appear by Letters, and his Account-Book, which I took; where may be ſeen what Dealings and Tranſactions he had with Gawen, Harcourt, Turner, Ireland, Pool, Bennet, Heaton, Tomſon, and others of his Tribe: He could not deny it to be his own hand-writing.

My Lord here is the Book.

(Which was preſented to the Judge and peruſed by him.) Then Mr. Gilbert proceeded.

My Lord, I did alſo ſearch at Weſt Hallam Houſe for Popiſh Prieſtly Garments, (being well informed that there were ſuch in the Houſe) and found divers Suits of Veſtments and other Popiſh Trinkets, which I brought away; together with thoſe I formerly ſent back from the laſt Aſſizes; all which I have ready in Court to be produced, and have alſo a Miniſter here, (who has formerly been a Popiſh Prieſt himſelf) to inform your Lordſhip the names and uſe of all the particulars; here are alſo (my Lord) a Box of Wafers, which I ſuppoſe they uſe for the Sacrament at the Maſs; the larger ſort I am told are for the Prieſts uſe, the leſſer for the People; and here are the Wafer Irons which made them.

Mr. Sheppey, pray tell my Lord and the Jury the Names of all thoſe things, and how the Prieſt uſeth them at Maſs.

Mr. Sheppey taking up the things, ſaid, My Lord, this is a Veſtment uſed when the Maſs is ſaid, this is a Stole, and this is a Maniple, and this an Antipendiana: And ſo gave an account of the reſt of the Trinkets.

(Then Thomas Houis was called and ſworn.)

Bar. Street. What can you ſay, Friend, of the Priſoner? See if you know him, look upon him.

Thomas Houis. I know him well enough, he perſwaded me to be a Roman Catholick, when I was about to marry a man's daughter that was a Papiſt; whom I could not have, until I turned to their Religion. Mr. Busby perſwaded me, and when he had converted me, bound me to believe that Matrimony was a Sacrament; he gave me Abſolution, and made me do Pennance; the words of the Abſolution I cannot pronounce, but I have been ſeveral times at Maſs when he ſaid it, when I had Abſolution from him; after Confeſſion I was to ſay theſe words:

'For all which, and whatever elſe I cannot at 'this preſent call to mind, I am heartily ſorry 'for, for the Love of God; and purpoſe by 'God's Grace to amend, beſeeching you my 'Ghoſtly Father to pray to God for me, and to 'give me Abſolution and Pennance.

Afterward you know you married me, and I was cited to Lichfield Court for being married privately by you. My Lord, I have been preſent when Mr. Busby ſaid Maſs at Weſt Hallam, and have heard and ſeen him ſay Maſs ſeveral days in his Prieſtly Robes: I never knew any other Prieſt but him at Weſt Hallam; moſt Sundays and Holydays he ſaid Maſs, where were preſent moſt of the Roman Catholicks in thoſe parts; I have heard him preach three times, and no more.

Busby. Did I come to you, or you to me?

Tho. Houis. I came to you.

Busby. Then I did not perſwade you to turn Catholick, you was ſatisfied upon the firſt perſwaſion ſwaſion before you came to me, and declared you would turn Catholick.

Tho. Houis. I was perſwaded by Mr. Shirborn of Standly Grange, yet not fully convinced but by you.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, this Shirborn he ſpeaks of, was one Captain Shirborn a great Papiſt, who lived near me, a Letter Carrier (as was reported) and one that ſold them Books and Trinkets.

Tho. Houis. For I was fully ſatisfied then in all things by your inſtructions, and hearing your Sermons; as for Maſs, I did not underſtand it, but you ſaid it was Maſs; beſides, others called it ſo.

Busby. How can you ſwear to a thing you do not underſtand?

Tho. Houis. If I did not, you told me ſo, and I believ'd you, becauſe you did the Office of a Prieſt.

Bar. Street. It ſeems this is the matter, you courted a Papiſt for your Wife, and Busby told you the way to have her was to be a Papiſt, and you did hearken to Busby to perſwade you; he told you Matrimony was a Sacrament, and before you were married, you muſt be confeſs'd, and have Abſolution; and Mr. Busby, you put words into his mouth to deſire Abſolution, but gave it in ſuch Language as he underſtood not: he ſays he has heard you ſay Maſs frequently; but preach only three times.

Busby. It is an eaſie matter for him to ſay ſuch things, but how does he prove it to be Abſolution or Maſs, when he ſays he underſtands not the Language?

Tho. Houis. My Lord, I have not only been preſent at that which they call their Maſs, but I have alſo receiv'd the Sacrament from Mr. Busby then, and have ſeen him give the Sacrament to divers other perſons too; and beſides, my Lord, I did ſend my eldeſt Child to the Chappel at Standly Grange, to have it chriſten'd by Mr. Busby: This Woman (pointing to Sarah Clark who ſtood by) carried it: When we came there, Dr. Richard Needham (who lived there) ſaid to me, Are you the Father of this Child? I anſwer'd yes: Then ſays Dr. Needham, You ought not to be preſent when your Child is chriſten'd: whereupon, my Lord, I went into a corner of the Room, but could perceive well enough what was done, and Mr. Busby did chriſten my Child, and gave her the Name of Ann, Mr. Peter Waldron was Godfather, and Mrs. Ann Smally Godmother.

King's Council. We ſhall now call Elizabeth Evans for further proof of Mr. Busby's exerciſing his Prieſtly Office: (Who was alſo ſworn.)

Bar. Street. Come good Woman, what can you ſay of the Priſoner at the Bar, do you know him?

Eliz. Evans. Yes, I know the Priſoner at the Bar, its Mr. Busby, my Lord, and have ſeen him in his Prieſtly Habit ſay Maſs in the Chappel at Mr. Powtrel's Houſe at Weſt Hallam; I ſaw him chriſten Henry Avery's Child of Stauton, I was Godmother to the Child: He has confeſs'd me ſeveral times; and I have received Abſolution from him: I have received the Sacrament from him.

Bar. Street. What was it he gave you, when you received the Sacrament from him?

Eliz. Evans. I know not what it was Mr. Busby gave me.

(Then the Wafers were called for; they were of ſeveral Sizes in a Box.)

And being ſhewed to her, ſhe ſaid, Yes my Lord, theſe are what he gave us at Maſs for the Sacrament; I remember them, they were juſt ſuch.

Busby. Wafers are things uſually put under Biskets and Macaroons, therefore how can ſhe ſay thoſe are the Sacrament, for they are what I have ſeen given to Children to eat and play withal.

Bar. Street. They are things indeed to give to Children.

King's Council. Pray call Dorothy Saunders.

(Who appeared and was ſworn.)

Bar. Street. Well Dorothy Saunders, what ſay you?

Dor. Saunders. He has ſeveral times abſolved me, and given me the Sacrament, and has ſaid Maſs, where the company were ſometimes more, and ſometimes leſs; (and having a Wafer given her into her hand) and he held up the Wafer thus, (and ſhewed the Court and the Jury the manner of his Elevation of the Hoſt.) And being ask'd by the Judge whether ſhe knew Prieſtly Veſtments? (anſwered)

Dor. Saunders. Yes I know Prieſtly Veſtments when I ſee them; (which being ſhewed to her) ſhe ſaid ſhe had ſeen Busby in ſome of them; but for his chriſtening of Children, I know nothing of that.

Busby. Is that the Sacrament? Thoſe Wafers in the Box, is that the Sacrament?

Dor. Saunders. We took it at your hands for the Sacrament.

Bar. Street. Mr. Busby you are ſo impertinent in your Queſtions, you think you have weak perſons to deal with; I hope the Jury will take notice of it.

King's Council. Call Sarah Clark.

(Who appeared and was ſworn.)

Bar. Street. Sarah Clark, have you heard Mr. Busby ſay Maſs?

Sa. Clark. Yes my Lord, that which he told us was Maſs, but I did not underſtand it, for it was in another tongue, which they ſaid was Latin.

Bar. Street. But had he his Veſtments on, or how was it, tell us good Woman?

Sa. Clark. Yes my Lord, he had Veſtments on, and he did then give us the Sacrament as he called it, which was a Wafer, and that he put into our mouths after that he had elevated the Hoſt: and he himſelf told me it was the Sacrament.

Bar. Street. Well, and have you made Confeſſion to him, and has he abſolved you after you have done ſo?

Sa. Clark. I have been at Confeſſion before him upon my knees, and when I had done, he ſpoke ſomething to me in Latin (as I think) which he ſaid was Abſolution, and I did take it to be ſo; and I have ſometimes my Lord, heard him preach, and that I underſtood, becauſe it was in Engliſh. He told me what Abſolution was, and the Maſs, and the ſame was to be read in Engliſh, and thoſe that could read, at thoſe times ſaid the ſame.

Bar. Street. Several Witneſſes have ſpoken cloſely that he has exerciſed his Office in all things as a Prieſt: Have you known him marry any body, and chriſten Children; if you have ſpeak?

Sa. Clark. My Lord, he did not marry me, one Mr. Gavan married me; but I have heard that he did marry Thomas Houis, and I am ſure he did chriſten Thomas Houis his firſt Child, for I carried it it to him, and Mr. Waldron, and Mrs. Ann Smally were Godfather and Godmother, and he did name it Ann; it was chriſten'd at Standly Grange, at Dr. Needham's houſe, and ſeveral others were there at the ſame time, and afterwards I brought it home.

Busby. How do you know it to be Maſs and Abſolution, when you ſay you do not underſtand the Language I ſpoke in?

Sa. Clark. Tho' I did not underſtand what you ſaid, you told me what every thing meaned, and I did believe you, becauſe others told me ſo too; beſides all Papiſts thought it their duty (as you told us) to be there all Holydays and Sundays, to prevent a Venial Sin, which if we omitted we were liable to Pennance.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, we have three or four more Witneſſes, but we are loath to trouble your Lordſhip and the Court with any further Teſtimony of this nature; hoping the matter of the Indictment has been fully proved againſt the Priſoner, and if your Lordſhip pleaſe we will reſt here.

Bar. Street. I ſuppoſe the Jury will believe there has been ſufficient Evidence given to convict him; but Mr. Busby what can you ſay for yourſelf?

Busby. Joſeph Dudley tells your Lordſhip how I ſhould tell a Childiſh Story of hiding myſelf in the Curtains, when I was two years old; pray my Lord, conſider how I could remember what I did at two years old; I know not how I could. I have told your Lordſhip I was born beyond Sea, I am ſure I was bred there; I hope your Lordſhip will not take notice of an hear-ſay; my Mother went beyond Sea at the beginning of the Troubles, not after, 'twas before Edge-Hill Fight. As to what Houis ſays, he himſelf does acknowledge, that he does not underſtand what Language I abſolved him in, nor the Language of the Maſs, and therefore he cannot ſwear to it; and for ought I know, as to to his being married, it was in a priviledged place, and could not be cited to Litchfield Court; and for what the other Witneſſes ſays, their Evidence is only that they heard ſomething read in an unknown Language, uſually Women pray in an unknown Language, and thoſe publick Prayers were only Family Duties; they ſwear not what it was, becauſe they underſtand it not.

Bar. Street. I believe not one in a hundred underſtands your Prayers that hear them; elſe they would not be ſo juggled by you.

Busby. There are Veſpers and Mattins, and Even ſong; he does not diſtinguiſh what it was that was ſaid, by reaſon 'twas in an unknown Language to him; it was only Family Duty. I can produce a Witneſs to prove it, that Women do Family Duty in an unknown Language.

Bar. Street. I know Women do not Officiate in your Church.

Busby. He ſwears my Lord, to what he does not underſtand. As for Elizabeth Evans, ſhe ſwears concerning ſaying Maſs, and underſtands not one Service from another, and this proves not particularly my Prieſtly Office.

Bar. Street. Mr. Busby, you forget chriſtening Avery's Child, and Houis's Child, confeſſing and abſolving divers perſons, the material Evidence: You only offer ſome little Diverſions.

Busby. Dorothy Saunders knows not what ſhe ſwears, nor Sarah Clark, none of the Witneſſes can diſtinguiſh one ſervice from another, they cannot therefore ſwear what was, and what was not; giving of Bread is not the Prieſtly Office, they do not ſwear poſitively to my exerciſing the Prieſtly Office, other perſons wear thoſe Garments as well as Prieſts: Thoſe things are Monuments and Heyre-Loomes to the Family, they were taken out of Churches in former times at the Reformation: There are now to be ſeen in the Cathedral at York, Church Stuff and Veſtments, which are kept for Antiquity, and ſo were theſe.

Bar. Street. Mr. Sheppey has been a Prieſt, and he knows the uſe of thoſe things as well as you.

Busby. My Lord, thoſe things Laymen do wear as well as Prieſts, I deſire to call a Witneſs to prove it.

Bar. Street. You may if you will, but to what purpoſe?

Busby. Pray call Robert Needham.

(Who was called and appeared.)

Bar. Street. Well Needham, do you know theſe things?

(The Veſtments being ſhewed unto him)

Rob. Needham. I have had theſe things on my ſelf, my Lord, and have ſaid my Prayers in them, and have thought my Prayers more acceptable when I had them on; and I have ſeen them uſed by others ſeveral times.

Busby. More wear them that are Laymen, than ſuch as are Prieſts.

Bar. Street. Needham, it ſeems you wore them whilſt you ſaid your Prayers, that they might be more acceptable?

R. Needham. Such like Veſtments are worn by Laymen in ſeveral places

Busby. I deſire one Mr. Charles Umphrevill may be called, to ſpeak to my being an Alien born.

(Who being called for the Priſoner, was not ſworn.)

Char. Umphrevill. To Mr. Busby's being an Alien, I have known Mr. Busby ſeveral Years, and I have heard his Mother and Brother affirm he was born at Bruſſels: And I have an Affidavit from the Regiſter at Coddington of all their Children born in England, and we do not find Mr George Busby's name in the Regiſter.

Bar. Street. How can you be ſure of that? You ought to have brought the man along with you, to teſtify it.

Cha. Umphrevill. My Lord, the Sexton is an old man above ſixty years of Age, and could not come, but he made Affidavit of it, which is here.

Bar. Street. That does not ſignify any thing at all, that Affidavit cannot be allowed, for he might be born there, and yet not regiſter'd; but what makes you ſay we? What makes you concerned?

Cha. Umphrevill. I ſay we, becauſe I was one of thoſe employ'd to get Mr. Busby's Habeas Corpus.

(Upon Mr. Umphrevill's being at a ſtand, and Busby directing him to tell what he had ſeen beyond Sea; the Judge taking notice thereof, ſaid,)

Bar. Street. What would you have him ſay Mr. Busby? tell him.

Cha. Umphrevill. I have ſeen Canons beyond Sea wear ſuch Veſtments, that are not in Orders; I have ſeen Children wear them, and they I am ſure are not in Orders.

Busby. I call Mr. Mayo to prove that I am not a natural born Subject of the King's.

Bar. Street. (Come Sir, tho' you are not upon your Oath, yet you muſt tell us the truth, as faithfully as if you were.)

Edw. Mayo. I have ſearched the Regiſter at Coddington, and I do not find George Busby's name, the Priſoner, regiſter'd'; I have ſearched all the Books, and I find no Regiſter of him.

Bar. Street. An hundred Children may be born in that Pariſh within this 20 years, and not regiſter'd; all that are baptized, are regiſter'd only.

Busby. Mr. Mayo, ſatisfy my Lord of the diſappointment I had of my Habeas Corpus, which you got for me.

Bar. Street. To what purpoſe? but Mr. Busby you ſhall not ſay but I will hear him: What ſay you Mayo?

Edw. Mayo. My Lord I was employed about an Habeas Corpus for Mr. Busby in Eaſter Term laſt, and did obtain one for him then, but by reaſon of ſome ſlackneſs it was preſently out of date, and ſo became ineffectual. Alſo in Trinity Term, I procured another Habeas Corpus for him, which was deliver'd to the Under-ſheriff of this County of Derby, who was then very ſick at London, of which Sickneſs he died there at laſt, and that Habeas Corpus for that reaſon did likewiſe fall ſhort, by which diſappointments Mr. Busby is not ſo prepared for his Tryal at this time as otherwiſe he might, if he had not really depended upon his being removed to London by Habeas Corpus.

Bar. Street. All this is too little to the purpoſe, for if he expected to have had his Tryal there, and was prepared for it a Term or two ago, how comes it to paſs he is not prepared now? Come, come Mr. Busby what can you ſay more?

Busby. I could not be born at Coddington, I was born beyond Sea, out of the Kingdom. My Lord, here is not one word proved of the ſubſtance of the Indictment, not a word proved that I took Orders beyond Sea, nor here, from any perſon that ſaw me take Orders; not a word of that proved: nor not a word of the ſubſtance of that Statute of Queen Elizabeth, which I am indicted upon; only ſome few Women ſay they heard me pray in an unknown Language, which was no more than Family Duty; and I can produce a Witneſs that Women ſay their prayers publickly in an unknown Tongue, and all anſwer; and by theſe Circumſtances I am accuſed for being a Prieſt.

Bar. Street. I find Mr. Busby you underſtand the Law; But pray you, is the Sacrament given by Women? and is Abſolution given by Women?

Busby. If they underſtand not the Language, they underſtand not the Thing: Treaſon may be ſpoke in French, and I not know it to be ſo.

Bar. Street. Then it ſeems no man can prove a Prieſt, that does not underſtand the Latin Tongue.

Busby. None of the Witneſſes has ſworn that I gave Abſolution, nor that I ſaid Maſs, but in an unknown Tongue. What they have ſaid are only Circumſtances, and do not prove the Indictment; and what they ſay I did, are things that are performed by thoſe that are not Prieſts. I offer it again to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, that I have not been proved a born Subject of the King's. I was deprived of my Habeas Corpus, which was detained in the Sheriff's hand, and ſo loſt the Benefit of it; (theſe things are material;) and have not had time to produce Witneſſes that I was not born in England, but beyond Sea: At London I could have got Evidence to prove that; and here has been no proof made of that, but a ſtory told of me when I was a Child: I have proved that my name cannot be found in the Regiſter at Coddington. For the reſt I have not had time; if I had had the benefit of my Habeas Corpus, to have been tried at London, I had Friends there that could have proved me born beyond Sea: This Dudley that appears an Evidence againſt me, was a Servant of Mr. Powtrel's, who was gone away upon diſguſt; he ſent away ſeveral Loads of Goods, and now he comes to ſwear againſt me; I am verily confident that he carried away above three Horſe-load of Goods, that he carried privately out of the Garden, of Plants and ſuch things, and ſent them all away.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, they were his Cloaths, and other things of his own, which he took with him when he went away.

Bar. Street. All this ſignifies nothing, if it be proved; but bring what Witneſſes you will to prove it.

Busby. I hope your Lordſhip will conſider that I am an Alien born, and that by the loſs of my Habeas Corpus I had not time to bring my Witneſſes; and that the Prayers I ſaid were only Family Duties: I hope that will be conſider'd; and that thoſe people that have ſworn I ſaid Maſs and abſolved, do not know what Maſs is, nor Abſolution. My Lord, here is nothing proved of the Indictment againſt me.

Bar. Street. You have ſaid all this ſix times over, if you have nothing farther to ſay in your defence, I muſt ſum up the Evidence to the Jury.

Bar. Street. You of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, George Busby, ſtands indicted of Treaſon upon the Statute of 27 Eliz. Cap. 2. the principal Branch whereof is this:

'And be it further Enacted by the Authority 'aforeſaid, That it ſhall not be lawful to or for 'any Jeſuit, Seminary Prieſt, or other ſuch Prieſt, 'Deacon, or Religious or Eccleſiaſtical Perſon 'whatſoever, being born within this Realm, or 'any other of her Highneſs Dominions, and 'heretofore, ſince the ſaid Feaſt of the Nativity 'of St. John Baptiſt, in the firſt Year of her Ma'jeſties Reign, made, ordained, or profeſſed, or 'hereafter to be made, ordained, or profeſſed, by 'any Authority or Juriſdiction, derived, chal'lenged, or pretended from the See of Rome; by 'or of what Name, Title, or Degree ſoever the 'ſame ſhall be called or known, to come into, be, 'or remain in any part of this Realm, or any 'other her Highneſs Dominions, after the end 'of the ſame Forty days, other than in ſuch ſpe'cial caſes, and upon ſuch ſpecial occaſions only, 'and for ſuch time only, as is expreſſed in this 'Act: And if he do, That then every ſuch Of'fence ſhall be taken and adjudged to be High 'Treaſon: And every perſon ſo offending, ſhall 'for his Offence be adjudged a Traytor, and 'ſhall ſuffer, loſe, and forfeit as in caſe of High 'Treaſon.

This makes every Offender againſt this Statute a Capital Offender, and guilty of High Treaſon: Now whether he is within this Law, you are to conſider. Mr. Gilbert has told you that he is a reputed Prieſt and Jeſuit, in the Neigbourhood, and that as ſuch he had an Order from his Majeſty to apprehend him. He uſed his endeavours to take him for ſome time, but could not apprehend him till the ſixteenth of March laſt, and then he found him; but in ſuch an obſcure hole, that no body would hide himſelf in, but ſuch an extraordinary Offender. Innocent people do not obſcure themſelves in that manner. Joſeph Dudley, to prove him a Native and not an Alien, tells you, that when Soldiers in the time of the late Wars, Wars, came to plunder his Father's Houſe, he heard him ſay, that at two Years old he hid himſelf in the Curtains in his Mother's Chamber for fear of the Soldiers. But (ſays the Priſoner) my memory could not ſerve me at two Years old to retain what I did then. But our Parents tell us what we did then. If a man be ask'd, What Age are you of? no man can tell, but as his Parents tell him. My Father told me I was ſix Years old, and from thence I remember it. His Father and Mother were not out of England (as appears) till about 1646, and then the War was ended; and the Priſoner confeſs'd himſelf to be about forty Years of Age, which ſhews him born in England. He that but obſerves his Language, will find that the Tone of the Engliſh Language remains with him. One born in Wales, (tho' he come young from thence) he will have a Welſh Tone as long as he lives. The Priſoner tells you, that no man has proved his being in Orders of the Church of Rome, nor where, when, or by whom made a Prieſt: But if all that were to be proved, it would make the Law idle and inſignificant. If he be made a Prieſt in England, 'tis as much as if made at St. Omers or Rome. He did own to Joſeph Dudley, that he was made a Jeſuit, and laboured to make a Convert of him in the Garden, when he was alone with him. The next was Thomas Houis, who courted a Woman, and muſt not have her, unleſs he turn'd Roman Catholick. Busby muſt diſcourſe him, and make a Convert of him. He hears Busby preach three times, and heard him ſay Maſs ſeveral times; and was not only married by him, but has been confeſs'd and abſolved by him divers times. But Busby's fallacious Argument has no weight in it, that becauſe he underſtands not Latin, therefore he proves it not Maſs, nor other Services of the Church of Rome. Dorothy Saunders ſpeaks to the ſame purpoſe, that he confeſs'd and abſolved her. And ſhe tells you, that ſhe has ſeen him elevate the Hoſt, and has ſhewed you the manner how; and he gave her the Sacrament, which ſhe and the reſt took from him as the Sacrament: And that ſhe has ſeen him officiate in ſome of the Robes produced in Court. Sarah Clark ſpeaks to the ſame purpoſe, and ſo did Elizabeth Evans. But Busby ſays, becauſe this was done in an unknown Tongue, they cannot ſwear it; and that he is no Prieſt, becauſe they do not ſwear where, and when, he received his Orders. Whoever does exerciſe that Profeſſion, we do believe him of that Church. When a Miniſter of our Church preaches or officiates, we do not ſay, Pray let us ſee your Orders firſt; but if he officiate uſually as a Prieſt, 'tis taken for granted that he is one. He can tell where he received his Orders, but it may be cannot produce them upon all occaſions. Muſt he therefore be no Prieſt? Upon the whole, if you believe the Witneſſes, or any two of them, you are to find the Priſoner guilty; I believe you have had full Evidence, go together and conſider of it.

(The Jury went forth, and after a ſhort ſtay came back into the Court.) And then,

Clerk. Gentlemen of the Jury, have you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Fore man.

Clerk. George Busby, hold up thy hand: Look upon the Priſoner.

Clerk. Do you find George Busby guilty of the High Treaſon and Felony he hath been arraigned of, or not guilty?

Fore-man. Guilty.

Clerk. And ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Look to him Jaylor.

Bar. Street. Tho' I muſt paſs Sentence upon you of courſe, the Jury having found you guilty; yet I muſt tell you, that his Majeſty hath commanded me to reprieve you from Execution.

(Then Mr. Baron Street paſſed Sentence.)

That you the Priſoner now at the Bar be conveyed hence to the place from whence you came, and that you be conveyed thence on a Hurdle to the Place of Execution; where you are to be hang'd by the Neck; that you be cut down alive, that your Privy Members be cut off, your Bowels taken out and burnt in your view; that your Head be ſevered from your Body; that your Body be divided into four Quarters; which are to be diſpoſed of at the King's pleaſure: And God of his infinite mercy have mercy upon your Soul.

To the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty. And to the Right Honourable the Lords of His Majeſty's Moſt Honourable Privy Council.

The humble Petition of Stephen Colledge, now a Priſoner in the Tower of London.

Humbly ſheweth,

'THAT your Petitioner having been a 'cloſe Priſoner ever ſince his firſt Com-'mitment, is altogether ignorant of the 'particular matters charged againſt 'him, and of the Names of the Witneſſes who 'are to prove the ſame; upon his knowledge 'of both which, as well the nature as the man-'ner of his Defence muſt depend; and becauſe 'upon the conſideration of his Caſe, ſeveral 'Matters of Law may ariſe as well before as at 'the Time of his Tryal in which Council will 'be neceſſary to aſſiſt him, and ſeveral Mat-'ters of Fact preparatory to his Tryal, 'with which under his Confinement he cannot 'be furniſht without the help of a Sollicitor, 'and he is like to be wholly uncapable of re-'ceiving any benefit from the privilege allowed 'by Law of peremptory Challenge to ſeveral 'Jurors, eſpecially in a Country where he is 'abſolutely a Stranger, unleſs he may have ſome 'knowledge of them before his Tryal.

'In full aſſurance therefore of the great Ju-'ſtice and Clemency of Your Majeſty and this 'Honourable Board which he hath lately had 'ſome experience of, and doth with all humi-'lity and thankfulneſs acknowledge, Your Pe-'titioner doth humbly beſeech Your Majeſty 'and this Honourable Board, that he may 'have a Copy of the Indictment againſt him, 'or the particular Charges of it, That his Coun-'cil and Sollicitor may have free acceſs to, 'and private Conference with him; and be-'cauſe their own private affairs or other acci-'cidents may call away ſome of his Council 'from his aſſiſtance, that Mr. Wallop, Mr. Smith, Mr. Thompſon, Mr. Darnel, Mr. Weſt of the 'Middle Temple, Mr. Holles of Lincolns-Inn, Mr. 'Rotherham, Mr. Lovell, Mr. Rowny of Grays-Inn, 'Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Ward of the Inner-Temple, 'may be aſſigned him for Council, and Aaron 'Smith for his Sollicitor, and that he may have 'a Copy of the Jurors to be returned upon his 'Tryal ſome days before his Tryal.

And your Petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c.

The TRYAL of Stephen Colledge.

Preſent the { Lord Norreys. / Lord Chief Juſtice North. / Mr. Juſtice Jones. / Mr. Juſtice Raymund. / Mr. Juſtice Levyns.

On Wedneſday the 17 of Auguſt, 1681. the Judges and Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-Delivery, met at the Court-Houſe in the City of Oxford; and after Proclamation for Silence, the Commiſſion of Gaol-Delivery was Read, and then the Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer. Proclamation was made for the Sheriff to return the Precepts to him directed: The Juſtices of the Peace of the County of Oxford were called over; and the Appearance of the Grand Jury Summoned to attend this Commiſſion was taken.

L. Ch. Juſt. North. GEntlemen, You that are returned of the Grand Inqueſt, there has been a Seſſions ſo lately that in all probability there will be no great matter to trouble you with at this time. And ſo I ſhall not trouble my ſelf nor you to give you any Charge, becauſe we know of no buſineſs yet that we ſhall need you for. The Court hath recorded your Appearance. You will do well to be in the way either in the Town or here about the Court, that you may be ready if any thing ſhould happen. 'Tis neceſſary for us to have your attendance, but we know not of any thing that we have in particular to trouble you with. We have an Indictment before us, let us proceed upon that.

Cl. of the Crown. Gaoler, have you your Priſoner?

Gaoler. We will fetch him preſently.

Then the Priſoner was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. Stephen Colledge hold up thy hand. (Which he did.)

'Thou art here Indicted by the Name of 'Stephen Colledge late of Oxford, in the County 'of Oxford, Carpenter; For that thou as a falſe 'Traytor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Se'rene, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sove'reign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace 'of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland 'King, Defender of the Faith, &c. thy Su'preme and Natural Lord, the Fear of God in 'thy heart not having, nor weighing the Duty 'of thy Allegiance, but being moved and ſe'duced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the 'cordial Love, and true due and natural obedi'ence which true and faithful Subjects of our 'ſaid Sovereign Lord the King towards him our 'ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſhould and of 'right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing and 'machinating, and with all thy ſtrength in'tending the Peace and common Tranquillity 'of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King of this 'Kingdom of England to diſturb, and Sedition 'and Rebellion, and War againſt our Sovereign 'Lord the King, within this Kingdom of Eng'land to move, ſtir up and procure; and the 'cordial Love, and true and due obedience 'which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid 'Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our 'ſaid Sovereign Lord the King ſhould and of 'right ought to bear, wholly to withdraw, put 'out and extinguiſh, and him our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction 'to bring and put, the Tenth Day of March, in 'the Three and Thirtieth Year of the Reign of 'our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the 'Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and 'Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at Ox'ford, in the County of Oxford, Falſly, Malici'ouſly, Subtilly and Traiterouſly, did Purpoſe, 'Compaſs, Imagine, and Intend Sedition and 'Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, to 'move, ſtir up, and procure, and a Miſerable 'Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid So'vereign Lord the King to procure and cauſe, 'and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King from 'his Regal State, Title, Power and Govern'ment of his Kingdom of England, to deprive, 'depoſe, caſt down and diſinherit; and him 'our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death 'and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and 'the Government of the ſaid Kingdom at thy 'will and pleaſure to change and alter, and 'the State of all this Kingdom of England, in 'all its parts well inſtituted and ordained, whol'ly to Subvert and Deſtroy, and War againſt 'our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, within this 'Kingdom of England to levy; and thy ſaid 'moſt Wicked Treaſons and Traiterous Imagi'nations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and 'perfect, thou the ſaid Stephen Colledge the ſaid 'tenth day of March, in the Three and Thir'tieth year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King with Force and Arms, &c. at 'Oxford aforeſaid, in the County of Oxford a'foreſaid, Falſly, Maliciouſly, Subtilly, Adviſedly, 'Deviliſhly and traiterouſly did prepare Arms,

'and

' and Warlike offenſive habiliments to wage War ' againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King. And ' thy ſelf in warlike manner for the purpoſes ' aforeſaid, then and there Falſly, Maliciouſly, ' Subtilly, Adviſedly, Deviliſhly and Traite- ' rouſly didſt Arm, and one Edward Turbervill, ' and other Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord ' the King, to Arm themſelves, to perfect thy ' Traiterous purpoſes aforeſaid, then and there ' Adviſedly, Maliciouſly and Traiterouſly didſt ' incite and adviſe. And further, then and there ' Falſly, Maliciouſly, Subtilly, Adviſedly, De- ' viliſhly and Traiterouſly didſt ſay and declare, ' That it was purpoſely deſigned to ſeize the ' Perſon of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King ' at Oxford aforeſaid, in the County of Oxford ' aforeſaid. And that thou the ſaid Stephen Col- ' ledge in proſecution of thy Traiterous purpoſe ' aforeſaid, wouldſt be one of them who ſhould ' ſeize our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King at ' Oxford aforeſaid in the County aforeſaid. And ' that thou the ſaid Stephen Colledge thy ſaid moſt ' wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations, ' Compaſſings and Purpoſes aforeſaid the ſooner ' to fulfil and perfect, and Diſcords between ' our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and his ' People to move, cauſe and procure, then and ' diverſe times and days as well before as after, ' at Oxford aforeſaid, in the County of Oxford ' aforeſaid, in the preſence and hearing of di- ' verſe Liege Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord ' the King, then and there being preſent, falſly, ' maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and ' traiterouſly didſt ſay and declare, That nothing ' of good was to be expected from our ſaid So- ' vereign Lord the King, and that our ſaid So- ' vereign Lord the King did mind nothing ' but Beaſtlineſs and the Deſtruction of his ' People: And that our ſaid Sovereign Lord ' the King did endeavour to eſtabliſh Arbitrary ' Government and Popery, againſt the Duty of ' thy Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our So- ' vereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dig- ' nity, and againſt the Form of the Statutes in ' this Caſe made and provided.

How ſay'ſt thou Stephen Colledge, art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted and haſt been now arraigned, or not Guilty?

Colledge. My Lord, I do deſire, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, to be heard a few Words.

L. C. J. Look you Mr. Colledge, the matter that hath been here read unto you is a plain matter, and it hath been read to you in Engliſh, that you may underſtand it. 'Tis an Indictment of High Treaſon; now you muſt know, that no Plea can be received to it, but either Guilty or Not Guilty as to the Fact; if you can aſſign any matter in Law, do it.

Colledge. Will you pleaſe to ſpare me, that I may be heard a few words. I have been kept a cloſe Priſoner in the Tower ever ſince I was taken: I was all along unacquainted with what was charged upon me. I knew not what was ſworn againſt me, nor the perſons that did ſwear it againſt me, and therefore I am wholly ignorant of the matter. I do humbly deſire, I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and a Copy of the Jury that is to paſs upon me, and that I may have Council aſſigned me, to adviſe me, whether I have not ſomething in Law pleadable in Bar of this Indictment.

L. C. J. Theſe are the things you ask, you would have a Copy of the Indictment, you would have Council aſſigned to you, to adviſe you in matter of Law, and a Copy of the Jury.

Colledge. One word more, my Lord, I deſire to know upon what Statute I am indicted.

L. C. J. I will tell you for that. Is it not contra formam Statut. with an abbreviation?

Cl. of Cr. Yes.

L. C. J. That refers to all manner of Statutes that have any relation to the thing in the Indictment that is High Treaſon. For it may be meant contra formam Statut. which are all the ſeveral Statutes that are in force concerning High Treaſon. Now for thoſe things that you demand, you cannot have them by Law. No Man can have a Copy of the Indictment by Law; for Council you cannot have it, unleſs matter of Law ariſes, and that muſt be propounded by you; and then if it be a matter debatable, the Court will aſſign you Council, but it muſt be upon a matter fit to be argued: For I muſt tell you, a Defence in Caſe of High Treaſon ought not to be made by Artificial Cavils, but by plain Fact. If you propoſe any matter of Law, the Court will conſider of it, and aſſign you Council if it be reaſonable. For a Copy of the Jury, that you can't have neither, for there is no ſuch thing as yet; there is no Iſſue joyned whereupon ſuch a Jury ſhould be impannelled. When you have pleaded to Iſſue, then we muſt award the Sheriff to impannel a Jury to try that Iſſue. So as to what you ſay as to want of preparation for your Tryal, we cannot enquire what Notice you have had; and yet if you had never ſo little time, there is no cauſe why you ſhould not plead, tho' you were but juſt now taken and brought to the Bar to anſwer it, and never heard of any thing of it before. So that I think you ought to plead preſently.

Colledge. My Lord, I am wholly ignorant of the Law, I may ruin my ſelf by miſtaking the Law; I deſire Council, not to delay my Tryal, but only to adviſe me whether there is not ſomething in Law proper for me to plead to this Indictment, and thoſe things I alledged were not at all to delay the Tryal, but only that I may not be wanting to my ſelf in what I may by Law have.

L. C. J. I tell you, Council cannot be aſſigned you, till the Court be poſſeſſed of ſome matter to grant it upon.

Colledge. I had ſome Papers my Lord, that were taken from me, which I deſire may be reſtored to me. I only plead, that I may have my Birth right, and that which the Law gives me; if I may have Juſtice, I deſire no more. Thoſe Papers were taken from me in the Houſe over the way ſince I was brought from the Priſon; they were Papers that concerned my Defence; ſome Directions and Inſtructions how to manage my ſelf in that Defence. If you pleaſe to let me have thoſe Papers, I will not take up much of your time; I deſire to have but common Juſtice, and that which is my right by Law.

L. C. J. That which you demand, Juſtice, you ſhall have by the Grace of God to the beſt of our Skill, without any partiality in the World. But you muſt truſt the Publick Juſtice of the Kingdom. We are to be of Council for you, ſo far as to ſee that all things proceed fairly on all

all things proceed fairly on all ſides. And when things come before us that are fit for you to have Council upon, you ſhall have Council aſſigned you; for we are tender of the Life of a Man, as well as of the Life of the King, and of the Publick Juſtice of the Kingdom. But this is no reaſon why you ſhould not now plead. For the Papers you ſpeak of, we will take an Examination of them afterwards. If they were Papers that are neceſſary for your defence upon your Tryal, in God's Name you muſt have them reſtored to you, but we know not which way you came by them, nor what they are.

Colledge. They were taken from me juſt now, under pretence of bringing them to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. How comes any body to give yon Papers? No body can ſolicit for one that is under an Accuſation of High Treaſon, unleſs he be aſſigned ſo to do by the Court.

Colledge. God have Mercy upon any Man that is ſo accuſed then; for 'tis not poſſible for him to make his defenſe, if he cannot be at liberty to look after it himſelf, nor any of his Friends permitted to do it for him.

L. C. J. You can ſay, whether you are Not Guilty without any Papers.

Colledge. My Lord, I know not but there may be ſomething in Law for me to plead to this Indictment, which I ſhall loſe the benefit of if I plead. I humbly conceive, you are to be my Council; and as you are Judges, are to proceed according to the Law. You are upon your Oaths to do me right according to the Law.

Mr. J. Jones. But till you have propoſed a matter of Law fit for Council to argue, there is no Council to be aſſigned you.

Colledge. If I had thoſe Papers I could tell what I ſhould plead. My Lord, this is one thing, I am a Free-man of London, and I am not impleadable by the Charter of London any where out of the Liberties of the City in Pleas of the Crown.

L. C. J. You are indicted in Oxfordſhire for High Treaſon committed here. If there be not any thing of High Treaſon proved, done in Oxfordſhire, you will be acquitted. But a Free-man of London cannot have a Priviledge to commit Treaſon in Oxfordſhire, but muſt be tryed for it there.

Colledge. Will you pleaſe to order me my Papers back that were taken from me?

Mr. J. Jones. You ought firſt to plead. You have a right to demand Council in matters of Law, but then it muſt be upon ſuch matters of Law as you your ſelf propoſe to the Court, and the Court ſhall judge to be matters of Law fit to be debated: Till then we cannot aſſign you Council.

Colledge. It was ſo in the Tryal of Lilburne, and in the Tryal of my Lord Stafford, there was Council aſſigned to them.

Mr. J. Jones. Not before they pleaded to the Indictment.

Colledge. Did not your Lordſhips, ſome of you, that are Judges of the Kings-Bench ſay that it was the right of the Priſoner, to have a Copy of the Pannel and of the Jury before the Tryal?

Mr. J. Jones. No ſure: Here are two of us that are of the Court, and we never heard of any ſuch thing.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord do me right, I am ignorant of the Law, and through my Ignorance may miſtake.

L. C. J. God forbid we ſhould not do you right; you may expect it from us; we are upon our Oaths to do all the King's Subjects right.

Colledge. I am ignorant in the Law, and 'tis impoſſible for me to make my defence without the Aſſiſtance of my Papers.

L. C. J. Cannot you tell, whether you be Guilty or Not Guilty of this Treaſon?

Colledge. I can ſo, but I know not what error I may run my ſelf into, if I ſhould plead preſently, and loſe the benefit that the Law may give me.

L. C. J. All matters of Law are ſaved to you after you have pleaded.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord let me have my Papers again that were taken from me.

Cl. of Cr. You muſt plead to the Court, Guilty or not Guilty.

Colledge. Shall I not have my Papers after I have pleaded?

L. C. J. We will not capitulate with you. Move what you will then, but till you have pleaded, we can enter into no other buſineſs.

Colledge. I know not but I might plead ſome other thing to the Indictment.

Mr. J. Jones. Propoſe what you will, if it be a matter in Law fit to be argued, you ſhall have Council aſſigned yon.

Colledge. Pray my Lord, let me have my Papers again. If it were not my right to have them, or to have Council, I would not ask it; but if it be, I would not loſe what is my right.

L. C. J. You muſt plead firſt. I know not but he may be a Criminal that brought you thoſe Papers; for we allow no Sollicitors in Caſes of Treaſon.

Colledge. Some of thoſe Papers were received from me in the Tower, and were brought back to me, and taken away but to day, I deſire they may be returned.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty or Not Guilty?

Colledge. Thoſe Papers tell me I have a Plea in Law, but what it is, I cannot directly tell without my Papers.

L. C. J. You muſt mention it and propoſe it, and then we will do what is fitting for us to do in it.

Colledge. I have not that method about me, nor can I directly tell it without my Papers; but 'tis ſomething of Law about the Indictment.

L. C. J. You are not bound up to Forms of Law. For if you propoſe the matter never ſo looſely, yet if it be a matter of avail, and that which the Law is not clearly againſt you in, you ſhall have Council, and time to draw it up in form.

Colledge I cannot propoſe the matter ſo regularly as if I had my Papers.

Mr. J. Jones. You are not bound to propoſe it in formality of Law, my Lord tells you, only let us know what it is.

Colledge. If I have a priviledge in Law, I hope you will give me the benefit of it.

L. C. J. We will deny you nothing that the Law gives you; but we cannot give you Council. It is not one particular Caſe, but the common

mon Courſe of Juſtice is concerned. Without a matter of Law ariſes, we cannot aſſign you Council; if we would, we cannot in Juſtice till you have propoſed the matter which the Court thinks fit to be argued.

Colledge. My Lord Coke ſays, It is the Birth-right of every Engliſh-man to have Council in matters of Law, and Lilburne had it upon ſolemn argument in his Tryal.

Mr. J. Jones. What times were thoſe? That was before the High Court of Juſtice.

* Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there be matter in Law, it muſt be propoſed to the Court, and they are to judge, whether it be a point fit to be argued, and then Council is to be aſſigned you, and not till then.

Colledge. My Lord, I know not but there may be ſomewhat in Law for me to plead to this Indictment, till I have my Papers I can't tell what it is.

L. C. J. We know nothing of your Papers what they are, you muſt anſwer whether you be Guilty or Not Guilty.

Colledge. If I had my Papers, I would anſwer to it immediately; but I hope I ſhall not be murdered.

Mr. J. Jones. Have a care of aſperſing the Court. Pray who intends to murder you?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I remember in Lilburne's Tryal, that he ſpeaks of, ſuch Words, were uſed indeed.

Colledge. My Lord, I hope I ſhall not be deny'd what is neceſſary for my defence. This deſign is not only againſt me, but againſt all the Proteſtants.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you been a Proteſtant, Mr Colledge?

Colledge. Ever ſince I knew what Religion was Sir; I never was any thing elſe. For God's ſake, my Lord, let me have the Juſtice of the Nation, and what by Law an Engliſh man ought to have.

L. C. J. You muſt plead Guilty or Not Guilty, or you muſt ſhew ſome matter that you will plead, that is proper for us to aſſign you Council. If we ſhould record your refuſal, you would be judged to ſtand Mute, and Sentence would paſs upon you.

Colledge. If I have a Privilege in Law as an Engliſh man, I will not forfeit it, if I can help it, for any thing in the World. Therefore I deſire I may have my Papers again, that I may ſee if I can plead any thing in Law; for if I have a Privilege by the Law, before I will forfeit it, you ſhall do what you pleaſe with me.

L. C. J. You'll have the advantage of all that matter that is in your Papers after you have pleaded, if there be any advantage.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, order me my Papers that were taken away from me.

L. C. J. They were not taken away by me.

Colledge. They were taken away by the Keeper, under pretence to bring them to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. I know not how you came by them. There came one to me laſt Night that is a common Sollicitor, one Aaron Smith, and deſired he might have liberty to go and ſpeak with the Priſoner. I told him, I did not underſtand till he were aſſigned by the Court, that any could juſtify ſolliciting for a Man that is accuſed of High Treaſon, nor could any be of Council till they were aſſigned: For a Defence againſt Treaſon ought to be by plain matters of Proof and Fact, and not by artificial Cavils. But if you will propoſe any thing of Subſtance as a matter in Law which the Court ſhall think fit to be argued, propoſe it, and then we will aſſign you Council.

Colledge. Is it not my right, that I ought to have a Copy of the Jury?

L. C. J. Look you for that now, you cited the Opinion of the Judges of the Kings-Bench. My Brothers two of them that are here who are Judges in that Court, ſay, they know nothing of any ſuch matter: But I tell you, you have Liberty by Law to challenge 35. by your ſight peremptorily without ſhewing Cauſe. They are bound to look upon you when they come to be ſworn, and if you have juſt Cauſe, you may except againſt as many more as you will. But now we that proceed upon a Commiſſion of Gaol delivery, are to proceed with expedition; there are no particular Men deſigned for a Jury that I know of. But when you have pleaded, we ſhall award the Sheriff to impannel a Jury.

Colledge. If the Law allows me the Liberty of Challenging, it does intend it me that I may challenge thoſe Perſons that I think will do me Juſtice, but where they are Strangers unto me, if I can have no Information about any of them by my own Inquiry or my Friends, I may challenge my Friends as well as my Foes: And ſhould there be any perſon that has a prejudice againſt me, and I not know it, he may chance to be one.

L. C. J. I hope they will be neither Friends nor Foes, but true Men.

Colledge. I know not that my Lord.

Mr. J. Jones. This that you ſay as to a Copy of the Jury is unſeaſonable. There is no Jury, nor can be awarded till you have pleaded. There muſt be firſt Iſſue joyned; and that cannot be but upon your Plea of Not Guilty. Therefore you muſt plead firſt, and then ſay all you will.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty or not Guilty?

Colledge. My Lord, may not I have a Pannel of the Jury.

Mr. J. Jones. There is no ſuch thing in being.

Colledge. I know not what to ſay to it; pray my Lord, let me have my Papers.

Cl. of Cr. You have heard the Opinion of the Court, you muſt firſt plead.

Colledge. I cannot plead firſt. I muſt loſe my Life, if I muſt; I neither know who accuſes me, nor what it is they accuſe me of; 'tis impoſſible I could defend my ſelf, if I have not my Papers.

L. C. J. We know not what Papers you mean.

Colledge. The Gaoler took them from me, and one of the King's Meſſengers. Pray, my Lord, will you order them to be returned to me again? Let me but ſee whether I have any right or no, and whether I have any thing to plead or no: When I have peruſed my Papers, I will propoſe it as well as I can to you. Pray, my Lord let me have a fair Tryal.

L. C. J. We promiſed you a fair Tryal, but you muſt put your ſelf upon that Tryal by your pleading.

Colledge.

Colledge. I cannot do that without my Papers, my Lord. Let me but have them again, and I will not delay your time at all.

L. C. J. You can tell whether you are Guilty or Not Guilty, can't you?

Colledge. If I have a Plea in Law againſt the Indictment, I hope you will not hinder me of that which is my right. It is poſſible the Indictment does not lay it right, either as to the matter of Treaſon, or as to the place.

Mr. J. Jones. That is upon the Iſſue of not Guilty upon your Trial. If there be not matter of Fact, or Words proved that are Treaſon in this place, you will have the advantage of it upon your Tryal.

Colledge. I know not my Lord, but that the Indictment does mention ſomething of Treaſon, and ſomething of Miſdemeanour.

Mr. J. Jones. That which is Miſdemeanour, won't amount to a proof of the Treaſon upon the Trial.

L. C. J. If they prove no Treaſon againſt you here, but only Miſdemeanour, I do not underſtand that the Jury can find you Guilty of that Miſdemeanour, for 'tis another Crime, and there is another ſort of Proceedings for it. In Miſdemeanour, there are no peremptory Challenges; in Miſdemeanour Council is to be allowed for the Priſoner, but not in Treaſon.

Colledge. Pray my Lord, be pleaſed to order me my Papers again: I know not what to ſay without I have the aſſiſtance of my Papers; when I have them, I ſhall be ready to plead preſently according as I ſhall find I may by Law. This I am ſure, I have done nothing, nor ſaid nothing of Treaſon, and I pray for nothing but Juſtice, and that which is my right. This is a moſt horrid Conſpiracy to take away my Life; and it will not ſtop here, for it is againſt all the Proteſtants in England.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, You do not only trifle, but run out into very great Extravagancies. Who has any Conſpiracy againſt your Life? You ſhall be allowed to give in Evidence any thing of any Conſpiracy againſt you, or Contrivance againſt you when you are upon your Tryal. Now the Queſtion is, Are you Guilty, or not Guilty? I ſee no uſe of Papers that you can have as to the Plea.

Mr. J. Jones. You will run into Danger by ſpending of time.

Colledge. Pray my Lord, order me my Papers, they are in the Hands of Mr. Murrell the Gaoler, and Sewell the King's Meſſenger.

L. C. J. When you have pleaded, we will take it into Conſideration.

Colledge. It may be too late then.

L. C. J. 'Tis a plain matter before you, whether you be Guilty or no. You know what to anſwer.

Colledge. I will give a direct Anſwer, after I have my Papers again.

Mr. J. Jones. You can give an Anſwer to that without Papers.

L. C. J. Conſult with your own Heart, and there you may receive an Anſwer to that Queſtion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge, can any body tell whether you be Guilty or no, better than yout ſelf?

Mr. J. Jones. If you expect any Papers, they ought to be framed by your ſelf; for by Law, none can adviſe you what to plead.

Colledge. I don't expect it in matter of Fact, but if matter of Law ariſe.

Mr. J. Jones. But this is a matter of Fact, and therefore you may plead Not Guilty, as well without your Papers, as if you had them.

Colledge. But if there be any matter of Law, that I ought to have the Advantage of.

Mr. J. Jones. Then you ought to have no Advice, till they be aſſigned by the Court: For by the Law, neither Council nor Advice are allowable to you, till the matter has been propoſed, and the Court think fit to aſſign you Council.

Mr. J. Levinz. You talk of the Privilege of an Engliſh Man; you have all the Privileges of an Engliſh Man: You are here brought to an open Trial, according to the Law, and by that Law you muſt plead. Now if a Man be indicted for High Treaſon, he is bound to plead either Guilty or Not Guilty, unleſs he has a matter in Law to excuſe him from that Plea, which muſt be propoſed to the Court, and then Council will be aſſigned, and if ſo be matter of Law ariſes upon any Evidence that is given againſt you at the Trial, you may demurr upon that Evidence, and pray Council of the Court to argue that demurrer, and they will not deny you, but I think you muſt plead preſently.

Colledge. I ſuppoſe other Perſons that have been tried, have had Council before they have pleaded.

Mr. J. Jones. But never before the matter was propoſed to the Court.

L. C. J. It was ſo in the Caſe of my Lord Stafford. The Court made him propoſe his matters in Law, and ſo it was in Lilburne's Caſe. He did inſiſt upon a great many matters in Law, and had the Books there himſelf Colledge. I am wholly ignorant of the Law, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Your Lordſhips are the Judges of the Law in this Caſe. The Queſtion here in ſhort, is whether the Priſoner be Guilty or Not Guilty, and that being demanded of him by the Court, if he refuſes, let him take the Conſequence of it.

Colledge. What is that pray, Sir George?

Mr. Att. Gen. Judgment of High Treaſon. For if a Perſon ſtand mute, and will not plead to an Indictment of High Treaſon, the common Judgment of preſſing to Death muſt not paſs upon him, but an Attainder of High Treaſon.

Colledge. Well if it be ſo, I cannot help it. I thank God I am innocent of any Treaſon, or any ſuch thing

L. C. J. Why don't you plead Not Guilty then?

Colledge. I do not refuſe to plead, I am willing to plead with all my Heart, if I may have my right.

Mr. J. Jones. If you do not plead, you refuſe to plead.

Colledge. Pray my Lord, let me have my Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give the Court an Account where had you thoſe Papers.

L. C. J. Nay, we will not enter into any Examination of that matter now Mr. Attorney; he can have no uſe of Papers to ſee whether he ſhould plead Guilty or Not Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We know nothing of thoſe Papers, we deſire that he may anſwer to the Queſtion ſhortly whether he be Guilty or Not Guilty, if not, we pray your Lordſhips Judgment.

Colledge. I had them not all from one Perſon, they were received from my own hands, ſome of them in the Tower; and being brought back to me, they were taken from me to day; let me have but one of them: the Paper of Inſtructions in point of Law, that I may know what is my right: I would not throw away my Life, if I have any thing that is my right that can preſerve it.

L. C. J. You are to give a plain Anſwer, whether you are Guilty or Not Guilty, now for that you have no uſe of Papers: For you can beſt tell whether you be Guilty or Not. If you can propoſe any matter of Law that you can have to plead, do it.

Colledge. If I have any Plea, that I may plead beſides Not Guilty, I deſire I may have my Papers to conſider of it, and that I may have Council aſſigned me.

L. C. J. If you have any ſuch Plea, tell us the Matter and Subſtance of it.

Colledge. I do not know what really are matters of Law, if I had thoſe Inſtructions that are in my Papers, I could give you a direct Anſwer preſently.

L. C. J. You ought not to have any advice to decline your Trial: When you propoſe matter of Law your ſelf, you may have advice upon it. But you ought not to have advice to decline your Trial before-hand.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Colledge. Mr. Attorney, pray let me have a Copy of the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Apply your ſelf to the Court for it, we muſt receive our Directions from thence.

L. C. J. You have had the Opinion of the Court, you can't have it.

Mr. J. Levinz. You have been told nothing can be received from you, but a Plea of Guilty or Not Guilty, and the Court have given you their Opinion, and that you cannot have a Copy of the Indictment, nor Council aſſigned you, till you offer ſomething for them to be aſſigned upon.

L. C. J. And that was it which was done in the Kings-Bench in the Caſe of Fitz Harris, which I ſuppoſe you meant when you ſpeak of the Judges Opinions.

Mr. J. Jones. Nothing was done there till he himſelf aſſigned the matter in Law that he would plead, and then Council was aſſigned him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Colledge was in the Court at that time, and can tell what was done.

L. C. J. If you deſire the Indictment read over again diſtinctly, that you may have.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, with all my heart.

Colledge. Pray let me hear it again my Lord if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Read it over again to him, and read it diſtinctly.

Cl. of Cr. Thou art indicted by the Name of Stephen Colledge late of Oxon, in the County of Oxon, Carpenter, as a falſe Traytor.

Colledge I have obſerved one thing already, my Lord, I pray I may have Pen and Ink.

L. C. J. Ay, give him Pen and Ink, let him make what Obſervations he can.

Then the Clerk read the Indictment thro'.

Clerk of Crown. Art thou guilty of this High Treaſon or not guilty?

Colledge. This Indictment, if I underſtand it, ſays, there was a Plot and Conſpiracy by me and others; now I know when my Lord Stafford was tried, they did proceed to prove, firſt, that there was ſuch a Plot, and then that my Lord was guilty of it; firſt, that there was ſuch a Conſpiracy by the Papiſts, is it not requiſite they ſhould, firſt, prove ſuch a Plot and Conſpiracy there was, before they go to prove me guilty of it?

Mr. J. Jones. What before you have pleaded?

L. C. J. When you have pleaded, the next thing is to try you, and to give the Evidence; but what way the King's Council will take to manage your Tryal, that we can't tell.

Mr. J. Jones. But they are not to be directed by you Mr. Colledge.

Colledge. It was ſo done I ſay in my Lord Stafford's Caſe.

L. C. J. He pleaded firſt however, you have not yet pleaded.

Cl. of Cr. Are you guilty or not guilty?

L. C. J. Do not trifle any longer, 'tis a plain matter, and requires a very ſhort and plain Anſwer.

Colledge. Your Lordſhips are my Council as well as my Judges, and I do deſire if I have any right to plead any other matter, you will be pleaſed to declare it to me, for I am ignorant in the Law.

Mr. J. Jones. We have declared our Opinion already, that you have no right to have any Solicitor or Council, till matter of Law do ariſe.

Colledge. Is it your Lordſhips Opinion, that I have no Plea in Law?

Mr. J. Jones. Have you no Plea in Law?

L. C. J. He would have our Judgment, whether there be any or no.

Mr. J. Jones. You yourſelf know beſt, we know nothing you have to plead.

Colledge. I cannot unleſs I have Council, and my Papers.

L. C. J. There does nothing appear to us.

Colledge. I know nothing of the Law.

L. C. J. Then plead not guilty, that is a ready Plea.

Mr. J. Jones. You have had our Opinion over and over again. You have as much Council as is allowed in theſe Caſes, for every man is beſt Judge of his own Caſe, what to plead, whether guilty or not guilty: You have had as fair play as ever any man had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge has ſaid, he knows of no Plea in Law he has, and therefore there is none; for de non apparentibus & non exiſtentibus the Reaſon is the ſame.

L. C. J. In matter of Fact, there is no Plea but not guilty.

Colledge. The Court are Judges in matter of Law, and they are my Council.

Mr. J. Jones. And the Court have all of them declared they know of nothing in Law that you have to plead.

Colledge. Is not Council to be allowed to one under my Circumſtances?

L. C. J. If you have any thing for Council to be aſſigned upon, you ſhall have them.

Colledge.

Colledge. If I am ignorant of that, and cannot propoſe it, ſhall I not have the Aſſiſtance of Council?

Mr. J. Jones. No, we have told you the Law plainly, and that which is frequent in practiſe in like Caſes, and you muſt be contented with the ſame meaſure.

Colledge. My Lord, I am ignorant of the Law.

L. C. J. Then rely upon the Fact and plead not guilty.

Coll. But if I have a right to any point in Law let me have it.

Mr. J. Jones. You have a right if you will propoſe any matter of Law, but we cannot propoſe it for you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge, no man ought to propoſe your Plea for you; Ignorantia juris non excuſat.

Coll. Shall my Ignorance deſtroy me, Mr. Attorny?

Mr. Sol Gen. You have heard the Opinion of the Court, you have a right to propoſe any other Plea that you can yourſelf; but you have no right to ask Council before you have pleaded.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If Mr. Colledge have ſuch a thing as a Solicitor, I ſhall crave leave to put that Solicitor in mind of the Caſe of one that was indicted of High Treaſon for ſoliciting for one that was accuſed of High Treaſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall talk of that by and by.

L. C. J. The ſame methods are uſed in your Caſe, as are in all Caſes of the like nature, as far as my knowledge reacheth.

Coll. If I have a right to the Law, I muſt not loſe it for my own Ignorance of the Law; but if you deny me both my Council and my Papers, you take away the means of my coming to that right, and make me uncapable of making my defence.

L. C. J. You have been told you muſt plead before you do any thing.

Coll. This is the Perſon, (pointing to a Perſon by him) that had the Papers. Be pleaſed to command him, that I may have them again: He ſaid he had Orders to take them from me, and bring them to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. I know of no uſe you could have of any Papers, to plead guilty or not guilty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If there be in thoſe Papers Advice in matters of Law, that you have been told you ought not to have, till the Court has aſſigned you Council to give you Advice.

Coll. Then if there be a Right in Law, and a priviledge which I ought to have, I muſt loſe it by my being ignorant of it, and have no one to adviſe me about it neither.

L. C. J. You may propoſe it, if you have any, if not, you muſt plead to the Indictment.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, it has not been uſual for us, that are of the King's Council, to enter into Dialogues with Priſoners at the Bar. The firſt thing that is to be done in ſuch Caſes, is for the Priſoner to plead guilty or not guilty, or to offer ſomething to the Court that may be a matter in Law fit to be debated; and this we pray may be done in this Caſe, and that the Priſoner may plead preſently, or elſe we deſire your Judgment.

Coll. Pray let me have my Papers again my Lord.

L. C. J. You go in a Circle, and run round from one thing to another, and will receive no Anſwer. We have told you our Opinion, and we muſt tell you, that tho' you hold long diſcourſes, yet you will be judged loſt and mute if you plead not a legal Plea: Therefore you muſt plead guilty or not guilty, or offer ſomething that may be a Plea in Law, and then you ſhall have the Aſſiſtance of Council, but you muſt have none till then.

Coll. But ſhall I not have my Papers my Lord?

L. C. J. We know nothing of them.

Coll. Pray my Lord order the man to give them to me, that took them from me.

L. C. J. We will order no ſuch thing. He may be a Criminal perhaps that did give them you at firſt; but when you have pleaded, we will hear any motion you will make about them.

Coll. It may be I ought to plead that the words were ſpoke in another place than the place laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You will not need to plead any ſuch thing, for if there be nothing proved of Treaſon that you ſaid or did in Oxfordſhire, you muſt be found not guilty.

Coll. Here is another thing my Lord, I am indicted by the name of Colledge Carpenter.

L. C. J. What then?

Coll. I am not a Carpenter, but a Joyner; is that any Bar to it?

L. C. J. The addition ſignifies nothing, I do not know any difference betwixt a Carpenter and a Joyner in Law.

Mr. J. Jones. They might have indicted you by the name of Labourer, and it had been good.

Coll. Pray my Lord either give me my Papers or aſſign me Council, or elſe I may throw away my Life, for I am wholly ignorant of the Law.

L. C. J. When you have pleaded we will hear any motion you will make, and do that which is juſt upon it; but I ſee no uſe you can have of Papers to plead guilty or not guilty, which is the only Queſtion is ask'd you.

Cl. of Cr. Are you guilty or not guilty?

Coll. Will you promiſe me my Lord, there ſhall no Advantage be taken againſt me, if I do plead ſo?

L. C. J. We will make no Bargains with you. Plead as you ought by Law to do.

Coll. If matters of Law ariſe, ſhall I have Council to ſpeak to them?

Mr. J. Jones. Yes you ſhall, you need not doubt it. Propoſe any matter now fit to be argued, and you ſhall have Council to it.

Coll. I am not capable of doing it. I know not when I have any right.

Mr. J. Jones. The Court is of Council to you.

Coll. If you are my Council, then have I any Plea in Law to make?

Mr. J. Jones. You have heard the Indictment read, what ſay you? For you muſt propoſe the matter.

L. C. J. We know of none but guilty or not guilty; if you can tell of any do.

Coll. I pray I may have my Papers again; if there be no other Plea for me, pray let me have my Papers again.

L. C. J. You have heard the Opinion of the Court, you muſt plead.

Mr. Att. Gen. Certainly Mr. Colledge you can't be guilty of theſe things, you need not to ſcruple it, to plead not guilty ſure.

Coll. My Lord, having been kept a Priſoner, as I have been, without Pen, Ink, or Paper, no Converſation with my Friends, no Knowledge of the Fact, and being ignorant of the Law, not knowing knowing where I have a right, nor when I have a right, if you do force me upon this Plea and it coſt me my Life, at your doors lie it

Mr. J. Jones. You will loſe your Life if you do not plead, if you plead not guilty, and are not proved guilty, you will ſave your Life by this Plea.

Coll. I am willing to plead what the Law requires of me to plead, and if I have a right in Law, I would not loſe it.

Cl of Cr. Are you guilty or not guilty?

Coll. Why, then as they have laid it in that Indictment, in manner and form as 'tis there laid, I am not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, by whom wilt thou be tried?

Coll. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good deliverance.

Mr. J. Jones. Not guilty is his Plea.

L. C. J. Now he has pleaded Mr. Attorny; he ſpeaks of ſome Papers, if there be any Memorandums or any thing that muſt aſſiſt him, that is neceſſary for his defence in his Tryal in thoſe Papers, it will be hard to deny him them.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordſhips pleaſe to give me leave, I will give you an account of them. The meſſenger juſt now, did deliver theſe Papers to be delivered to the Court.

Coll. Pray ſpeak out Mr. Attorny, and let me hear.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he came to Priſon he had none, but Mr. Aaron Smith, the meſſenger informed me, did deliver them to him.

L. C. J. Whoſe hand-writing are the Papers in?

Coll. He received them from me in the Tower.

Mr. J. Jones. You received them from him firſt.

Coll. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. What were the Papers you delivered to him in the Tower?

Coll. The three pieces joined together that contains Directions how to govern myſelf; there is another to the ſame purpoſe, which inſtructs me to demand a Copy of the Indictment, and of the Pannel of the Jury, and thoſe were Inſtructions to tell me what the Law allows me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Speech made for you, that begins thus; Before you plead, ſpeak to this purpoſe. Pray my Lord, I deſire that may be examined, and Mr. Smith may be called to give an account how he came to give the Priſoner thoſe Papers; for here are abundance of Niceties propoſed for him to move, and there will be a ſtrange ſort of Proceedings at this rate, if men go about to eſpouſe the Cauſe of Traytors.

Coll. I am no Traytor, Mr. Attorny.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſtand indicted of High Treaſon.

Coll. That is by a Grand Jury made up that morning, as I am informed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Liſt of the names of ſeveral men of the County returned to be of the Jury, and particular marks ſet upon them, who are good men, and who bad men, and who moderate men.

Coll. Ought I not to have that Paper my Lord?

Mr. Att. Gen. No I hope not.

L. C. J. Whether they are material, or not material, if we ſhould judge them not material for his defence, yet it will look like an hard point upon the Priſoner; and to deliver them into an hand that they may be carried away or ſtifled, in caſe there were a Crime in the delivering of them, that would not do well on the other ſide: Therefore I would have theſe Papers put into ſome ſafe hands, that what may be for the Priſoner's uſe he may not want, and yet they may not be taken away, if there be occaſion to uſe them upon another account.

Mr. Att. Gen. But if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I deſire you would enter into the Examination of this matter; for I have an account from London by a ſpecial meſſenger, that there are ſeveral perſons go up and down to procure Witneſſes againſt the King's Evidence, making it a publick Cauſe; and here my Lord, is another Paper which is a Liſt of men as Witneſſes pick'd up together againſt the King's Witneſſes.

L. C. J. He muſt have that, deliver him that preſently.

Mr. Att. Gen. But my Lord, others have gone about and framed Witneſſes for him.

L. C. J. You muſt give him the Liſt of his Witneſſes, for I ſee not what uſe you can make of it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This no man will oppoſe ſure, if any thing that is delivered to him be fit to be delivered, the perſon that delivers it muſt come and own it; but before any perſon delivers any Papers to the Priſoner, for him to make uſe of againſt the King's Evidence, we deſire to know what thoſe Papers mean, and who gave them.

L. C. J. Look you Brother, we will have nothing of heat till the Trial be over, when that is over, if there be any thing that requires our Examination, it will be proper for us to enter into the Conſideration of it. But in the mean while what hurt is there, if the Papers be put into ſome truſty hands, that the Priſoner may make the beſt uſe of them he can, and yet they remain ready to be produced upon occaſion: if a man be ſpeaking for his Life, tho' he ſpeak that which is not material, or nothing to the purpoſe, there will be no harm to permit that.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. With Submiſſion my Lord, that is aſſigning him Council with a Witneſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. If people are permitted to go up and down and ask Counſel of perſons and bring it in Papers to the Priſoner, 'tis the ſame thing as if Council came to him. Here is a buſie Solicitor, and he gets advice from Council, and then he delivers it to the Priſoner; 'tis the firſt of the kind certainly that ever was allowed; and if this be not to aſſign him Council, I know not what is.

L. C. J. What think you of our peruſing the Papers?

Mr. Att. Gen. With all my heart my Lord.

Coll. If you take away all helps from me, you had as good condemn me without a Trial.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ought not to have helps to plead dilatories.

Coll. Not to help me to my right in Law?

Mr. Att. Gen. We are to go upon the Fact now: And my Lord, I pray your Judgment about them, when you have peruſed them.

Then the Judges looked upon that Paper that was called the Speech.

L. C. J. We have read enough of this to ſuppreſs it, and to examine how this came to his hands.

Mr. J. Jones. Where is Aaron Smith?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, here is another that is worſe than that, charging the Juſtice of the Nation. Pray call Mr. Aaron Smith, and Mr. Henry Starkey.

Mr.

Mr. Smith appeared.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Smith, did you deliver theſe two Papers to the Priſoner?

Mr. Smith. Does any body accuſe me that I did?

Mr. Att. Gen. You are accuſed of it.

Mr. Smith. I deſire proof may be made againſt me.

Mr. Att. Gen. That will be done.

L. C. J. Look you we will not interrupt the Trial with it. Mr. Smith muſt be taken into ſafe Cuſtody, only to ſecure him till we can examine it, not as charged with any Crime, but only that he may be forth coming to be examined.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do not make a direct Anſwer Mr. Smith in the Caſe, it will be proved upon you.

Mr. Smith. Mr. Attorny, I know not what Anſwer to make better than I have given; our Law ſays no man is bound to accuſe himſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. But our Law ſays, you ſhall be examined.

Mr. Smith. I come to give no Informations here Mr. Attorny; if I did I ſhould be then examined.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here are Inſtructions given to the Priſoner, they ſay you gave them.

Mr Smith. I deſire to have it proved.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorny, you will take a Recognizance of Mr. Smith, to be forth-coming during this Seſſions.

Mr. Smith. I will not depart my Lord, I aſſure you; and I hope Mr. Attorny will take my word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Indeed I will not Mr. Smith, becauſe you have broken it with me already; when I gave you leave to go to the Priſon, I did not think you would have abuſed that kindneſs, to give him Papers.

L. C. J. Well, take his Recognizance.

Mr. Smith. 'Tis high time to have a care, when our Lives and Eſtates, and all are beſet here.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. I ſaid it not, meaning by it the Court, for I declare I abhor that Expreſſion to be ſo interpreted, that I reflected upon the Court.

L. C. J. Why do you uſe ſuch looſe Expreſſions then, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. Becauſe I have been threaten'd ſince I came to Town, tho' I have not ſpoke one word in any publick Company ſince I came.

Mr. J. Jones. It ſeems you will reflect here in the Face of the Court, and in the Face of the Country, upon the Government, upon the Juſtice of the Kingdom.

Mr. Smith. No my Lord, I have told you what I meant by it; I neither reflected upon the Court, nor upon the Government, nor upon the Juſtice of the Kingdom.

L. C. J. You ſhould have done well to have forborn ſuch Expreſſions as thoſe were.

Coll. Shall I not have the Uſe of the Papers my Lord: Will you not pleaſe to deliver them back to me, now you have peruſed them?

Mr. J. Jones. One of them is a Speech, and a moſt ſeditious libellous Speech, to ſpit Venom upon the Government in the Face of the Country. We cannot tell who made it, but it ſeems to be beyond your Capacity; and therefore we muſt enquire into it: But we do not think fit to let you have the uſe of that Paper.

L. C. J. For that which contains the names of the Witneſſes, that you have again: For the other matters, the Inſtructions in point of Law, if they had been written in the firſt perſon, in your own name, that we might believe it was your writing, it would have been ſomething; but when it is written in the ſecond perſon, you ſhould do ſo and ſo, by which it appears to be written by another perſon, it is an ill Precedent to permit ſuch things; that were to give you Council in an indirect way, which the Law gives you not directly.

Coll. If I am ignorant what Queſtions to ask of the Witneſſes, ſhall not my Friends help me my Lord?

L. C. J. We will ſift out the Truth as well as we can, you need not fear it.

Coll. Some of thoſe things I took out of the Books myſelf: And if you are reſolved to take away all my helps, I cannot help it; I know not that Mr. Smith wrote one of thoſe Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. But Mr. Smith would have given four Guineas it ſeems, as a Bribe, to the Goaler, and he offered four more to let him have liberty to come to him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. 'Tis time indeed for Mr. Smith to have a care.

Keeper. It was Mr. Starkey that offered me the four Guineas.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray call Mr. Henry Starkey.

(But he did not appear.)

Then the Court took a Recognizance of 100 l. of Mr. Smith to attend the Court during the Seſſion.

Coll. Pray my Lord, let me have my Papers delivered to me, I cannot make my defence elſe.

L. C. J. We are your Council in matter of Fact, and to give you your Papers were to aſſign you Council againſt Law, they being not your own Papers, but coming from a third hand.

Coll. Will you pleaſe to give me the Paper that has the Queſtions in it, to ask the Witneſſes?

L. C. J. There are no Papers with any particular Queſtions to any one Witneſs, but only Inſtructions how to carry yourſelf in this caſe.

Coll. A great deal of it is my own my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorny, truly I think that that does not contain matter of Scandal, may be tranſcribed and given to the Priſoner.

Coll. My Lord, I deſire I may have that, that has in the margent of it, the Caſe of Lilburn and Stafford.

Mr. J. Jones. You ſhall not have the Inſtructions to ſcandalize the Government, all that is neceſſary for your defence, you ſhall have.

L. C. J. If he had writ it himſelf I cannot well ſee how you could take it from him; and truly as 'tis, I had rather let him have too much than too little.

Coll. My Lord, I thought I might have had Council to have aſſiſted me, but if I may have Council neither before my Plea nor after, I that am an Ignorant may be loſt by it, but can't help it.

L. C. J. If matter of Law ariſe, you ſhall have Council to it.

Coll. I know not but it might have admitted of an Argument, that which if I had had my Papers, I ſhould have offered to you.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, we ſhall not go any farther now, I know not how many Witneſſes will be produced either of one ſide or another, but 'tis too late to go on this morning, and becauſe we attend here only upon this Occaſion, we ſhall go on with the Trial at two a Clock in the Afternoon.

Coll. My Lord, you will be pleaſed to order the the Papers for me to peruſe in the mean time.

L. C. J. We have ordered that you ſhall have a Tranſcript of the Paper of Inſtructions, leaving out that which is ſcandalous.

Coll. I deſire I may have a Copy of the whole.

Mr. J. Jones. No, we do not think fit to do that.

Coll. Pray let me know which you do except againſt.

L. C. J. Look you Mr. Attorny, I think we may let him have a Copy of the whole

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before you riſe, I deſire you would pleaſe to take the Examination of Mr. Gregory, about Mr. Starkey.

L. C. J. Swear him. (Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know concerning Mr. Starkey, and what he did offer you?

Gregory. When they came by your Lordſhips Permiſſion to Mr. Colledge, they brought ſome Papers which they delivered to him: And afterwards Mr. Starkey took me aſide, and told me it was hard Uſage that the Priſoner could not have his Council permitted to come to him: Do him what Favour you can, and I ſhall not be ungrateful; ſo he clapped four Guineas in my hand, but I immediately laid them down upon the Table, and would not take them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire you would pleaſe to ſend for Mr. Starkey.

L. C. J. Let him be ſent for.

Cl. of Cr. You muſt go and take up Mr. Starkey.

Meſſenger. Muſt I keep him in Cuſtody? I don't know him.

Cl. of Cr. No, you muſt order him from the Court to attend here.

Mr. J. Jones. Theſe Papers Colledge ſhall not be debarr'd of, for his defence, nor you Mr. Attorny from proſecuting upon them.

L. C. J. No, we will put them into ſuch hands as ſhall take care of that.

Coll. Very few my Lord, have appeared to do me any Kindneſs, ſome have been frighten'd and impriſon'd, others are now in Trouble for it.

L. C. J. Well, you ſhall have the uſe of your Papers.

Coll. May I have any Friends come to ſee me in the mean time?

L. C. J. They muſt not come to you in the Priſon, to give you advice; but I'll tell you, ſince you move it, if my Brothers think it convenient, whilſt the Court does withdraw, any body of your Friends may come to you, in the Preſence of your Keeper.

Mr. J. Jones. Certainly you cannot think you can give a Priviledge to any Friend of yours, to commit any demeanor to offer Bribes to any Perſon.

Coll. I know not of any ſuch thing.

Mr. J. Jones. We do not charge you with it, but Mr Starkey did.

Coll. I have been kept a ſtrict cloſe Priſoner, and if my Friends are ſo kind to me, as to help me in order to my defence, I hope you will not be againſt it. Pray my Lord, let me have my Papers.

L. C. J. You ſhall have them, but they ſhall be put into ſuch hands as the Court may have command over; they ſhall be in the Sheriff's Son's hands, and you ſhall have the immediate uſe of them.

Coll. If there be any thing elſe in thoſe Papers neceſſary for my defence, I pray I may have it.

L. C. J. The Speech is not fit for you; what other Papers would you have?

Coll. Another Paper there is, that is ſomething of Law.

Mr J. Jones. Nothing but libellous, and what is a Scandal to the Government.

Mr Att. Gen. You are to have nothing of matter of Law, but what you are to propoſe yourſelf.

Coll. If you take away all my helps, I cannot propoſe any thing.

Mr Serj. Jeff. To allow you thoſe Papers, is to allow you Council by a ſide Wind.

L. C. J. Look you, the Papers of inſtructions ſhall be delivered to the Sheriff's Son, who ſhall let you peruſe it in this interval, and make uſe of it in your Trial; but it muſt be in ſafe cuſtody to be uſed upon further occaſion, as the King's Attorny ſhall think fit.

Then the Court adjourn'd till two in the Afternoon.

Poſt meridiem, at two a clock the Court returned, and Proclamation was made for Attendance, and for the Under Sheriff to return his Jury.

Coll. My Lord, ought not I to have a Copy of this Jury?

L. C. J. No, they are to look upon you as they come to be ſworn, and then you are to challenge them.

Clerk of Cr. Stephen Colledge, hold up thy hand, and hearken to the Court; thoſe good men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs, &c.

Coll. Pray Sir let the way be clear, that I may ſee them.

Clerk of Cr. Ay, ay.

Coll. Pray Sir how many are there of the Jury that appear?

Mr Att. Gen. There are enough.

Clerk of Cr. Make Proclamation for Information, (which was done.)

Clerk of Cr. Henry Standard, (who was ſworn,) Richard Croke, (who was challenged by the Priſoner,) William Bigg, (challenged.)

Mr J. Jones. Do you challenge him peremptorily, or with Cauſe?

L. C. J. If he do not ſhew Cauſe, it muſt be ſuppoſed it is peremptory.

Coll. I ſuppoſe he was upon the Grand Jury.

L. C. J. That would be a Challenge with cauſe.

Mr Bigg. No, I was not.

Coll. Then I do not challenge him; I know him not. (He was ſworn.)

Clerk of Cr. Thomas Marſh, (challenged,) Thomas Martin, (did not appear,) Gabriel Merry, (being almoſt a hundred Years of Age, was excuſed,) Robert Bird, (ſworn,) John Shorter, (ſworn,) William Windlow, (ſworn,) Edward Ayres, (challenged,) William Ayres, (challenged) and Richard Ayres, (challenged,) Charles Hobbs, (ſworn,) Roger Brown, (ſworn,) Timothy Doyley, (ſworn,) Richard Dutton, (challenged,) Ralph Wallis, (ſworn) John Naſh, (challenged) John Benſon, (ſworn) John Piercy, (ſworn,) William Web, (challenged) and John Lawrence, (ſworn.)

They were counted, and their Names in Order thus.

Henry Standard,	Roger Browne,
William Bigg,	Timothy Doyley,
Robert Bird,	Ralph Wallis,
John Shorter,	John Benſon,

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Mr. Sheriff, there are a great many of the Jury that are not ſworn, they are diſcharged, let them go out of the Court, and ſo you will make room for the Witneſſes.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of Stephen Colledge, late of Oxford, in the County of Oxford, Carpenter, for that he as a falſe Traytor, &c. prout in the Indictment, Mutatis Mutandis, and upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, &c.

Mr. North. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, this is an Indictment againſt Stephen Colledge, the Priſoner at the Bar, for an Endeavour to raiſe a Rebellion within this Kingdom, wherein he is accuſed, and the Jury find that he as a falſe Traitor againſt the King's Majeſty, contrary to the duty of his Allegiance, on the 10th of March, in the 33d Year of the King's Reign, at Oxon here did traiterouſly conſpire, and compaſs the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government, and to raiſe a Rebellion in the Kingdom, and to ſlaughter his Majeſties Subjects, to put the King to Death, to levy War againſt him, and to deprive him of his Royal State and Government, and to alter the Government at his own Will and Pleaſure; and to accompliſh this, he did at Oxon here prepare Arms for the carrying on the War, and excited one Edward Turbervile and others, to arm themſelves againſt the accompliſhment of this deſign, and did declare his purpoſe was to ſeize the King's Perſon at Oxon, and that he was one of thoſe that was to do it; and to bring the ſaid Turbervile and other Subjects to his purpoſe, did falſly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly declare in their hearing, That there was no good to be expected from the King, that he minded nothing but the deſtruction of his People, and Arbitrary Government, and to introduce Popery. And this is laid to be againſt the duty of his Allegiance, againſt the King's Peace, and againſt the form of the Statutes in thoſe Caſes made and provided. The Priſoner, you hear, upon his Arraignment hath pleaded not guilty, which Iſſue you are to try, and if the Evidence for the King, which are ready to be produced, prove that which is laid to his Charge, you are to find it accordingly.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: The Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted of a very high Crime, no leſs than High Treaſon, and that too of the deepeſt Dye; it is for an Endeavour to deſtroy the King, to ſubvert the Government, to raiſe a Rebellion amongſt the King's Subjects. And Gentlemen, thoſe Inſtances that we ſhall give you, and produce our Evidence to, for the Proof of that, are theſe: He laid his Deſign to ſeize the King at Oxon; and he did not want his Accomplices to do it; but they were not men, Gentlemen, that were Proteſtants, but men that were Rebels in the late War, they were men of ſuch a Kidney, that he aſſociated himſelf with, and theſe were the Perſons that were to aſſiſt in this Attempt. In order to this he had prepared Arms in an extraordinary manner, Arms of a great value, for one of his Condition, who is by Trade a Joyner; for if a true Eſtimate were taken of the value of the Arms, I believe they were worth twice his whole Eſtate; he prepared a good Horſe, extraordinary Piſtols, a Carbine, a Coat of Maile, an Head-piece; and ſo being arm'd Cap-a-pee, with that Deſign he came hither to Oxon. And you will judge whether theſe be fit Tools for a Joyner.

Colledge. I beſeech you Sir, have you any body to prove this? If you have not, you do hurt to the Jury as well as me, to ſpeak it.

L. C. J. Be patient, Mr. Colledge, and let Mr. Attorney go on to open the Charge. I will tell you and the Jury too, that what he ſays further than he makes good by proof and Witneſſes, will ſerve for nothing.

Colledge. 'Tis hard the Council ſhould plead againſt me, and open things that he cannot prove.

L. C. J. I will do you all the right imaginable, and therefore I do tell you again; if they do not prove it, all he ſays is nothing.

Colledge. But I beſeech you, my Lord, ſince there hath been ſuch extraordinary means, and Methods uſed to contrive my Death, that the Witneſſes may be examined apart, and far from the hearing one of another.

L. C. J. That we will take care of by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge. This ſhews your Temper, you are inordinate in your way of expreſſing your ſelf.

Colledge. Mr. Attorney, I ſhould not interrupt you, if I were not afraid this was ſpoken to poſſeſs the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope to prove what I have ſaid, or every word of it ſhall paſs for nothing.

Coll. 'Tis impoſſible for all the Men on Earth to prove it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Gentlemen, Theſe were the particulars I was opening to you, in what manner he was armed, and how accoutred he came hither. We ſhall likewiſe ſhew you that he made it his Buſineſs to perſwade others to undertake the Deſign, and joyn with him, as if open War were already declared; he gave out a Sign which was a blew Ribbon, a wrought Ribbon with Letters in it, and this was the mark and ſign they were to know one another by. This was given out by him frequently; and that it may not ſeem an extraordinary thing, Gentlemen, tho' indeed it was a wild attempt, yet you will ceaſe to wonder when you have heard of the Exploits of Venner, who with a few Men raiſed ſuch a Commotion, ſoon after the King's coming in, and the ſeveral Exploits that have of late in Scotland been carried on by a few diſcontented Perſons. So that Men of the like Principles, as we ſhall give you an account of this Gentleman's Principles what they were, may well be thought to ingage in ſuch an extraordinary Exploit. And we ſhall prove what the incouragement was he was to have; for he boaſted of himſelf, that he ſhould be in a little time a Colonel.

Colledge. What Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. A Colonel, a great Preferment for a Joyner.

Colledge. Yes it was ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall ſhew to you that this was not a ſudden unpremeditated thing; for we ſhall prove that he had entertained the horrideſt Malice againſt the King, that ever Subject entertained againſt his Sovereign: For we ſhall give this Evidence, and his Front will not oppoſe it, that he had made it his common Diſcourſe in Coffee-houſes, and publick Houſes, (and I believe

I could bring you 40 and 40 Witneſſes to it) to defame the King, and murder him in his Reputation, and was one of the Complices with Fitz-Harris, who was lately executed for that venemous Libel: We ſhall prove that he juſtified it, and maintained it to be as true as the Goſpel. We ſhall give Evidence that he carried on the ſame Deſign with that Arch-Traytor who was a Papiſt; and I believe if this Gentleman were examin'd thro'ly he would be found to be one of the ſame Stamp, and acted by the ſame Principle; for I think that no Proteſtant Subject would attempt ſuch things as we ſhall prove to you. I believe, Gentlemen, you have frequently heard, as none of us but have, that the King has been traduced as a Deſigner of Arbitrary Government, and his Reputation blaſted maliciouſly and falſly, as an introducer of Popery: Whence comes all this generally, but out of the Popiſh Quiver, who make it their buſineſs to ſet the King's good Subjects at variance amongſt themſelves; and againſt their Prince, by ſtiling the King a Papiſt, as this Priſoner hath done; nay, he hath been ſo impudent as to report that the King was in the Plot againſt his own Life. We ſhall prove to you, how here and at other places he hath frequently done this; to go further, we ſhall produce to you the Evidence that he drew the King's Picture, and expoſed him in all the reproachful Characters imaginable. and that the Picture might be the better underſtood, he adds a Ballad to it: And that he may not have the confidence to ſay this is not true, we ſhall produce to you a whole Bundle of theſe Papers, among thoſe which his Son made a Diſcovery of, when they were ſent to his Uncle to be hid, and we ſhall prove him to be the Author of them; and yet this Man ſhould have the confidence to ſay he is a good Subject and a good Proteſtant, when by all ways imaginable he goes about to ruin the Government, and defame the King! And Gentlemen when we have given this Account by Witneſſes, for I would have you believe me in nothing, but according as I prove it, you will not wonder then that he ſhould ſay his Life is in danger, (for ſo it is indeed?) And if any Man ever was Guilty of High Treaſon, ſure he is, and being Guilty of the greateſt Treaſon, he deſerves the greateſt Puniſhment.

Colledge. Pray, Gentlemen of the Jury, take Mr Attorney General at his Word, and remember Sir, you deſire not to be believed your ſelf, but what you prove.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and Gentlemen, purſuant to what Mr. Attorney hath opened, we will call our Witneſſes, and we will begin with Mr. Dugdale, who was a Witneſs againſt my Lord Stafford, at his Tryal in Parliament, whoſe Credit Mr. Colledge did atteſt at that Trial, aſſerting him to be an honeſt good Man, and I believe his Evidence will go in a great meaſure through all that Mr. Attorney hath opened, and when we have done with him, we hope to ſecond him with other Witneſſes of as good Credit, and that will ſay as much to the purpoſe.

Then Mr. Dugdale was ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Dugdale, look upon the Priſoner, and tell the Court whether you know him.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I do know him Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you give us an Account of your knowledge of him?

Colledge. My Lord, I humbly deſire they may be examined a part, and not in the hearing of one another.

Mr. Att. Gen. That with Submiſſion ought not to be in the King's Caſe, tho' we think there are none of them, that will ſpeak any more than the Truth.

Colledge. Here are ſeveral of them my Lord, they are all of a Gang.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Not of your Gang, Mr. Colledge.

Colledge. I pray they may go out my Lord, (which was ordered accordingly.)

Mr. Dugdale. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, whether or no I may deliver in theſe Papers?

Mr. Att. Gen. By and by, time enough, when we ask for them; ſpeak your own knowledge.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I have been I think acquainted with Mr. Colledge two years or thereabouts. I have been ſeveral times in Mr. Colledge's Company, and truly ſometimes he hath been mightily bent againſt Popery; he hath at ſome times uttered himſelf, becauſe the King did not proſecute the Papiſts according as he thought ſufficiently, that the King was a Papiſt himſelf, that he was as deep in the Plot as any Papiſt of them all, that he had an hand in Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Death. This Mr. Colledge I appeal to your ſelf, whether you have not ſaid it: And in this Town of Oxford you have ſeveral times told me that nothing was to be expected from him, he would do nothing.

Mr. J. Levinz. Who did tell you ſo?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Colledge did tell me that there was nothing to be expected from the King, but the introducing of Popery and Arbitrary Government, this I believe Mr. Colledge will acknowledge to be true.

Colledge. Where was this ſpoken?

Mr. Dugdale. This was ſpoken at a Coffee-houſe, called Combes Coffee houſe in this Town, and at the Angel-Inn in this Town at a Barber's Shop; that Day the King went out of Town, we were in the ſame Shop.

Colledge. Who was there beſides?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do not interrupt our Witneſſes, let us have done with him, and you ſhall have your time to ask him Queſtions after.

L. C. J. For your inſtruction I will tell you, your time is not yet come, if you chop in and interrupt the Witneſſes, you will diſturb any Man living, but your way is this, when he hath delivered his Teſtimony, ask him any Queſtions then; and he ſhall be bound to Anſwer you, and in the mean time you ſhall have Pen, Ink and Paper to help your memory.

Mr. Dugdale. That day the King went out of Town, preſently after he went, you and I went into the Angel-Inn; and we went into the Barber's Shop that is juſt within the Inn, and being charging your Piſtols there, you ſaid Rowley was gone, the Rogue was afraid of himſelf, he was ſhirked away, and here I appeal to your own Conſcience, whether you did not ſpeak of it?

Collledge. I know nothing of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Don't appeal to him, 'tis nothing for that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who did he mean by Rowley?

Mr. Dugdale. The King.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Was that his common Appellation for the King?

Mr. Dugdale. It was his common word concerning the King. And at other times ſpeaking that the King did not do thoſe things that were fair, he hath given mighty great words againſt him: He hath told me that there was no truſt to be put in him; for it was the People we muſt truſt to, and we muſt look to Arm our ſelves, and that he would Arm himſelf and be here at Oxford, and he told me here in the Town accordingly when I came out of the Country, and he ſaid that he had ſeveral ſtout Men that would ſtand by him in it. Their Intention was as he ſaid for the rooting out of Popery, by which name he always termed the Church that is now Eſtabliſhed by Law, as to be of the ſame nature the Papiſts were. This I believe Mr. Colledge will acknowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, go on Sir.

Mr. Dugdale. And at a time when he had Dr. Tongue at his Houſe, he told me that as for Dr. Tongue he had much ado with him, and he had been at a great Charge to keep him in order, that he was forced to neglect his own buſineſs to look after him; for if he had not done ſo, the Rogue, as he ſaid, had a mind to fling all upon the Proteſtants, that is, the Diſſenters, for he does not count the Church of England to be ſo; that he had much ado to keep him in order; for he had ſaid he had drawn Papers for that purpoſe, but thoſe Papers are ſecured, for where they are I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were they that were to be with him in that Deſign of his?

Mr. Dugdale. He told me Capt. Chinton, Capt. Brown, and one Dr. Lewes, and he brought them into Town here, when he came with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what purpoſe did he bring them?

Mr. Dugdale. Expecting there would be a riſing.

Mr. Jones. Did he tell you that here?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, the Friday, I think it was, after the Parliament firſt ſat.

Mr. Jones. How did he expreſs himſelf what they had to do?

Mr. Dugdale. They were to be here, in caſe there were any riſing which he expected.

Mr. Jones. What uſe did he ſay he would make of them?

Mr. Dugdale. For the defence of the Proteſtant Religion, againſt the King and all his Adherents.

Mr. Jones. What did he ſay he would do to the King? I would not lead you.

Mr. Dugdale. He did not ſay what particularly.

Mr. Jones. What did he ſay if the King did not yield to the Parliament?

Mr. Dugdale. If the King did not yield to the Parliament, he ſhould be forced to it.

Mr. Jones. Where did you hear him ſay that?

Mr. Dugdale. At Oxford.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did you hear him declare this at London?

Mr. Dugdale. He did ſay at London, he expected there would be ſomething done at Oxford, and that he would go thither with his Horſe and Arms, and thoſe Gentlemen I named before would go with him. And, he ſaid, let them begin when they would, he did not care how ſoon, his Party was the greateſt Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that Capt. Brown? did you know him?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I knew him very well; he did much frequent Mr. Colledge's Company; he was in the late Army againſt the King.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee him have any Piſtols?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I have ſeen him carry Piſtols about him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where, in his Pocket?

Mr. Dugdale. I ſaw them in the Houſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. At Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did you ſee them in his hand?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell that, he had them in the Houſe, I ſaw them there.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did you ſee him in his ſilk Armour about the Parliament-Houſe, the Lobby, or any place?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot ſay that.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you know of his delivering any Marks or Signs for Perſons to be diſtinguiſhed by?

Mr. Dugdale. I had as much Ribband from him as came to 40 s. with No Popery, No Slavery wrought in it; and he gave it me to diſtribute among my Friends in the Country, that they might be known by other Perſons that would wear the ſame.

Mr. Jones. Where had you it?

Mr. Dugdale. At London, from Mr. Colledge.

Mr. Jones. Where was it to be diſtributed?

Mr. Dugdale. Among thoſe that I knew to be Diſſenters in the Country.

Mr. Jones. Were you to come to Oxford, by agreement, with Mr. Colledge?

Mr. Dugdale. I promiſed him to come to Oxford, and did ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, go on. What more do you know?

Mr. Dugdale. At London I was once at a Coffee-houſe with Mr. Colledge, and with ſome of the Members of the Houſe of Commons; it was a little before they met; and they were earneſtly talking of the Parliament at Oxford, and of ſome diſturbance that was likely to happen here. And it was then fully agreed, and Mr. Colledge was by, That it would be the beſt way, out of every County, where the Parliament had the beſt Intereſt in the People, to leave one in every County that might manage the People. This I appeal to Mr. Colledge whether it be true.

Colledge. You appeal to me, ſhall I ſpeak now, my Lord?

Mr. J. Jones. No, you will remember it by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Pictures?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray let him ſpeak that over again which he mentioned laſt.

Mr. Dugdale. Being in a Coffee-houſe with Mr. Colledge, there were ſome of the Members of the Houſe of Commons by; and ſpeaking of a Diſturbance that might happen here at Oxford; it was then agreed, That in every Quarter where the Parliament had the moſt intereſt in the People, they ſhould not all come up, but ſome remain there to manage the People.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Pictures or Papers, have you any about you?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I have one thing I received from Mr. Colledge, that is, the Letter pretended to be intercepted to Roger L'Eſtrange.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what account did he give you of it? Who made it?

Mr. Dugdale. He told me he was the Author of it himſelf, and he ſhewed me it in Manuſcript before it was printed; and he told me, he got one Curtis, or his Wife, to print it; but he would never truſt them again, for they cheated him of ſome of the Gain.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was the Author, did he ſay?

Mr. Dugdale. He himſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray produce it Sir.

Mr. Dugdale. This and others he delivered to me to diſperſe.

L. C. J. What is it Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. It is a Letter, and a great part of Fitz-Harris's Libel is taken out; it ſeems Colledge was the Author, and this is the Original of the Libel.

L. C. J. Did he tell you this was of his making?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he diſperſe them to any body elſe?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, there was ſome given to one Mr. Boſon, he had ſome at the ſame time, and Mr. Baldwin had ſome.

Then the Paper was read.

Cl. of Cr. First Q. Whether they that talk——

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lord an account what more Papers and Libels he delivered to you.

Mr. Dugdale. I received one like this, I cannot ſay it was the ſame, where all the Biſhops were changing their Hats for Cardinal's Caps.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where is Rary Shew, for it ſeems he hath expounded the meaning of that. (Then it was produced.)

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I ſuppoſe 'tis his own cutting too.

Mr. Dugdale. I heard Mr. Colledge ſing it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where?

Mr. Dugdale. In Oxfordſhire, and in Oxford Town, at my Lord Lovelace's.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where at my Lord Lovelace's?

Mr. Dugdale. At his Houſe in the Country.

Mr. Srrj. Jefferies. Who were in the Company there?

Mr. Dugdale. Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Thomas Player, Mr. Rouſe, Mr. Colledge.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You ſay you heard him in Oxford, and in Oxfordſhire, and at my Lord Lovelace's, where is that?

L. C. J. My Lord Lovelace is here himſelf, and hears what he ſays.

Mr. Dugdale. I might miſtake the County, but I heard him ſing it at Oxford Town, and at my Lord Lovelace's Houſe again.

L. C. J. Where is that?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell the Town.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How came you there?

Mr. Dugdale. Sir Thomas Player did invite me thither.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where is it in Oxfordſhire?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell, 'tis four miles from Henley.

M. Serj. Jefferies. Was my Lord at home?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now for the Cutt then; Did he ſhew you this Cutt?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he told me he would get it printed.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was it before it was printed then that he ſung it?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, it was.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who did he tell you did make it?

Mr. Dugdale. He told me he was the Author of this Cutt, and he gave me one, and we ſang it together preſently after it was printed.

Mr. Att. Gen. How did he deſcribe it to you, when he ſhewed it to you?

Mr. Dugdale. That which hath the Pack on the back of it, he deſcribed to be the King; thoſe that follow him were Topham, Cooper, Hughs, and Snow, and that company of Men there is the Houſe of Commons.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. What was meant by the Pack?

Mr. Dugdale. The Parliament and all his Retinue; and then here is the King in the Mire again, according as 'tis repreſented in the Long——

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Ay, he goes on well. And this here is the Biſhops which they thruſt into the Pack when they have got him down in the Mire, and then they thruſt them all away, as it is in the Song, to hoot them away.

L. C. J. Did he make this explication to you?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who were the All?

Mr. Dugdale. King and Clergy-men, and all.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where was this that he explained it?

Mr. Dugdale. At London.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Is there any thing relating to White-hall? what Name did he give that?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes. he ſaid, Louſe-hall was White-hall, becauſe of its poverty.

Then the Ballad was read.

Cl. of Cr. Rary Shew. To the Tune of, I am a Senſeleſs Thing——

Mr. Att. Gen. This ſhews you what a ſort of Man he is.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Here you ſay he explained this with the Pack at the back to be the King?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he told me ſo.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did he mean by the two Faces?

Mr. Dugdale. That he was half a Proteſtant, and half a Papiſt.

Mr. Jones. Did he make any compariſon between his own Party and the King's Party?

Mr. Dugdale. He ſaid they were but a handful to them.

Mr. Jones. To whom?

Mr. Dugdale. To his Party, that was the Diſſenters.

Mr. Att. Gen. Speak that out.

Mr. Dugdale. That their Party was but a handful to theirs.

Mr. Att. Gen. Theirs and theirs, who did he mean?

Mr. Dugdale. He meant the Diſſenters, for the Church of England he reckoned among the Papiſts.

L. C. J. Tell us the words he ſaid.

Mr. Dugdale. He ſaid, his Party was the true Church of England, and that which is eſtabliſhed by Law, were but Proteſtants in Maſquerade.

Mr. Jones. Tell us when he made the compariſon, what words he did uſe, and upon what occaſion.

Mr. Dugdale. When he perceived the King at Oxford would not yield to the Houſe of Commons, he ſaid, Let him begin as ſoon as he would, he did not care how ſoon he did begin, for their Party, meaning the King and his Party, was but an handful to him and his Party, calling them the true Proteſtants, the others were Proteſtants in Maſquerade.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he deſire you to do? To be aſſiſting in any thing?

Mr. Dugdale. He always deſired me to be true of that ſide, he hoped I was, and to get good Arms for my ſelf.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did he in Oxford deſire this of you?

Mr. Dugdale. No, he did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what purpoſe did he deſire you to arm your ſelf?

Mr. Dugdale. He ſaid, the King had a deſign on the People to introduce Popery and Arbitrary Government, and he expected every day when they would begin, and the ſooner the better, he would be provided for them.

Mr. Jones. Was that in Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. He ſpoke it in Oxford, and in the City too.

Mr. Jones. Did he tell you of any that were liſted?

Mr. Dugdale. He ſpoke of Capt. Brown, and Capt. Clinton, and Don Lewes, and abundance more he ſaid he had.

Mr. Jones. Did he tell you he had them here?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, about forty of them were there he ſaid.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did he tell you of any that were liſted, in order to the coming down of the Parliament at Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. Not liſted, but were intended to come down; and at Oxford he told me they were come down.

Mr. J. Jones. Were you in their company in Oxford here?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes. I was.

Mr. J. Jones. In the company of whom? name them.

Mr. Dugdale. Of Capt. Brown, Don Lewes, and ſeveral others of that Gang; I know not their Names, but I know their Faces.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he take notice to you that they were come down.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. To what purpoſe.

Mr. Dugdale. He expected there would be a riſing in Oxford, and to this purpoſe; Mr. Colledge was one that debated it at Richard's Coffee-houſe, and it was to be carried from thence to the Kings-head Club, Whether it were not beſt to leave a Parliament Man in every County?

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this?

Mr. Dugdale. This was at Richard's Coffee-houſe in London, againſt they met here.

Mr. Att. Gen. We could give you an account of a volume of theſe things, abundance of ſcandalous Pamphlets, both Songs, Libels, and Ballads, that were made by this Gentleman, and all ſeized in his cuſtody.

Mr. J. Jones. But he ſung this Libel?

Mr. Att. Gen. All theſe, Gentlemen, (ſhewing a great bundle) were to be diſperſed over England.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It was it ſeems expounded and ſung by the Priſoner at the Bar; he gave you the Ballad here at Oxford, you ſay Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. No, I heard him ſing it here.

Mr. J. Jones. Pray, Mr. Dugdale, what was the uſe was to be made of this Ballad?

Mr. Att. Gen. Come go to the next, we call this Evidence to ſhew you the malice of the Man.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, let me ask ſome Queſtions of Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Ay, now let the Priſoner ask his Queſtions (to do him right) before we go to another Witneſs.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I have a word or two more about a Libel in Manuſcript, that very day the Sheriffs were to be choſen; it was to be printed, and he told me the Printer durſt not print it, it was ſo dangerous.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What was it, can you remember any part of it?

Mr. Dugdale. No, but it was the worſt I ever heard in my Life againſt the King and Government.

L. C. J. Now ask him what Queſtions you will.

Colledge. Pray, when was the firſt time you gave this Evidence?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly, Mr. Colledge, I don't keep an account of Time, I cannot give an account of Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. As near as you can, tell him.

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell whether it might be in June, I think it was.

Colledge. How long before I was taken?

Mr. Dugdale. It might be about the time you were taken.

Colledge. Pray, who did you give it before?

Mr. Dugdale. I gave it to Sir Lionel Jenkins.

Colledge. Where did you ſwear theſe things were done then?

Mr. Dugdale. What was done in the City, I ſwore to be done there.

Colledge. What City?

Mr. Dugdale. London; the ſame words were ſaid in the City of London, and over again here. I have repeated, for the moſt part, only the words you ſaid here, but more was in the City than here.

Colledge. Did you ſwear then, that the words you ſwear now were ſpoken at London?

Mr. Dugdale. It may be we might not name Oxford then.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He ſays well, it might not be named then.

Colledge. Then you did give in your Information, that I ſpoke theſe words at Oxford.

Mr. Dugdale. I was not examined about what was done at Oxford; but I believe I have heard you ſpeak the ſame words to me at my Lord Lovelace's, but I do not know what County that is in.

Colledge. I ask you poſitively, Whether you did not ſwear that what you now ſay was ſpoken at Oxford, was ſpoken at London.

Mr. Dugdale. I did not name Oxford then.

Colledge. But did not you ſay that was done at London, that now you ſay was done here?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly, you ſaid them both at London, and here.

Colledge. Pray, Mr. Dugdale, what had you to give this your Information?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly I can't ſay I have received the worth of a Groat.

Colledge. Nor was ever promiſed any thing?

Mr. Dugdale. No, I never received any thing, nor ever was promiſed, but only what the King gave me for going down into the Country for my Charges.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the ſame Allowance you had when you were Witneſs for the Popiſh Plot?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Have you any other Allowance than what you had before, when you gave Evidence at my Lord Stafford's Tryal?

Mr. Dugdale. No, nor have got all that yet neither.

Colledge. But pray obſerve my Queſtion, Mr. Dugdale, and anſwer it, Did you not ſwear at London that I ſpoke theſe words there, which now you ſay I ſpoke here?

L. C. J. Pray obſerve, he ſays he did not then name Oxford; but in the giving of his Evidence now, he tells you a ſeries of what paſſed between London and Oxford; and I muſt tell you further, if a Treaſon be committed, and the Evidence prove it to be in two Counties, the King may chuſe which County he will proſecute and bring his Indictment in, and give in Evidence the Facts in both Counties. But you ſhall have your Objection to it afterwards, and we will take it into conſideration. I tell you this, that it may not ſeem to you that the Witneſſes ſpeak impertinently of what was done at London; but if nothing was done or ſaid at Oxford, then it will be taken into conſideration, you ſhall have it ſaved afterwards, I only hint it now, that you may not think it impertinent.

Colledge. I beſeech your Lordſhip give me leave to ſpeak one word: When he made his Affidavit before Sir Lionel Jenkins there about ſeizing the King, about the Party I had, and the Arms I had provided, ought not he at the ſame time to have ſaid where I ſaid thoſe words to him? but he did ſwear then it was in London that I ſaid thoſe words to him; and coming before a Grand Jury of honeſt Gentlemen in London, they were ſo wiſe and honeſt as to do me Juſtice, and not find the Bill; ſo their deſign failing there, then they changed it to Oxford.

L. C. J. You did not come to your Trial there, if you had ſo done, then they would have asked him in particular what was ſaid at Oxford, and what at London, as 'tis now, being done in both Counties. But look you, if you will ask any particular Queſtions, do, for they have other Witneſſes to produce.

Colledge. My Lord, I only ask this Queſtion, Whether it be not rational to think, that when he ſwore before Sir Lionel Jenkins, he ſhould not ſwear the words were ſpoken, and things done?

Mr. Dugdale. He hath ſaid the ſame words to me at my Lord Lovelace's, as I lay in Bed with him, and this I never mention'd but now in my Evidence.

Colledge. What words did I ſay there?

Mr. Dugdale. If you muſt have them repeated, they were about the King.

Colledge. What were they?

Mr. Dugdale. That he was a Papiſt, and deſigned Arbitrary Government.

Colledge. Did I ſay ſo to you at my Lord Lovelace's?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, as we lay a-bed.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you lie together?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Yes, yes, they were Intimates.

Colledge. I had not ſix Words with you when you went to Bed, for you ſaid you were weary, and went aſleep preſently.

Mr. Dugdale. I ſay you ſaid this in the morning, for we had an hours Diſcourſe when we were a-bed, and all our Diſcourſe was about the Parliament and the King.

Colledge. Where was it I ſaid theſe Words in Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. At Comb's Coffee-Houſe was one place.

Colledge. Was there no Body by?

Mr. Dugdale. No, but at the Angel-Inn there were ſeveral Perſons ſtanding by?

Colledge. Surely then ſome of thoſe heard the Words as well as you.

Mr. Dugdale. It may be ſo, I am ſure many at London have been by, as Mr. Starkey by name, Mr. Boſon, Mr. Baldwin; they have rebuked you for it, and I have rebuked you too.

Colledge. What Words have they and you heard, and rebuked me for?

Mr. Dugdale. When you have been railing againſt the King, and ſaid, That the King deſigned nothing but the introducing of Popery and Arbitrary Government, and that he was a Papiſt.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He loves to hear it repeated.

Colledge. What Arms did you ſee of mine in this Town?

Mr. Dugdale. I ſaw Piſtols; you had a Caſe of Piſtols before you, and you had ſome Pocket Piſtols.

Colledge. None but one I borrowed of you, and that you had again; had I? (pray ſpeak) did you ſee any more?

Mr. Dugdale. It may be there might not, but there were Pocket Piſtols in the Room, and you had them in your hand.

Colledge. He ſwore but now that he ſaw me have Pocket Piſtols, when it was but one, and that was his own.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Hark you now, you talk of Piſtols, do you know that he had any Piſtols in his Holſters at Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he had.

Colledge. Yes, I know that, I don't deny it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I think a Chiſſel might have been more proper for a Joyner.

Colledge. You ſay I was confederated with Capt. Brown, and other Men.

Mr. Dugdale. You have told me that Capt. Brown had a good Allowance, and it was pity he had not a better Allowance; and you would ſpeak ſpeak he might have a better Allowance, for he was able to do good Service when the time came.

Coll. From whom?

Mr. Dugd. Among you.

Coll Among whom?

Mr. Dugdale. You know there were ſeveral Gatherings among you that I was privy to.

Coll. What do I know?

Mr. Soll. Gen. You know mony was gathered many times.

Coll. For what purpoſe?

Mr. Dugdale. You never told me particulars; it was to diſtribute ſomewhere, I had none of it.

L. C. J. He does not ſay theſe men were concerned with you, but you ſaid ſo.

Mr. Dugdale. You know, Mr. Colledge, there were many Gatherings of monys.

Coll. Did I tell you there were any Gatherings for Capt. Brown?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He ſays you told him no particulars; if you have a mind to ask him any more Queſtions, do.

Colledge. Pray, Sir George, don't interrupt me, I am here for my Life. Did I tell you there were any Gatherings for Capt. Brown?

Mr. Dugdale. I do not ſay for him, nor whom you diſtributed it to; but you gathered mony one among another, and you have paid mony.

Colledge. I have paid mony! when, and to whom?

Mr. Att. Gen. You will not deny that, you confeſſed, upon your Examination, that you gave a Guinea.

Colledge. Sir, did you ſee me any more at Oxford, than in the Coffee Houſe, and at that Inn, when I went out of Town, and was going home with the City Members?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Colledge. Were you in my Company any where, but in thoſe two places?

Mr. Dugdale. I was with you at the Chequer.

Coll. Did you come a purpoſe to ſpeak with me, or had you any buſineſs particularly with me?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly, Mr. Colledge, I have forgot whether I had or no, I was in the Room with you there.

Coll. Where is that Room?

Mr. Dugd. I can't tell all the Rooms in that Houſe.

Coll. Was it above ſtairs, or below?

Mr. Dug. Both above and below, two days I was there with you.

Coll. Was there any of this diſcourſe you ſpeak of paſſed there between us?

Mr. Dugd. I know I was with you in thoſe two places I mention'd before; you called me aſide to drink a Glaſs of Mum, and there was none in the Room but us two at that Coffee Houſe.

Coll. Sir, You came to Town but on Friday, I think it muſt be Saturday, Sunday, or Monday this was, for he ſtayed no longer in Oxford.

Mr. Dugd. Nay, I came to Oxford either Wedneſday night, or Thurſday morning; and I ſaw you and Mr. Hunt together the ſame day I came.

Coll. Did I explain any Pictures to you at London, or owned I was the Author of them.

Mr. Dugd. Yes, upon my Oath, you have explained Pictures to me, and there is one Picture that I have not ſhewed yet, which you have explained what the meaning was.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. 'Tis your common Trade it ſeems.

Mr. Dugd. You told me you got them done.

Clerk reads, A Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor, &c.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. How did he explain it to you, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I would ſee what Opinion he had of the Church of England; there are ſome Church-men, what are they a doing?

Mr. Dugd. They are a parcel of Tantivy-men riding to Rome; and here's the Duke of York, half Man, half Devil, trumpeting before them.

Coll. You have got ſome Body to explain theſe things to you, Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. You did it, upon my Oath.

Coll. Oh, fie upon you Mr. Dugdale, conſider what you ſay.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. All this you did explain it ſeems.

Mr. Dugd. And in one place of the other Libel the King was termed a Rogue, but they put him in by another Name.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where is it?

Mr. Dugd. 'Tis in Rary Shew; in the Manuſcript it was, Now, now the Rogue is down.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Let me ſee it, I took notice of it, 'tis, Now, now the Gyant is down, here.

Coll. I ask you, Sir, Whether the Song which you ſay was ſung at my Lord Lovelace's, and other places, was the ſame with this?

Mr. Dugd. For the general it is, I can't tell for every Word: You ſang it half a dozen times there, and the Muſick plaid to you.

Coll. I ask you whether it was the ſame with this?

Mr. Dugd. I can't tell for every Word you ſang.

Coll. Was there any Body by at my explaining of theſe Pictures?

Mr. Dugd. Mr. Baldwin was by, and reproved and corrected you, that you would be ſo open.

Coll. Was there any Body at Oxford, when you did hear me talk of Arming my ſelf?

Mr. Dugd. They were walking up and down in the Barber's Shop, and I know not whether they did hear or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that Gentleman ſworn at my Lord Stafford's Tryal, Mr. Dugdale?

Coll. Yes, I was ſworn there, I acknowledge it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ſwear any thing on your behalf, for your credit, Mr. Dugdale?

Coll. That was by hear ſay, Mr. Attorny, at the Tower, I know nothing of my own knowledge, but I did believe him another man than I find him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No queſtion, or elſe you would not have truſted him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Stevens. (Which was done.) Do you give my Lord, and the Jury, an account where you found this precious Ballad.

Stevens. The firſt draught I found in his Bedchamber.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What of all of them? Which is it?

Stevens. The Rary Shew; We found the firſt draught draught of it in his Houſe, when we came to ſearch his Papers, by Order of Council; and the Printer that printed the Ballad, hath told me ſince, he had it from him ——

Mr. Att. Gen. What ſay you your ſelf? ſpeak your own knowledge.

Stevens. And Mr. Atterbury was by when we ſearched the Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Mr. Atterbury will tell his own Story.

Stevens. I have ſeen you on Horſe back, with Holſters before you, with ſome hundreds of men of men after you, coming out of the Bell-ſavage Inn; they ſaid you were going to chuſe Parliament-men: I have known you three or four years, you were Joyner to our Hall.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We call you to that particular of the Papers, and you run in a ſtory of a Cock and a Bull, and I know not what.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Coll. No, only this; Do you ſwear, upon your Oath, that you found the Original in my Houſe?

Stevens. Yes, Sir, you will ſee it with my hand to it, and ſome more of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. And you found too thoſe that were printed?

Stevens. Yes, both our Names are to them that were concerned in the ſearching of them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You found the Paper in the Houſe?

Stevens. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That is Towzer; but have you the Original of the Rary Shew?

(It was look'd for, but could not be found.)

Coll. Pray, Gentlemen obſerve, he ſwears that is an Original.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, no, he found the Paper in your Houſe.

Coll. I ask about the Original of Rary Shew.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He ſays, he ſaw a Paper drawn with a Pencil that was like the Original.

Atterbury. There was an Original drawn with a Pencil, upon Dutch Paper, 'tis loſt ſince, for we do not ſee it here now which at the ſame time we found upon Colledge's Table in his Bed-Chamber.

Coll. Did you find an Original in my Chamber?

Atterbury. Yes, we found a Paper drawn with Black-lead.

Coll. Pray, where is it?

Atterbury. I did ſee it, it was drawn in Black-lead, it was upon Dutch Paper, and lay upon the Table in your Chamber.

Stevens. Sure I am, it was taken when we ſearched the Houſe.

Coll. I am ſure you could never find the Original of any ſuch thing in my Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then where is Mr. Sewell? (Who was ſworn.) Sir, did you ſee that Trumpery taken?

Sewell. I had a Warrant to ſeize Mr. Spur, and his Brother-in-Law, Mr. Colledge. So I went down to ſeize Mr. Spur, and ſearch his Houſe for ſuch Papers as I ſhould find. I could not find them in the Houſe; but I enquired of him, after I had ſearched, and could not find them where they were; becauſe I ſaw him at Mr. Colledge's when we firſt ſearched; he denyed them a pretty while, but at laſt he told me they were in the Hay-mow in the Barn. When I came there, he was bawling, and told me, his Wife, Colledge's Siſter had taken them down, and carried them into a Room where I had ſearched before, but could not find them; and the man was angry then, ſo we run after his Wife, and found her with all theſe Papers in a Bag.

Mr Att. Gen. Are theſe the ſame Papers?

Sewell. Yes; and there were two other Cuts; the man himſelf is about the place ſomewhere.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. John Smith.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Jones. Come Mr. Smith, do you know Mr. Colledge?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Give us an account what dealings you have had with him, where, and when; what he hath ſaid about the King; and tell us firſt whether you be intimately acquainted?

Mr. Smith. We were intimately acquainted. The firſt time I heard Mr. Colledge diſcourſing any thing of this nature, that is, concerning Treaſon, or any ſuch thing, was once at a Coffee houſe by Temple-Bar; there I met Colledge, and he told me he was invited to Dinner, and he likewiſe invited me to it. I ask'd him, who provided the Dinner; he told me it was one Alderman Wilcox; I told him I was a ſtranger, and did not care for going; he told me, I ſhould be very welcome there; and at laſt prevail'd upon me to go: And as I was going along, I ask'd him what the Alderman was; he told me, he was a man that was as true as ſteel, and a man that would endeavour to root out Popery: Said I, That may be done eaſily, if you can but prevail with the King to paſs the Bill againſt the Duke of York. No, no, ſaid he, you are miſtaken, for Rowley is as great a Papiſt as the Duke of York is, (now he call'd the King Rowley) and every way as dangerous to the Proteſtant Intereſt, as is too apparent by his Arbitrary ruling. This was the Diſcourſe between the Coffee-houſe and the Tavern where we went to dine. When we came in, I ask'd Colledge again whether the Alderman was there; he ſaid he was not there at that time: I ask'd him, the ſecond time, what kind of man he was; he ſaid, he was one that lived in his Country-houſe, and gave freely to ſeveral People to buy Arms and Ammunition: And I ask'd him to what purpoſe? and he ſaid, it was to bring the King to ſubmiſſion to his People: adding thereto, that he wonder'd Old Rowley did not conſider how eaſily his Father's Head came to the Block, which he doubted not would be the end of Rowley at the laſt. After this Diſcourſe, the Alderman came in; we dined, and every one went his own way about his own Buſineſs. Mr. Colledge then told me, if I would go with him to his own Houſe, I ſhould ſee how he was prepared with Arms and Proviſion. Soon after I met with him, and he deſired me to go along and dine with him; and I did ſo, and there he did ſhew me his Piſtols, his Blunderbuſs, and his great Sword; and he ſhew'd me his Armor, Back and Breaſt; and he ſhew'd me his Head-piece, which, if I am not miſtaken, was cover'd over with Camlet, it was a very fine thing; and, ſaid he, theſe are the things which will deſtroy the pitiful Guards of Rowley, that are kept up contrary to Law and Juſtice, to ſet up Arbitrary Power and Popery.

Coll. What did I ſay, Sir, about my Armor?

Mr. Smith. Thus you ſaid; it was to deſtroy Rowley's

Rowley's Guards, (thoſe were your words) that were kept up contrary to Law and Juſtice, to ſet up Arbitrary Power and Popery. After I had dined with him, I parted with him. A little before the Parliament was to meet at Oxford, I met him again; and we were diſcourſing of ſeveral things, what Preparations the City were making, how they were provided with Powder and Bullets, and for his part he would go down to Oxford, for he expected a little ſport there, upon the Diviſions that were like to be between the King and Parliament. Then ſaid I to him, Why, what is the matter there? Why, ſaid he, we expect that the King will ſeize upon ſome of the Members, and we are as ready as he: And, ſays he, for my part, I will be there, and be one that ſhall ſeize him if he ſecure any of the Members; (and I believe he did go down;) ſays he, you know how the City is provided: I told him, No, not ſo well as he; but he told me all was very well. After he came up again, I met him another time, and he told me, he went down in expectation of ſome ſport; but Old Rowley was afraid, like his Grandfather Jamy, and ſo ran away like to beſhit himſelf.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he ſay, if he had not ran away he would have ſeized him?

Mr. Smith. He ſaid nothing of that; but before, he ſaid, he would be one of them ſhould ſeize him, if he ſeized any of the Members. After this he told me, that Fitzgerald and he had had a Quarrel at the Parliament-Door of the Houſe of Lords at Oxford; that Fitzgerald had called him Rogue; and, ſaid he, Fitzgerald made my Noſe bleed; but before long, I hope to ſee a great deal more Blood ſhed for the Cauſe. After this again, when there was a diſcourſe of diſarming the City, that my Lord Feverſham was to come to do it, he told me, he was well provided, and if Feverſham, or any man, nay Rowley himſelf ſhould attempt any ſuch thing, he would be the death of him, before any man ſhould ſeize upon his Arms.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Did he diſcourſe any thing to you about Arms to provide yourſelf.

Mr. Smith. Yes, he did, I had an Armor from him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he ſay to you about it?

Mr Smith. He did deſire me to get me Arms, for I did not know how ſoon I might make uſe of them. I had an Armor from him upon trial; he ſaid it coſt him 30 or 40 s. I had it upon trial, but it was too big for me, ſo I gave it him back, and bought a new one.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he tell you to what purpoſe you ſhould arm yourſelf?

Mr. Smith. No, he did not name any purpoſe, but he told me, I did not know how ſoon I might make uſe of it.

Mr Att. Gen. What did he ſay to you about any one's ſeizing the King?

Mr Smith. He told me, the Parliament were agreed to ſecure the King, and that in order to it, all Parliament-men came very well armed, and accompanied with Arms and Men; and he told me of a great man that had notice from all the Gentlemen of England how well they came armed.

Mr J. Jones. What did he ſay of himſelf?

Mr Smith. He would be one that ſhould ſecure the King, if he ſeized any of the Members.

Mr Jones. When he had been there, what did he ſay?

Mr Smith. If they had had any work, he was ready provided for them.

Mr Att. Gen. But pray, tell us again what he ſaid of the King's running away?

Mr Smith. He ſaid, Rowley was afraid, like his Grandfather Jamy, and ran away ready to beſhit himſelf.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, Mr Attorny, let the Priſoner ask him what Queſtions he will.

Coll. Mr Smith, where was this Diſcourſe I had with you?

Mr Smith. Which do you mean, the former part or the latter?

Coll. The firſt Diſcourſe you talk of, what I told you going to Mr Wilcox's to dinner; and when it was?

Mr Smith. You know beſt when it was, I can't exactly remember the time; but you know 'tis true.

Coll. Where was it?

Mr Smith. As we went along thither we had the firſt part of it, and when we came thither, you and I talk'd till Alderman Wilcox came in; and you and I were alone together, and ſeveral Perſons that were there, were drawn into Cabals, two by two.

Coll. Where?

Mr Smith. In the Room where we dined; and you know there was a little Room by, where ſome were drinking a Glaſs of Wine.

Coll. You ſay, by two and two, the Company were drawn into Cabals.

Mr Smith. I tell you moſt of them were in Cabals, two and two together, only thoſe two Gentlemen that belong'd to the Alderman went up and down and gave Wine.

Coll. What Religion are you of?

Mr Smith. Is it for this man to ask me, my Lord, ſuch a Queſtion?

L. C. J. Yes, anſwer him.

Mr Smith. I am a Proteſtant.

Coll. You were a Prieſt?

Mr Smith. Yes, what then? and I am in Orders now.

Coll. That was from the Church of Rome.

Mr Smith. Yes, and that is a good Ordination; I came in voluntarily to diſcover the Popiſh Plot, and was no Penſioner, nor received any Sallary from the King. I have ſpent ſeveral Pounds, ſeveral ſcores of Pounds, but received no Recompence: And I was the Darling at one time all over the City, when I did adhere to what they would have me to do.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Did not you ſwear againſt my Lord Stafford?

Mr Att. Gen. Were not you a Witneſs, Mr Smith, at my Lord Stafford's Trial?

Mr Smith. In that Caſe I did give a general account of the deſign of the Papiſts; they did not then queſtion my Reputation, and I defie all the World to ſay any thing againſt it.

Coll. Pray hear me Sir, if you pleaſe; the firſt diſcourſe that you ſpeak of about Mr. Wilcox's being a good man for the Cauſe, and contributing mony, this was when we were at Dinner.

Mr Smith. This was that day when we went to dinner with him, you know it very well.

Coll. Where were the other diſcourſes I had with you?

Mr Smith. Which part of them?

Coll. When I came from Oxford.

Mr

Mr Smith. By the Ditch-ſide, by your own Houſe; I have two or three to prove it, we were an hour or two diſcourſing together about this Buſineſs.

Coll. What Buſineſs?

L. C. J. He tells you of two Diſcourſes, one before you went to Oxford, and one after you came from thence.

Coll. He does ſay, that I diſcourſed him about our coming down hither to Oxford, that the Parliament would ſecure the King, and that I would be one of them that ſhould ſeize him, and this was the time when we dined with Alderman Wilcox.

L. C. J. Not ſo, he ſays after that time, and before you went to Oxford, he had ſuch a diſcourſe with you.

Mr Smith. Yes my Lord, ſo it was.

Coll. And does he ſpeak of another time, when I ſhewed him the Back, Breaſt, and Arms?

Mr Smith. Yes.

Coll. But he ſaid, I diſcourſed then, that the City was provided with Arms, and that the Parliament were reſolved to bring the King to ſubmiſſion.

Mr Smith. When I was in the Houſe with him, he then ſaid Mr Wilcox gave mony to provide Arms: I ask'd for what? he ſaid, it was to bring the King to ſubmiſſion to his People; and then he added, he admired that Rowley did not remember how eaſily his Father's Head came to the Block; and he doubted not but that would be the end of him too.

L. C. J. He ſpake of ſeveral times you know.

Coll. I do not know one word of it, nor can diſtinguiſh the times: But, Mr Smith, the laſt diſcourſe you ſay about Oxford buſineſs, was by the Ditch-ſide.

Mr Serj. Jeff. The diſcourſe about bringing the King to ſubmiſſion, was in the way as you went to dinner.

Mr Smith. The laſt diſcourſe when you returned from Oxford, was by the Ditch-ſide; but both before and after you ſpake to me at that place about this deſign of bringing the King to ſubmiſſion.

Coll. You ſaid it was at Wilcox's at Dinner.

Mr Serj. Jeff. You miſtook him then.

Coll. Nay, Sir George, you took him not right.

Mr Serj. Jeff. I have taken him right I aſſure you, and you ſhall ſee it by and by.

Coll. He is the falſeſt man that ever ſpoke with a tongue.

Mr Att. Gen. Swear Bryan Haynes. (Which was done.) Tell my Lord, and the Jury, whether you know this Gentleman, what converſe you had with him, and what diſcourſe he hath had with you. Apply yourſelf to Mr Colledge's Buſineſs only.

Haynes. I ſuppoſe he will not deny but that he knows me very well; I have been acquainted with him ever ſince March laſt, before the ſitting of the Parliament at Oxford. My Lord, there was a Warrant againſt me for High Treaſon, and I made my application to Mr Colledge, and deſired him to go to a Perſon of Honor in England, and ask his advice, Whether I might ſuperſede the Warrant by putting in Bail, and carry the Superſedeas in my Pocket: Mr Colledge told me he would go to this Perſon of Honor, for he would do nothing of his own head; and he bid me come to him the next day. My Lord, I came to Mr Colledge the very next day, and I met him at his Houſe, and I ask'd him what was the reſult, and what advice he had from that Perſon of Quality: He bid me be of good chear, that the Parliament would be, and ſit at Oxford ſoon; that I ſhould not value the King a pin; for, ſaid he, the King is in a worſe condition than you or I; for you ſhall ſee, ſaid he, he ſhall be called to an account for all his Actions.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Who ſhould?

Haynes. The King; for all the World may ſee, ſays he, that he does reſolve to bring in Arbitrary Power, and Popery: And, ſaid he, unleſs he will let the Parliament ſit at Oxford, ſince he hath called them together, and put the People to charges in chuſing of them, and them in coming down, we will ſeize him at Oxford, and bring him to the Block, as we did the Logger-head his Father: The Parliament ſhall ſit at Guild-hall, and adjuſt the Grievances of the Subject, and of the Nation: And you ſhall ſee, ſaid he, that no King of his Race ſhall ever reign in England after him.

L. C. J. Where was this he ſaid ſo?

Haynes. At his own Houſe I met him; and he and I did walk all along from his own Houſe, over the Bridge that is againſt Bridewell, and ſo went all along till we came to the Hercules Pillars, and we had ſome diſcourſe there; we went up one pair of ſtairs and called for ſome Beef; and all this diſcourſe was in that very place of the Hercules Pillars.

Mr Serj. Holloway. Do you know any thing of any Arms he had, and for what?

Haynes. But Sir, ſaid I to Mr Colledge, how can this be done, 'tis a thing impoſſible: You pretend, you ſay, to the Duke of Monmouth, that he is a fine Prince, and ſtands up for the Proteſtant Intereſt. Alas, ſaid he, we make an Idol of him to adumbrate our Actions, for fear we ſhould be diſcovered: Do you think the wiſe People of England ſhall ever make a Baſtard upon Record King of England? No, ſaid he, for tho' we praiſe his Actions, yet we cannot endure him, becauſe he is againſt his own Father. But, ſaid he, further, unleſs the King do expel from his Council the Earl of Clarendon, cunning Lory Hide, the Earl of Hallifax, that great Turn-coat Rogue, that was before ſo much againſt the Papiſts, a Raſcal, we ſhall ſee him hang'd, and all the Tory Counſellors; except the King do it, we will make England too hot for him.

Coll. Who did I ſay this to? to you?

Haynes. Yes, to me.

Coll. Pray, how could this be poſſible?

Haynes. Yes, you knew my condition; and I intimated to you at that time, that I was as much for Treaſon and Villany as you: But then ſaid I to him, how can this be done? Here you have neither Officers, nor Men of Experience, nor Men of Knowledge; nor you have no Ammunition, Sea-port Towns, nor Ships. And beſides, the King, ſaid I, hath a great Party in the Land, and the Duke of York likewiſe; and for all the men of Eſtates, and the ancient Gentlemen, they will not be diſturbed, and quit their Eaſe for a Civil War. Oh, ſays he, you are miſtaken, for we have in the City 1500 Barrels of Powder, and we have 100000 men ready at an hour's Warning; and we have ordered every thing in a due method againſt the ſitting of the Parliament at Oxford; and you ſhall ſee England the moſt glorious Nation in the World, when we have cut off that beaſtly fellow Rowley; and ſpeaking of the King, he ſaid, he came of the Race of Buggerers, for his Grandfather King James buggered the old Duke of Buckingham; and he called him Captain, and ſometimes the King, and ſometimes Rowley.

of

Mr Serj. Jeff. This was pure Proteſtant diſcourſe upon my World.

Haynes. Then he railed at Judge Pemberton; and, ſaid he, let him try Fitzharris if he dare; I ſhall ſee him go to Tyburn for it, I hope, a Turncoat Rogue; He was for the Plot whilſt he was puiſne Judge, but now he is Chief Juſtice, he is the greateſt Rogue in the World. He is like one of the Penſioners in the Long Parliament. So one day I went along with Mrs Fitzharris, and Mr Ivy, and he ſent a man to me, and deſired me to come to the Hog in Armor; thither we came, and met him, and went to his Lodgings, and there we dined. Then they made ſome Perſons of Honor believe, that I was a Perſon ſo and ſo qualified, and was brimful of the Plot; and he would put me upon charging the King with the firing of London, and the murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and, ſaid he, ſuch and ſuch Lords ſhall live and die by you; and beſides, ſaid he, you need not fear, England ſhall eſpouſe your Cauſe. But, ſaid I, the Law is like a Spider's Web, that catches the little Flies, but the great Flies run thro' the Net, and make their eſcape; ſo 'tis with theſe Lords, they put you and me on the danger of acting; and when they get off by intereſt, a Jury of 12 men will hang us by the Neck, and ſo I ſhould periſh, whilſt others triumphed, and only be a Martyr for the Fanaticks. So in diſcourſe we were talking of the Libel of Fitzharris; The Devil take me, ſaid he, every individual Word is as true as God is in Heaven; and, ſaid he, if you do not joyn with Fitzharris in his Evidence, and charge the King home, you are the baſeſt fellow in the World, for he makes you ſlaves and beggars, and would make all the World ſo; and 'tis a kind of charity to charge him home, that we may be rid of ſuch a Tyrant.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr Colledge, if you will ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Coll. Certainly, my Lord, the thing ſpeaks it; he is not to be talk'd withal; Is it probable I ſhould talk to an Iriſhman that does not underſtand Senſe?

Haynes. 'Tis better to be an honeſt Iriſhman, than an Engliſh Rogue.

Mr Serj. Jeff. He does it but to put you in a heat, don't be paſſionate with him.

Haynes. No I am not, I thank God, he hath not put me into an heat.

Coll. Where was this diſcourſe about ſuperſeding your Warrant?

Haynes. At London.

Coll. When?

Haynes. It was before the Parliament ſat at Oxon.

Coll. How long?

Haynes. I can't tell poſitively to an hour or a day.

Coll. What month as near as you can?

Haynes It was in the month of March.

Coll. Had you ever ſeen me before?

Haynes. Can you deny that?

Coll. I ask you whether you have or no?

Haynes. Yes, I have ſeen you in the Coffee-houſes bawling againſt the Government.

Lord Ch. Juſt. Were you an intimate Acquaintance of his before March laſt?

Haynes. No intimate Acquaintance.

Coll. Then this is the firſt time you diſcourſed with me.

Haynes. Oh, no my Lord. One and I fell out at the Queens-Head Tavern at Temple-Bar, and he ſet me upon the buſineſs, and John Macnamarra and others, and truly I did the buſineſs for him: For we fell out and did box, and our Swords were taken from us, and I went to John Macnamarra and told him, Yonder is ſuch a man at ſuch a place, now you may ſeize upon him.

Coll. What man was that?

Haynes. One Richard Ponre.

Coll. He belonged to my Lord Tyrone I think, there were Warrants to take him. Do you ſay I ſet you upon that?

Haynes. Yes, you were with me the Night before, and Capt. Browne, and they gave us a Signal, a Blew Ribband to diſtinguiſh that we were Proteſtants from the Biſhops men.

L. C. Juſt. When were you to make uſe of it?

Haynes. When the King was ſeized.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Well, go on, have you any more?

Haynes. But, my Lord further, after he came from Oxon I met him; and ſaid I, Where are now all your Cracks and Brags? now you ſee the King hath made a Fool of you; now you know not what you would have done. Says he, What would you have us to do? We have not done with him yet; for, ſaid he, no Servant, no man living did know whether he would diſſolve the Parliament that day. I was that very nick of time at the Lords Houſe, and there was a man came in with a Gown under his Arm, and every one look'd upon him to be a Taylor, and no body did ſuſpect, no not his intimateſt Friends, except it were Fitzgerald, that he would diſſolve the Parliament that day; but preſently he puts on his Robes, and ſends away for the Houſe of Commons; and when he had diſſolved them, before ever the Houſe could get down, he took Coach and went away, otherwiſe the Parliament had been too hard for him; for there was never a Parliament-man but had divers armed men to wait on him, and I had my Blunderbuſs and my man to wait upon me. But well, ſaid he, there is a God above will rule all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Turberville.

Coll. Hold Sir, I deſire to ask him ſome Queſtions. You ſay the firſt time that I ſaw you, you had this diſcourſe with me?

Haynes. Do not uſe Tautologies; 'tis not the firſt time I have been examined, I know how to ſpeak as well as you.

Coll. Anſwer my Queſtion, Sir.

Haynes. You know it was after I had made Affidavit before the Recorder of London, a Copy of which was carried to that Nobleman; and you came from him and returned me his Thanks, and told me it was the beſt Service I could do him. I would not trouble the Court with circumſtantial things; and you told me I ſhould be gratified not only in my own Property, but a Reward for me and my Heirs for ever.

Mr Att. Gen. For what?

Haynes. I made Affidavit before the Recorder of London.

Coll. About what?

Haynes. Concerning one Fitzgerald.

Mr Att. Gen. Is it to this matter?

Haynes. No, nothing at all.

L. C. J. Let him ask any Queſtions what he will.

Coll. I ask when it was the firſt time you were acquainted with me ſo much as to know me well?

Haynes. As to the firſt time of intimacy, here is Macnamarra will take his corporal Oath that I was as well acquainted with him as any one in the World.

Coll. Pray anſwer me, Sir, when was the firſt time I talk'd to you?

Haynse. The firſt intimate acquaintance we had, was when you put me upon the deſign about Fitzgerald.

Coll. Pray Sir, you go too faſt already, as you are ſtill galloping; Where was this diſcourſe about his Majeſty?

Haynes. I told you before.

Coll. What was it?

Haynes. I went to you after the Affidavit was made, and told you there was a Warrant out after me, and deſired you to go to that Nobleman and deſire his Advice what I might do, or whether I might ſuperſede the Warrant. You told me you could do nothing without advice, and you would go and adviſe with that Nobleman.

Coll. My Lord, here is Mr Turbervile come in, they will over-hear one another; pray let me have fair play for my Life.

(Whereupon Turbervile withdrew.)

L. C. J. Can't you anſwer him? When was the firſt time you came acquainted with him?

Mr Serj. Jeff. When was the firſt diſcourſe you had with him?

Haynes. In April laſt.

Coll. You ſay it was before the ſitting of the Parliament, and that was in March?

Haynes. I meant in March.

Coll. So indeed you ſaid at firſt.

Mr Serj. Jeff. He never did ſay the day of the month, nor the month neither.

Mr Jones. How long was it before the ſitting of the Parliament?

Haynes. Mr Jones, truly I do not remember preciſely how long it was before the ſitting of the Parliament, but I am ſure it was before.

Mr Serj. Jeff. I did take it that he ſaid it was before the ſitting of the Parliament, and now he ſays in the month of March. Pray when he talk'd to you, did not he tell you of the ſitting of the Parliament, and that they would ſtand by you?

Coll. He hath ſaid it already, you need not direct him, Sir George, he goes faſt enough. But you ſay Sir, the firſt time I ever was acquainted with you was in March, then Gentlemen conſider whether it be probable that at that time I ſhould diſcourſe to him after this manner.

L. C. J. No, I will tell you what he ſays; he ſaid the firſt time he was intimately acquainted with you, was in March; he ſaid he had before ſeen you in Coffee-houſes, and he is ſure it was before the ſitting of the Parliament; for he tells you the diſcourſe you had, and by that diſcourſe it appears, it related to a Parliament that was afterwards to ſit. And then to give you a more particular Circumſtance, he ſays, that you put him upon the making of the Affidavit about Fitzgerald, and ſo you came acquainted.

Haynes. Ask Mr Attorny. My Lord, that day he was taken and carried to White-hall before the Secretary of State, he ſaid, I do not know who it ſhould be that ſhould accuſe me, I believe it is Ivy; as for Haynes, he was taken t'other day, he was an honeſt man.

Coll. You ſay I deſired you to make an Affidavit; Was it after that or before I had that diſcourſe with you?

Haynes. It was after: For I came and deſired you to go to ſuch a Perſon of Quality, and you went to him and adviſed with him; and then the next morning ſuch diſcourſe as I told your Lordſhip and the whole Court of, he told me.

Coll. Did I ſpeak theſe Treaſonable Words after the Affidavit made?

Haynes. You ſaid I muſt make ſuch an Affidavit concerning Fitzgerald.

Coll. But was this Treaſonable Diſcourſe before you made the Affidavit, or after?

Haynes. After the Affidavit made, you told me this: When I came to his Houſe, and from thence we went to the Hercules Pillars.

Mr Sol. Gen. Will you ask him any more Queſtions, Mr Colledge?

Coll. Did you ever ſpeak with me in your Life before Macnamarra did call me out of the Coffee-houſe to go along with you, where you would diſcover a deſign againſt my Lord Shaftsbury's Life?

Haynes. I told you I never had any intimate acquaintance with you in my Life before, nor did I ever ſpeak with you before.

Coll. When was that diſcourſe, I ask you once again?

Haynes. After the Affidavit made.

Coll. That Night?

Haynes. Within a Week or thereabouts after the Affidavit made.

Mr Att. Gen. Call Mr. Edward Turbervile. But Mr Haynes, I would ask you one Queſtion, Did he deliver you any Ribband as a mark of diſtinction?

Haynes. Yes, here it is. (And it was ſhew'd to the Court.)

Then Mr Turbervile was ſworn.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Pray Mr Turbervile will you tell my Lord and the Jury what diſcourſe you had with Mr Colledge, and where, and when?

Mr Turbervile. When the Parliament ſat in Oxon, about the middle of the Week, I can't be poſitive in the day, but I think it was in the middle of the Week, I dined with Mr. Colledge, Capt. Brown and Don Lewes Clerk of Derby-Houſe at the Chequer-Inn. After Dinner Don Lewes went out about ſome buſineſs, and Capt. Brown went to ſleep; Mr Colledge and I fell to talking of the Times, and I was obſerving, I thought the Parliament was not a long-lived Parliament. Said he, There is no good to be expected from the King; for he and all his Family are Papiſts, and have ever been ſuch, you know it, Sir.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Nay don't appeal to him.

Mr Turb. Said I, The King will offer ſomething or other by way of Surprize to the Parliament. Said he, I would he would begin; but if he do not, we will begin with him and ſeize him; for there are ſeveral brave Fellows about this Town, that will ſecure him till we have thoſe Terms that we expect from him.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Mr Turb. At the Chequer-Inn.

L. C. J. What ſaid he further?

Mr Turb. He ſaid he had got a Caſe of Piſtols, and a very good Sword, and a Velvet Cap; and I can't be poſitive he had Armor on, but I believe he had.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he tell you he came down for that purpoſe to ſeize the King?

Mr Turb. Yes, and he gave me a piece of Blew Ribband to put in my Hat, he had a great Quantity of it.

Mr

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that for?

Mr Turb. To be a diſtinction if there ſhould be any diſturbance when the thing ſhould be done.

Coll. What thing done?

Mr Turb. I knew nothing but of your telling me of it.

Coll. Where was this?

Mr Turb. At the Chequer-Inn in Oxon, Mr Colledge. You talk much and can't remember all you ſay.

Mr Att. Gen. What did he diſcourſe to you about Arms and an Horſe?

Mr Turb. I told him I had never an Horſe, and nothing but a Caſe of Piſtols; he bid me I ſhould not trouble myſelf, for he would get me an Horſe.

Coll. What to do?

Mr Turb. To carry on your deſign, I know not what it was, but by your Words.

Mr Att. Gen. Tell what he ſaid of it at the Chequer-Inn.

Mr Turb. He ſaid there was a deſign to ſeize the King.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he deſire you to be one of them?

Mr Turb. He did deſire me to be ready to aſſiſt.

Mr Jones. And how much of that Ribband had he, pray?

Mr Turb. A very great quantity, 40 or 50 Yards.

Mr Sol. Gen. Pray Mr Turbervile will you give your Evidence over again, and let Mr Colledge attend to it.

Mr Turb. When the Parliament ſat at Oxon, about the middle of the Week, I cannot be poſitive to a day, I believe it was either Wedneſday or Thurſday, I dined with Mr Colledge, Capt. Brown, and Don Lewes, who was formerly Clerk of Derby-houſe. Don Lewes after Dinner went out, and Capt. Brown laid down on the Bed, and Mr Colledge and I fell a talking of the Times, and I told him, I thought this Parliament would be no long-lived Parliament. Upon which Colledge told me the King and all his Family were Papiſts, and there was no good to be expected from him. Then I replied, The King would perhaps ſurprize the Parliament, or uſe ſome Stratagem to bring them to his Terms. Said Mr Colledge again, I would he would begin; but if he do not, we will ſecure him till he comes to thoſe Terms we would have from him; for here are ſeveral brave Fellows, and many more are coming down that will joyn with it.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he name any one?

Mr Turb. No indeed, he did not; he himſelf had a Caſe of Piſtols, a Sword, and I believe he might have his Armor on.

Coll. Did I diſcourſe who were to joyn with me?

Mr Turb. No, Mr Colledge, you did not name any body to me, but Capt. Brown was with you.

Mr Att. Gen. Were you examined in my Lord Stafford's Tryal?

Mr Turb. Yes, I was.

Mr Att. Gen. Was this Gentleman ſworn to your Reputation there?

Mr Turb No, not to mine.

Coll. Pray how came we to talk of ſuch things? What occaſion was there that I ſhould talk Treaſon of the King to you? Was there any body beſides us two there?

Mr Turb. No, Capt. Brown was gone to ſleep, and Lewes was gone out.

Mr Att. Gen. It was not at Dinner that you talk'd ſo, Mr Colledge, he ſays.

Coll. Had they been at Dinner with us there?

Mr Turb. Yes, and we had a Leg of boil'd Mutton to Dinner.

Coll. Did you ſtay after Dinner?

Mr Turb. Yes, and I lay with you afterwards upon the Bed.

Coll. I thought you had ſaid Capt. Brown went to ſleep there.

Mr Turb. Yes, but he was gone too, when we laid down together.

Coll. God forgive you, I can ſay no more, I never ſpoke one Word of any ſuch diſcourſe in my Life.

Mr Att. Gen. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Coll. Mr Turbervile, when did you give in this Information againſt me?

Mr Turb I gave it to the Grand Jury.

Coll. Not before?

Mr Turb. Yes, I did.

Coll. When was it?

Mr Turb. Truly I can't well tell, I believe it was a day or two before I came to Oxon.

Coll Why did you make it then, and not before?

Mr Turb. I'll tell you the occaſion. Mr Dugdale told me the Grand Jury of London would not find the Bill: I did admire at it extreamly; for I thought every one that converſed with him might be an Evidence againſt him; he was always ſo very laviſh againſt the King and the Government. So then Colonel Warcup came to me and took my Depoſitions, and then I came for Oxford.

Coll. What was the reaſon you did not diſcover this Treaſon before?

Mr Turb. There was no reaſon for it, it was not neceſſary.

Coll. You were not agreed then.

Mr Turb. There was no agreement in the caſe, there needs nothing of that I think; but I am not obliged to give you an account of it.

Coll. God forgive you Mr Turbervile.

Mr Turb. And you too, Mr Colledge.

Mr Att. Gen. Then call Sir William Jennings.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Mr Attorny, if you pleaſe, till he comes, I will acquaint my Lord here is a Gentleman that hath not yet been taken notice of, one Mr Maſters, that is pretty well known to Mr Colledge; now he is a man, he muſt acknowledge, of an undoubted Reputation, and I deſire he may give your Lordſhip and the Jury an account what he knows of the Priſoner; becauſe he is ſo curious for Engliſh men, we have brought him an Engliſh man of a very good Repute.

Coll. My Lord, I am charged with Treaſon in this Indictment; here are a great many things made uſe of that ſerve only to amuſe the Jury, I can conjecture nothing elſe they are brought for; I deſire to know whether the Pictures produced are part of the Treaſon.

L. C. J. Stay till the Evidence is given, and we will hear what you can ſay at large when you come to ſum up your Defence.

Mr Serj. Jeff Pray, my Lord, will you be pleaſed to hear this Gentleman: He will tell you what diſcourſe he hath had with the Priſoner at the Bar.

Then Mr Maſters was ſworn.

Mr Maſters. Mr Colledge and I have been acquainted for a great many Years; and we have often diſcourſed. I have told him of his being ſo violent as he hath been ſeveral times. But a little before the Parliament at Oxon, about Chriſtmaſs laſt; laſt, after the Parliament at Weſtminſter, at Mr. Charlton's Shop the Woollen-Draper in Paul's Church-Yard, we were diſcourſing together about the Government, and he was juſtifying of the late long Parliaments Actions in 40; and he ſaid, That Parliament was as good a Parliament as ever was choſen in the Nation. Said I, I wonder how you have the Impudence to juſtify their Proceedings that raiſed the Rebellion againſt the King, and cut off his head. Said he, They did nothing but what they had juſt Cauſe for, and the Parliament that ſate laſt at Weſtminſter was of their Opinion, and ſo you would have ſeen it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he ſay of the Parliament ſince?

Mr. Maſters. He ſaid the Parliament that ſate laſt at Weſtminſter was of the ſame Opinion that that Parliament was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray afterwards what diſcourſe had you about his Colonelſhip?

Mr. Maſters. We were talking at Guild hall that day the Common-Council was, the 13th of May as near as I remember, ſo I came to him, How now Colonel Colledge, ſaid I, what do you make this buſtle for? You miſtook me and ſaid, Cozen, how long have you and I been Cozens? Nay, prithee, ſaid I, 'tis not yet come to that, to own Kindred between us, I only called you Colonel in jeſt. Marry, mock not, ſaid he, I may be one in a little time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Have you any thing to ask Mr. Maſters? you know he is your old acquaintance, you know him well.

(Then Sir William Jennings was ſworn.)

Mr. Jones. What is it that you know concerning Mr. Colledge at Oxford, Sir?

Sir W. Jennings. My Lord, the firſt time that I heard any thing of Mr. Colledge was, there was ſome Company looking upon a Picture, for I knew him not, nor never had any Word of diſcourſe with him in my Life, any more than ſeeing him in a publick Coffee-houſe. But there was a Picture looking on by 7 or 8 or 10 People, I believe more or leſs, and I coming and crowding in my head amongſt the reſt, look'd upon this Picture. After the Crowd was over, Mr. Colledge takes a Picture out of his Pocket, and, ſaid he, I will give you one of them if you will. So he gives me a Picture; which Picture if I could ſee, I could tell what it was; it was written Mac a Top, and there were ſeveral Figures in it.

(Then the Picture was ſhewed him.)

This is one of the ſame that I had of him, and I had not had it long in my Cuſtody, but meeting with Juſtice Warcup, I ſhew'd it him, who bid me give it him, and ſo I did. The next thing that I did ſee Mr. Colledge do, was in the Coffee-houſe, not the ſame day, but another time. I ſaw him bring in a parcel of blew Ribband which was wrought, and theſe Words eight times wrought in it, twice wrought in every Quarter of a Yard, No Popery, No Slavery. I ſaw him ſell to a Member of Parliament, as I took him to be, a Yard of that Ribband for 2s. and truly I was thinking he would ask me to buy ſome too, and I ſaw that Gentleman (I took him to be a Parliament man) take this Ribband and tie it upon his Sword. As to the other thing I have to ſay of Mr. Colledge; that very day the Parliament was diſſolved, he had been in a Quarrel, as he told me, with Mr. Fitzgerald; and I was ſtanding in the School-houſe Yard, and he comes directly to me without my ſpeaking to him or any thing; but he comes and tells me Mr. Fitzgerald had ſpit in his face; and, ſaid he, I ſpit in his face again, ſo we went to Loggerheads together, I think that was the Word, or fifty cuffs. So, ſaid I, Mr. Colledge your Noſe bleeds; he takes his handkerchief out of his Pocket and wipes his Noſe, and ſaid, I have loſt the firſt blood in the Cauſe, but it will not be long before more be loſt.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Sir W. Jennings. In the School-houſe Yard at Oxon. I never diſcourſed with him afterwards till I met him at London in Fleet-ſtreet one Sunday in the Afternoon, and I remember Captain Creſcett was along with me. And when he came up to me, How now, ſaid I, honeſt Joyner? Says he, You call me honeſt Joyner, ſome call me Rogue and Raſcal, and I have been beating ſome of them; ſo that I believe they will be aware of it. So I told Captain Creſcett, I never met this man but he was always in a Quarrel.

Coll. Was it on a Sunday that I told you I had been beating of ſome body?

Sir W. Jennings. You told me ſo, Capt. Creſcett was by.

Coll. I do remember I met you, but I did not tell you I had been then beating any one. But pray, Sir William, when I met you after the Parliament was diſſolved, and Fitzgerald and I had quarrell'd, did I ſay, That I had loſt the firſt blood in the Cauſe, but it would not be long e'er more were loſt? Sir William, you are a Gentleman, as for the other men, they don't care what they ſay, nor do I ſo much regard them, but you value your Word and Honor: Theſe were my Words, and pray will you recollect yourſelf before you be poſitive in the thing, whether I did not ſay, I have loſt the firſt blood for the Parliament, (for it was upon my vindicating of the Commons and Dr. Oates, whom Fitzgerald had abuſed, and upon that the Quarrel began; ſo I ſaid when you met me, and told me my Noſe bled, I have loſt the firſt blood for the Parliament) I wiſh it may be the laſt.

Sir Will. Jennings. Mr. Colledge, If you pleaſe I will anſwer you as to that, I do aſſure you 'tis the firſt time that ever I came upon this occaſion in my days, and I have declared it before, and do declare it now, I would rather have ſerved the King in three Ingagements, than come in againſt you or any man upon ſuch an occaſion. But I declare to you upon the whole memory of the truth, the Words were as I ſpoke them at firſt, and no Parliament named or mentioned. And, my Lord, moreover, I will tell you, When I did tell this ſtory, becauſe Mr. Creſcett that is able to tell you whether I did not relate the Words within half an hour, or a little time after. Now I never had a prejudice againſt you in my days, nor other Concern, but having told Mr. Juſtice Warcup this ſtory, I am brought hither to teſtify it.

Colledge. Sir William, I am very ſorry you did not obſerve and remember my Words then.

Sir Will. Jennings. I muſt needs ſay, I could not imagine what the Words meant when they were ſpoken, nor do I underſtand them to this day; but ſoon after they were ſpoken, I related them to Juſtice Warcup, he being a Juſtice of Peace.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Gentlemen, we ſhall reſt here, and conclude our Evidence for the King at preſent, to hear what the Priſoner ſays to it, only with my Lords leave, I ſhall explain the Words Words to you that are in the Indictment, and tell you what is meant by compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. The ſeizing the Perſon of the King is in Law a compaſſing and intending his Death; and ſo it hath been adjudged in ſeveral caſes, as in 1 Jacobi, my Lord Cobham, and my Lord Grey's caſe, and ſeveral other caſes, and ſo you may fully apprehend what the Charge is, and may underſtand the Words in the Indictment, That if you are not ſatisfied with the general Words of compaſſing the King's Dearh, you may know, that the ſeizing his Perſon extends to it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord. we have done with our Evidence, now let him go on with his.

L C. J. Now, Mr Colledge, you may ſay what you will for your Defence, and call your Witneſſes that you have to produce.

Colledge. My Lord, I have heard the Evidence that is againſt me, and I would deſire your Lordſhip to reſolve me ſome Queſtions upon it. I think the Indictment is for Treaſonable Practices, for a Conſpiracy; now I deſire your Lordſhip will be pleaſed that I may know from you and the Court, whether in all this Evidence given in proof againſt me, a Conſpiracy is proved; or if any thing appears beſides what they ſay I ſaid.

L C. J. For a Conſpiracy in you, if the Witneſſes ſpeak Truth, there is a plain proof, and of the degrees of it: Firſt of all, by your publiſhing Libels, and Pictures to make the King odious and contemptible in the Eyes of the People, and that you ſhould be the Author of ſome of thoſe Pictures, and they were found in your Cuſtody.

Coll. I conceive that is not proved.

L. C. J. If the Witneſſes ſay true, it is proved.

Coll. They do not produce that, they do but ſay it.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale ſwears, That at Oxford here, you ſhew'd him the Picture, you ſung the Song here, and expounded it at my Lord Lovelace's, and a great many of them are found in your Cuſtody. Then that you prepared Arms, that you ſhew'd Smith the Arms in your Houſe, and having thoſe Arms, you ſaid, you would go to Oxford, and if there ſhould be a Diſturbance there, you would ſecure the King. And you did come to Oxford, where you hear what is ſaid; for I obſerve, Stephen Dugdale and Edward Turbervile ſpeak of what was done at Oxford. John Smith and Bryan Haynes ſpeak of what you ſaid at London before you went to Oxford, and after you came from Oxford. Now I ſay, if theſe Witneſſes ſpeak true, 'tis a ſtrong Evidence againſt you, both upon the Statute of the 25th of Edw. the 3d. and that of this King too. For my Brother Holloway told you true, That whereas the imagining the Death of the King is High Treaſon, by the 25th of Edw. the 3d. ſo a ſeizing of the King, and endeavour to do that, is a conſtructive Intention of the Death of the King; for Kings are never Priſoners, but in order to their Death. And therefore it hath been held in all times, that by the Statute of Edw. the 3d that was Treaſon; but then the Statute of this King, in the 13th Year of his Reign, is more ſtrong; for there it ſays, If any Man ſhall by any Words, or malicious ſpeaking ſhew the imagination of his Heart, that he hath any ſuch intention, that is Treaſon too.

Coll. My Lord, the Foundation of this Indictment is ſaid to be laid here in Oxford, as I ſuppoſe; pray, my Lord, here is only Mr. Dugdale and Turberville that ſwear againſt me for what I ſhould ſay in Oxon, all the reſt ſpeak to things ſaid and done at London. Now, my Lord, I deſire to know whether they have proved any Treaſonable Practices, Conſpiracy or Deſign in me againſt the Government, I would fain know that, whether there be matter here to ground an Indictment upon; for the one ſays in one place, the other in the other, which may be diſtinct matters, and none of them ſwear Facts againſt me, but only Words.

Mr. J. Jones. Yes, providing Arms for your ſelf, and offering others Arms.

Colledge. That I ſhall make this Anſwer to, I had only a Caſe of Piſtols and a Sword, which every Footman and Horſeman had, that came from London, I think. But further, my Lord, I would ask your Lordſhip whether there ought not to be two Witneſſes diſtinct, to ſwear Words at one and the ſame time.

Mr. J. Jones. No, no, the Reſolution of the Judges in my Lord Stafford's caſe is quite contrary.

L. C. J. Look you, it hath been often Reſolved, That if there be one Witneſs that proves one Fact which is an Evidence of Treaſon; and another proves another Fact, which is an Evidence of the ſame Treaſon, tho' they be but ſingle Witneſſes to ſeveral Facts, yet they are two Witneſſes to an Indictment of Treaſon, that hath been often publickly Reſolved, particularly in the caſe of my Lord Stafford, mentioned by my Brother. And I'll tell you my Opinion further, If there be one Witneſs that proves here what you ſaid at Oxford, and another that proves what was ſaid in London, if they be in order to the ſame Treaſon, it is ſufficient; for if you do conſpire to commit ſuch a Treaſon in London, and you come with ſuch an imagination in your Heart to Oxford to compleat this Treaſon, tho' your Deſign was not firſt formed here, I think 'tis enough to maintain an Indictment of Treaſon, and they are two good Witneſſes, tho' but one ſpeak to what was done at Oxford; but I muſt tell you, in your caſe, there are two full Witneſſes, to that which was done at Oxford, beſides Sir William Jennings.

Coll. That which Sir William Jennings ſpeaks of I told you before what it was I ſaid, It was the firſt Blood that was ſhed for the Parliament.

Mr. J. Jones. The Parliament was diſſolved before that which Sir William Jennings ſpeaks of, therefore you could not ſay it was to defend the Parliament.

Coll. Mr. Dugdale did ſay that I ſpake ſuch and ſuch Words in the Barber's Shop in the Angel Inn; there I was indeed at the time that he does ſpeak of, and the Barber was by, I do think indeed it were convenient to have him here; but I knew not where he would charge me, or what it was he would charge me with, becauſe I never ſaid any thing in my Life that was like Treaſon.

L C. J. Mr. Colledge, call what Witneſſes you will.

Coll. But, my Lord, pray let me ask you one Queſtion more; You take theſe Words diſtinct from any matter of fact, don't you?

L. C. J. No, complicated with the Fact, which was the Overt-Act, the coming to Oxon, with Piſtols to make one if there had been any diſturbance, and to ſeize the King.

Coll. Then, my Lord, I would ask you, Whether any Act of Treaſon done at London, ſhall be given in Evidence to prove the Treaſon for which which I am now indicted, and which was given in Evidence before the Grand Jury, upon which the Tryal was there grounded.

L. C. J. Any Act of Treaſon that is of the ſame kind. And I'll tell you, That was reſolved in Sir Henry Vane's Caſe; thoſe that gave you that Paper underſtand it. But I ſpeak now to your Capacity, and to ſatisfy your Queſtion. He was indicted for Levying War againſt the King, he conſpired in Weſtminſter, the War was levied in another County; the Conſpiracy upon the Trial was proved in the County of Middleſex, and the War in another place, and yet it was held ſufficient to maintain the Indictment in the County of Middleſex.

Coll. There was a War really levied, but God be thanked here is only bare Words.

Mr. J. Jones. Yes, Actions too.

Coll. What Actions, my Lord?

Mr. J. Jones. Arming your ſelf, and coming to Oxford.

L. C. J. Well, I have told you my Opinion; my Brothers will ſpeak theirs, if they think otherwiſe.

Mr. J. Jones. That is not your caſe neither, tho' I am of the ſame Opinion with my Lord; for here are two Witneſſes have proved plain matter of Fact at Oxford; the providing Arms your ſelf, and encouraging others to take Arms——

Coll. They name no Perſons.

Mr. J. Jones. You will have my Opinion, and yet you will give me no leave to ſpeak; I had patience to hear you: You are told there are two Witneſſes, Turbervile and Dugdale, that prove your providing and having of Arms at Oxon, and perſwading others to take Arms, particularly Turbervile. He told you he had no Arms, or but a Caſe of Piſtols, and he had no Horſe; but you told him you would provide him an Horſe. And then there are two other Witneſſes, Smith and Bryan Haynes, they do not tell you of any thing done at Oxford, but they tell you what you ſaid in their hearing of what you had done in Oxon, and ſo I think if the Witneſſes are to be believed, there is a very full proof againſt you.

Mr. J. Raymond. I am of the ſame Opinion truly, and I cannot find, but that there is proof enough by two Witneſſes, Turbervile and Dugdale, of what was done at Oxford. They ſwear matter of Fact, not Words only, but Actions alſo.

Coll. No Fact, but that I had Piſtols and a Sword, and that I ſhould tell Mr. Turbervile I would provide him an Horſe, which is ſtill but Words.

Mr. J. Jones. But you ſhall hear anon for the full Conviction of you and all others, the Statute of the 13th of this King read to you, and you ſhall there ſee that ſuch Words are made Treaſon.

Colledge. But I beſeech your Lordſhip to tell me whether there muſt not be two Witneſſes to the ſame Words at the ſame time.

Mr. J. Jones. No, it was the reſolution of all the Judges in the caſe of my Lord Stafford in the preſence of the Parliament, and the Parliament proceeded upon it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. In the ſame Tryal where Mr. Colledge was a Witneſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. All the whole Houſe of Commons prayed Judgment upon my Lord Stafford, purſuant to that reſolution.

L. C. J. Come will you call any Witneſſes?

Coll. My Lord, I do not queſtion but to prove this one of the helliſheſt Conſpiracies that ever was upon the face of the Earth, and theſe the moſt notorious wicked men, an abſolute deſign to deſtroy all the Proteſtants of England, that have had the Courage to oppoſe the Popiſh Plot. In which no Man of my condition hath done more than I have done. I was bred a Proteſtant, and continued ſo hitherto, and by the Grace of God I will dye ſo. If that they had known of theſe Words that I ſhould ſpeak, and ſuch a deſign that I ſhould have before the Parliament ſat at Oxon, and be with me in Oxon when the Parliament ſat, if they had been good Subjects, they ought to have had me apprehended. Turbervile came ſeveral times indeed, and dined with me. I did not bid him go out of Doors, nor invited him thither; he was a Man I had no diſreſpect for; nay, he was a Man I valued, thinking he had done the Nation ſervice againſt the Papiſts; that this Man ſhould hear me ſpeak ſuch Words againſt his Majeſty, who was then in this Town, and know of ſuch a dangerous deſign to attempt the ſeizing his Perſon, or that I ſhould diſcover a great Party that were ready to do it, I think there is ſcarce any Man of reaſon, but will ſay, if this were really done and ſpoken by me, neither of them would or ought to have concealed it but diſcover it, none of them has ever charged me with any ſuch thing, they have been in my Company ſince. I never had any Correſpondence with any of them but Dugdale, then pray conſider how improbable it is, that I ſhould talk of ſuch things to Papiſts, Prieſts, and Iriſh men, who have broke their Faith with their own Party, that Faith which they gave under the penalty of Damnation, Men that have been concerned in Plots and Treaſons, to murder and cut the Throats of Proteſtants, that I ſhould be ſuch a Madman to truſt theſe People, when I could receive no manner of obligation from them, nor could give any truſt to them, they having before broke their Faith; eſpecially conſidering I could lay no ſuch Oaths and Obligations upon them, who was a Proteſtant; then 'tis the greateſt Nonſenſe, to believe that I would ſay theſe things before Perſons whom I could never hope would conceal my Treaſons, having diſcovered their own. If they ſpeak Truth concerning the general Popiſh Plot, that could be no Obligation upon me to truſt them with another; and they cannot ſay, that they ever obliged me in any reſpect. My Lord, I thank God, I have had ſome Acquaintance in the World, and have been concerned with ſome perſons of Honour, Noblemen, and Parliament men, that I know are as good Subjects as any his Majeſty has; theſe never found me a Fool, nor a Raſcal, ſo great a Knave as to have any ſuch Thoughts in my Heart, nor ſo great a mad man, or ſo fooliſh, as to go to diſcover them to Papiſts, Prieſts and Iriſh men, to men of their condition, that were ready to ſtarve for Bread. As for Hayns and Smith that run ſo faſt thro' all their Evidence, the firſt time that ever I ſet my Eyes on Haynes, was in the Coffee Houſe that he ſpeaks of; Macnamarra comes in, and deſires me to go out with him, and I ſhould hear the greateſt Diſcovery of a piece of Villany againſt my Lord Shaftsbury's Life, that ever I heard in my Life. This Captain Brown, who is now dead, a man that I had known but a month before, (for I think it was in March laſt when this was) could teſtifie for me; for I came to him him, Captain, ſaid I, here is a Diſcovery offered to be made to me, of a Deſign to take away my Lord Shaftsbury's Life. Macnamarra asks me to go to the Hercules Pillars, I went along with him, and took Capt. Brown with us. Afterwards he fell ſick in April, and is now dead, ſo I loſt a main Evidence in the caſe. He was the only man that was by at the time; God knows my Heart, I ſpeak nothing but the Truth, I took him with me, Haynes began to diſcover to us, that Fitz-Gerald had employed him to fetch over Macnamarra and if he would come in, and ſwear againſt my Lord of Shaftsbury, which was his Deſign, it would not be long e'er his Head were taken off, and he ſaid, He had given in a Paper of High Treaſon againſt my Lord of Shaftsbury, I ask'd what it was? He told me, that my Lord ſhou'd tell Fitz-Gerald that he had a Deſign to bring this Kingdom to a Common-Wealth, and to root out the Family of the Stuarts. This he ſaid FitzGerald had given in in a Paper, under his own hand; and I think he ſaid, he had ſworn it, and ſent Haynes to fetch Macnamarra to ſwear againſt my Lord the ſame things too. I writ down all the heads of the Diſcourſe, which Capt. Brown heard as well as I. After he had ſaid it, he deſired us to conceal it. Sir, ſaid I, You are a Stranger to me, and theſe are great and ſtrange things that you do tell us, Macnamarra and Brown, and Ivy, and others were there, which (if they were honeſt Men) they would come and teſtifie. I thought them honeſt Men, and that they had none of thoſe wicked Deſigns in their Hearts, that now I find they have. So ſays Haynes, I do not know this Man, meaning me: Macnamarra told him, I was an honeſt Man, he might lay his Life in my hands. After he had ſpoken all this, he deſired us to conceal it: Said he, I will not only diſcover this but a great deal more of their Rogueries, that I know very well. Said I to him again, I will not conceal it, nor do you no wrong; for if this be true, my Lord of Shaftsbury ſhall know it to night; for where there is a Deſign to take away a Peer of the Realm, I will not conceal it; but if it be falſe, and you have ſaid more than comes to your ſhare, recant it again, and we will take no notice of it, only ſay you are a Knave for ſpeaking of it; he ſwore, Dam him, it was all true, that, and a great deal more, which he ſaid he knew, about ſeizing and deſtroying the Parliament at Oxon, about an Army in the North that was to be raiſed about the time of the Sitting of the Parliament at Oxon, of a French Army that was to land in Ireland, at the ſame time, that the Duke of York was to be at the Head of them, and the intention was to deſtroy all the Proteſtants. Upon this, I was reſolved, if I lived, to come along with the Parliament, and if there was any ſuch Deſign, I was reſolved to live and die with them; but I had no more than common Arms, a Sword and a Caſe of Piſtols, my Cap was a Velvet Cap, and nothing elſe. My Lord, I had the Honour to be ſent for, when the Parliament ſat laſt at Weſtminſter, the Seſſions in October, it was an Honourable Occaſion, and I thank thoſe worthy Gentlemen that ſent to me for the Honour of it; there I begun to be popular as to my Name, for from that time they begun to call me the Proteſtant Joyner, becauſe the Parliament had intruſted me. My Lord Grey was pleaſed to ſend his Footman for me to the Crown Tavern behind the Exchange, where there were ſeveral worthy Lords, Peers of the Realm, and one hundred of the Commons, that had dined there that day, it was the day before they ſate, after they had dined I came to them, and the Duke of Monmouth told me, They had heard a good Report of me, that I was an honeſt Man, that underſtood Building, and they did confide in me to ſearch under the Parliament Houſe; they did not really know of any Deſign, but they would not be ſecure, there might be ſome Tricks play'd them by the Papiſts, tho' we are not afraid of them, ſaid the Duke, yet we think fit to employ you to ſearch under the Houſes and thereabouts, whether you can find any ſuch Practices. So accordingly, my Lord, I did go, my Lord Lovelace was one of the Honourable Lords and my Lord Herbert that went with me, and ſome of the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons; and thoſe worthy Proteſtant Lords were pleaſed to thank me for my Service and did believe I was active and zealous to find out and diſcover the bottom of the Popiſh Plot, ſo far as it came legally in my way to do it. My Lord, upon this occaſion, there was a great kindneſs from them to me, and I had upon all occaſions Teſtimonies of it; and this very man who ſwears Treaſons againſt me (which God Almighty knows is all falſe) did ſwear in his Affidavit before Sir George Treby the Recorder of London (I did never ſee the Affidavit, indeed I was over night at Sir George Treby's, but he was not then at leiſure, but he drew it up next day, and ſwore it that there was a Deſign to deſtroy the Parliament at Oxon, and there was not only his Oath for it, but it was the general belief, that ſome Evil was intended them. All men had cauſe to fear and to ſuſpect the Papiſts did bear them no good Will; and making uſe of their own Obſervations, they were generally armed with a Piſtol, or a Sword, for themſelves, in caſe they ſhould be attack'd by the Papiſts. In order to this, I did come down with my Lord Howard, my Lord of Clare, my Lord of Huntington, and my Lord Pagett, thoſe four worthy Proteſtant Lords, and it was two days after the Parliament was ſat, that we came, and I went out of Town again with my Lord Lovelace, Sir Thomas Player, and Sir Robert Clayton; and I am ſure they were all in ſo great a fear that London ſhould be ſurprized and ſeized on by the Papiſts, but there was no mortal man that ever heard of the King's being ſeized, or thought of it, till theſe men come and tell me, that I had ſuch a Deſign, and came hither with that purpoſe; but my Lord, I declare as God is my Judge, I would not have it thought I ſpeak it to ſave my Life, were it as certainly a Truth, as 'tis moſt wickedly a Falſhood, that I had a Deſign to ſeize the King, I know not of one man upon the face of the earth, that was to ſtand by me, Parliament man or other Perſons whatſoever; and how it is poſſible for me to attempt that, being a ſingle Perſon, with only a Sword and a Caſe of Piſtols, let any man judge. And I do declare, I know of no Conſpiracy or Deſign againſt the King or Government, I never ſpoke one of the Treaſonable Words in my Life, that is laid againſt me, nor had ever any thoughts of any ſuch thing. God that is my eternal Judge, knows, that what I ſpeak is true.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Colledge, will you call your Witneſſes, for I muſt tell the Jury as I did at your requeſt, concerning Mr. Attorny, that as nothing he ſaid, ſo nothing you ſay is to be believed upon your Allegation; for then no Man would ever be guilty, if his own Purgation by Words were to be believed.

Coll.

Coll. My Lord, I thank God, I know my own Innocency, and hope to prove it. I have a Soul that muſt live to eternity, either in Joy or Miſery; I act according to thoſe Principles, and I hope I have ſome aſſurance of my own Salvation when I dye, I would not call God to Witneſs to a Lye, to ſave a thouſand Lives. My Lord, this is a villanous Conſpiracy againſt me, and if it takes place againſt me, it may go a a great way, God knows how far: This is the 17th or 18th Sham Plot the Papiſts have made againſt the Proteſtants, to get over their own; but I hope my Lord God Almighty will never ſuffer it. If they can make me a Traytor, they will try it upon others, and ſo hope to ſham off their own Treaſons; but I ſay I hope God Almighty will never ſuffer it. My Lord, I think the firſt Witneſs that ſwore againſt me was Mr. Dugdale; and I muſt call my Witneſſes as I have them here, I know no Perſon of them hardly, and this that is done for my Defence was done abroad. My Lord, I have been kept cloſe Priſoner in the Tower, and none of them ſuffered to come to me, whilſt the Popiſh Lords have had the Liberty and Privilege to talk with their Friends. Here are Witneſſes I hope will prove that theſe are ſuborned Men; for Macnamarra did tell me preſently after the Parliament broke up at Oxon, and whiſpered it to me in the Coffee Houſe, ſaid he, there is a Deſign laid to make us retract our Evidence, and go over to Fitz Gerald. Said I, I ſuppoſe they have been at that ſport a great while. Ah, ſaid he, they make large Offers. Said I, by whom? Said he, Collonel Warcup hath been at me, and he tells me——

Mr. J. Jones. Macnamarra is not produced as a Witneſs at all.

Colledge. No, but he told me this, that there was ſuch a Deſign, and, ſaid he, I will get you and ſome other honeſt Men; and he deſired me to be by when he had ſomething more to tell which would do his buſineſs for him, but the next News I heard of him was, he was put into Newgate.

L. C. J. Call your Witneſſes, Mr. Colledge, and prove what you can.

Coll. Call Mr. Hickman.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire he may obſerve the ſame rule he deſired about our Witneſſes; that he may call but one at a time.

Coll. Yes, yes, I will call them one by one.

L. C. J. Are not your Witneſſes together? ſend to them.

Coll. My Lord, I don't know, I have not ſeen one ſince I come. This is not the firſt time, my Lord, the Papiſts have deſigned to take away my Life, tho' it is the firſt time they went about to take it away by Law.

L. C. J. I know not one Papiſt that is a Witneſs againſt you.

Coll. There is never a Man of them, except Sir William Jennings, but what was a Papiſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. What ſay you to Mr. Maſters?

Coll. Mr. Maſters ſays nothing material, it was only a jocoſe Diſcourſe.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It was very pleaſant Diſcourſe upon my word; you were as merry as when you were ſinging of the Rary Shew.

Mr. J. Jones. What do you make Mirth of the blackeſt Tragedy that ever was; That horrid Rebellion, and the Murther of the late King.

Coll. I never juſtified that Parliament in any ſuch thing that they did contrary to Law.

Mr. J. Jones. He ſwears it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hickman does not appear, call another.

Coll. Call William Shewin, (who appeared.)

L. C. J. Look you here Friend, you are not to be ſworn; but when you ſpeak in a Court of Juſtice, you muſt ſpeak as in the preſence of God, and only ſpeak what is true.

Coll. I would not have any body ſpeak any thing for me, but what is truth.

L. C. J. Now ask him what you will.

Coll. I don't know the Gentleman. But pray, Sir, will you tell what you know of theſe Witneſſes.

Mr. Shewin. Name any of them that I know, pray, Sir, and I'll tell you.

Coll. Do you know Bryan Haynes.?

Mr. Shewin. I know there is ſuch a Man, but I have nothing to ſay to him.

Coll. Do you know Turbervile?

Mr. Shewin. Yes.

Coll. Pray tell what you know of him.

Mr. Shewin. My Lord, I was in Turbervile's Company on Thurſday night laſt at the Golden-Poſts at Charing-croſs, and there I heard him ſay, that if I were at Oxford I ſhould hear ſtrange things againſt Colledge, and he would lay ten to one that Mr. Bethel and Mr. Wilmore ſhould be hanged at Chriſtmas, and he would lead him by the Gold Chain along Fleet-ſtreet, and down with his Breeches in the middle of the Coffee Houſe, with a Band about his Neck and a Cloak.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he ſay all theſe things againſt Mr. Sheriff Bethel? I aſſure you he is a bold Man.

Coll. What do you know of Mr. Smith?

Mr. Shewin. I know him by ſight, but I have nothing in particular to ſay concerning him. I have ſomething to ſay to Macnamarra, Sir, if he were here.

Coll. Do you know any thing of this Conſpiracy in general?

Mr. Jones. What of your Conſpiracy?

Mr. Shewin. I know they did lay who ſhould be hang'd at Candlemas, who at Chriſtmas, and who at ſeveral other times.

L. C. J. What did you hear Mr Turbervile ſay?

Mr. Shewin. Thoſe Words I ſpake before about Sheriff Bethel, and about the Amſterdam Coffee Houſe.

Coll. Did they ſay what time I ſhould be hang'd? for the Diſcourſe roſe about me.

Mr. Shewin. One told me that there was one that did deſign to be returned upon this Jury, that was reſolved to hang him right or wrong.

Mr. High Sheriff. My Lord, I did hear there was ſuch a one, and I left him out of the Jury.

L. C. J. For Mr. Sheriffs Honour, we muſt take notice of what he hath ſaid. He ſays he heard of a Man that ſpoke ſomething of that nature, and therefore he left him out of the Jury.

Coll. Now 'tis poſſible theſe Witneſſes were at the ſame ſport.

Mr. Shewin. Was Mr. Peacock Mrs. Fitz Harris's Maids Father, or ſhe here, either of them Witneſſes againſt you?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No, they were not, Sir.

Coll. They did ſwear againſt me at the finding of the Bill.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We have only called theſe Witneſſes, if you can ſay any thing againſt them, do.

Coll. Call Henry Hickman, (who appeared.)

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Hollow. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Hickman. At Holborn-bridge.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Trade are you?

Mr. Hickman. A Cabinet maker.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. Do you know Haynes?

Hickman. Yes, very well; becauſe he uſed to come to my Houſe to a Popiſh Widow that was a Lodger in my Houſe where I live now; and this perſon was a Priſoner at Haynes's when he was a Priſoner in the Fleet. I always had a ſuſpicion he was a Prieſt, not that I could accuſe him really of any thing, but he ſeveral times uſing to come to my Houſe I thought ſo of him, and diſcourſing with my Landlady.

L. C. J. Your Tenant you mean?

Mr. Hickman. Yes, my Tenant. I asked her, what this Fellow was; ſaid ſhe, he is a very dangerous Fellow tho' he is a Papiſt, and I am one my ſelf, yet he is a dangerous perſon, and he does not much care what he ſwears againſt any one.

Mr. J. Jones. This your Tenant told you, what do you know your ſelf?

Mr. Hickman. Another time he came to ſpeak with my Tenant Mr. Scot, who is now gone into Ireland; when he came to the Houſe, he asked me, is Mr. Scot within? Yes, ſaid I Mr. Haynes, ſhe is above; and up he goes, and there they locked the door, and plucked out the Key; ſo I ſlipt off my Shoes, for I thought there might be more danger from ſuch people than I could diſcover any other way. So I went up Stairs, and ſtood at the door, and hearkned, hearing my Landlady talk ſomething to him, he wraps out a great Oath, God damn me, ſaid he, I care not what I ſwear, nor who I ſwear againſt; for 'tis my Trade to get Mony by ſwearing. Whereupon my Lord, I came down as faſt as I could, and a little after I ſaw him go out, and aſſoon as my Landlady came down, ſaid I, Mrs. Scot, I deſire you would provide your ſelf aſſoon as you can; I would be civil to you, and I would not put you to a Non-plus, becauſe your Goods by the Law will be ſeized for not departing according to the King's Proclamation. So a while ago ſince this Buſineſs of Haynes's ſwearing againſt my Lord of Shaftsbury, I bethought my ſelf of ſome other buſineſſes I had heard: To find out the Knavery I went to the Flet, where he hath a very ill Character as well amongſt the Papiſts as the Proteſtants. Whereupon I asked one Fellow that was a kind of a Porter, if he knew any thing of him; ſaid he, Go to ſuch an one———

Mr. Serj Jeff. We muſt not permit this for Example ſake, to tell what others ſaid.

L. C. J. Nothing is Evidence, but what you know of your own knowledge; you muſt not tell what others ſaid.

Hickman. This I do ſay, I heard him ſay; and there are thoſe that can produce a Letter——

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Bring thoſe people, but you muſt ſpeak nothing, but upon your own knowledge.

Hickman. I was at the Chamber door, and looked in at the Key-hole, and he ſat down at the Window.

L. C. J. How long ago was it, pray?

Hickman. A Year and an half.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are an Eves-dropper I perceive.

Hickman. I did not know what danger he might bring Men into, becauſe he was a Papiſt. I have taken an Oath to be true to the King, and I will as long as I live. For this Gentleman, I never beheld him till laſt night, in all my days; tho' he lived by me, I never ſaw him.

L. C. J. Well, call the next.

Coll. I never ſaw this Gentleman; but you ſee what Haynes hath declared.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This man ſays, he did ſay ſo.

Coll. And, for ought I perceive, he does accordingly. Call Elizabeth Oliver; (who appeared.)

L. C. J. Mrs. Oliver, ſtand up. What do you ask her?

Coll. Do you know Haynes, pray? Bryan Haynes?

Mrs. Oliver. Yes.

Coll. Pray tell the Court what you know of him.

Mrs. Oliver. I know him very well.

L. C. J. What do you know of him?

Mrs. Oliver. He writ a Letter in my Father's Name, unknown to my Father.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him write it?

Mrs. Oliver. I ſaw him write it.

L. C. J. Read it. By whom is it ſubſcribed?

Clerk. By no body.

L. C. J. Why, how is it written in your Father's Name, when it is not ſubſcribed at all?

Mrs. Oliver. He writ it as from my Father.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Whither did he bring it?

Mrs. Oliver. He ſent it into the Country.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you write and read, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Oliver. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who did he ſend it by?

Mrs Oliver. The Carrier.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When is it dated?

Clerk. In 77.

L. C. J. Read the Letter. (Which was done.)

Clerk. Reads.

L. C. J. What is all this to the purpoſe? unleſs your Father were here to prove it was done without his knowledge.

Mrs. Oliver. My Father did not write it.

L. C. J. Was your Father in the Fleet then?

Mrs. Oliver. Yes, my Lord, he was a Priſoner then.

Coll. Mrs. Oliver, do you know any thing more of him?

Mrs. Oliver. I have known him a great while; I know him to be a very ill man.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Muſt ſhe tell you all ſhe knows.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever know him forſwear himſelf?

Mrs. Oliver. No, I don't know that.

L. C. J. Come, call another; this is nothing to the purpoſe.

Coll. Call Mrs. Hall. (Who appeared) Pray, do you know Mr. Bryan Haynes?

Mrs. Hall. Yes, if I ſee him I know him very well.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Mrs. Hall. He lodged at my Houſe, and came there the day before Fitz Harris was tried, and there was a great diſcourſe about his Trial, and I was enquiring of him; and I told him, I muſt expoſe my Ignorance, I did not know what it was he was tried for: And, ſaid he, if you pleaſe to ſit down, I will tell you: Madam Portſmouth came to him, and went upon her Knees, and begged of him, if he had any kindneſs for his Majeſty, that he would now ſhew it at this juncture; and ſhe told him ſhe had heard he had formerly acquaintance with one Mr. Everard abroad, and therefore deſired him to go now and renew it, and endeavour to get him over; and, if he could poſſibly, to get over ſome others to make a Preſbyterian Plot of it. This is true, I very well know it; as for this Gentleman, I never saw his Face before, but those were the Words I am sure.

L. C. J. What were the Words?

Mrs. Hall. That they might make a Presbyterian Plot of it.

Coll. Did he say so?

Mrs Hall. He said that the Dutchess of Portsmouth did so.

L. C. J. What a Story is this?

Coll. Did not he say that the Dutchess of Portsmouth employed him too?

Mrs. Hall. No, this was about Fitz Harris.

Coll. What do you know more about Haynes?

Mrs. Hall. One Night he had been about some business for me in Law with one Mr. Woodward an Attorny at Law, and when he returned I was busie in the Kitchin with my Maid about the House, and he came up to me; Madam said he, this Night I had a Message from the King; a Justice of Peace met me, and brought me word, that the King had sent into Ireland, to enquire into the Loyalty of my Family, and he hath heard that my Father was a Loyal Subject, but he understood strange things of me; but if I would come in, he would grant me my Pardon. I told him, said he, I did not value His Majesty's Pardon a Pin, for I had done nothing that might make me stand in need of it; but I would do any thing that might tend to the preservation of his Majesty's Person or Honour; but to do such base things as are beneath a man, I will never do it; and he whisper'd me in the ear (as the accusing of several Persons;) and since, he sent me a Letter by his Mother in Law, Mrs. Wingfield, that I should not believe it, if I heard he should accuse any body; but I might be confident he had not, nor would accuse any body.

Coll. Was he to swear against the Protestants?

Mrs. Hall. I did not enquire any Questions; but he said, such base things he would never do as the accusing of several persons.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mistress, did you believe him when he told you he was so honest a man?

Mrs. Hall. How do you mean, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. When he said he would not do those base things, did you believe him?

Mrs. Hall. I never saw his face before he came there to lodge; but I saw him to be a man that made but little Conscience of what he said or swore.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you find him a bragging man?

Mrs. Hall I had little discourse, but what he said of himself. But there is one thing more about an Intelligence: When Thompson had written something in his Intelligence concerning Bryan Haynes, he said he would write an Answer to it; and accordingly he reads it to us: he said, he was going that Evening to get it put into one of the Intelligences: The Words were to this purpose, 'Whereas one Nathaniel Thompson 'had falsly and maliciously accused one Bryan 'Haynes for speaking Treasonable Words; he 'the said Bryan Haynes doth declare that he chal-'lenges any man to charge him with it; but he 'owned he had an hand, or was employed to 'put the Plot upon the dissenting Protestants.

L. C. J. Did he publish that in the Intelligence?

Mrs. Hall. I never read it published; but he had writ it, and read it to us several times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you go to Church, Mistress?

Mrs. Hall. I hope I do.

Sir. Geo. Jeff. To what Church?

Coll. Call Mary Richards, Mrs. Hall's Maid. (Who stood up.)

L. C. J. What will you ask her?

Coll. Do you know this Bryan Haynes, pray?

Richards. Yes, he lodged there where I lived.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Richards. I know he writ that in the Intelligence my Mistress spoke of; Thompson, in his Intelligence, accusing him of having spoken Treason, he reads what he said he would put into the Intelligence: That he never spake one Word of Treason, and he writ it for his own Vindication; that whereas Nathaniel Thompson, in his Intelligence of the 18th of June, had maliciously accused one Bryan Haynes of Treasonable Words; there was no such thing.

L. C. J. And that was to vindicate him, that he never did speak any Treasonable Words.

Richards. Yes.

L. C. J. Will you ask her any thing else?

Coll. I cannot tell what she says.

L. C. J. She says, he writ something that was in Answer to Thomson's Intelligence, to vindicate himself that he never did speak any Treasonable Words.

Coll. But did you hear him say any thing of these Words, that he was employed in a Plot against the Protestants?

Richards. I read that, in what he writ to put in the Intelligence, that he challenged any one to appear, and charge him with Treason; but, said he, I own that I was employed, or had a hand in putting the Plot upon the dissenting Protestants; and he telling my mistress he had a message from the King, offering him his Pardon; I ask'd him why he did not accept the King's Pardon. Alas, said he, you do not understand what I was to do for it; I was to do such base things, so beneath a man, that I will never do them: I had five hundred pounds offer'd me, besides the King's pardon, to do such base things as are beneath a man to do.

Coll. What were the base things he said he was to do, and would not do?

Richards. I cannot tell, he did not say to me what they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this?

Richards. It was a Week before he was taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is two months ago.

Coll. It was since the Parliament sat at Oxford: But what was that he was employed to do, did he say?

Rich. Why, he said in his Answer to the Intelligence, he was one that had an hand to put the Plot upon the dissenting Protestants.

Coll. Call Mrs. Wingfield. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Christian Name?

Mrs. Wingfield. Mary.

L. C. J. What do you ask her?

Coll. Do you know this Bryan Haynes, pray?

Mrs. Wingfield. Yes, very well.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Mrs. Wingfield. I know nothing of him, but he is an honest man; he married my daughter, and always carried himself like a Gentleman; he scorns the thing that is unhandsome, and never did any thing that is unhandsome in his Life.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray how came you by this Witness? Have you any more of them?

Coll. I never saw her before, but I believe she hath said something else in another place. Did you ever say the contrary, pray?

Mrs. Wing. No body can say so; and I had done the Gentleman a great deal of Wrong if I had.

Coll. Call Mr. Whaley. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Whaley. John Whaley.

Coll.

Coll. Did you know Bryan Haynes?

Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you dwell, Sir?

Mr. Whaley. At the Hermitage, beyond the Tower.

Coll. I don't know you, Sir; but what do you know of him?

Mr. Whaley. I never ſaw you Sir, till to day; but that which I think I am called for is this, tho' it was upon Sunday that I receiv'd this ſame Subpœna to come down hither; but about ſix Years ago, Bryan Haynes was a Priſoner in the King's Bench, and he came down to the Cellar which I had taken of the Marſhal to ſell Drink in; and coming down to drink in one of the Rooms of the Cellar that belong to me, he took away a Tankard, and went up with it. One of the men followed him up; ſo I went to the Marſhal to complain, and told him of it; and the Marſhal took him from the Maſter's Side, and put him into the Common Side. That is all I know of him any way, directly or indirectly.

L. C. J. Why did you not indict him of it?

Mr. Whaley. I acquainted the next Juſtice of the Peace, who was the Marſhal; and he put him from the Maſter's Side, into the Common Side.

L. C. J. He was no good Juſtice of the Peace in the mean time.

Coll. Call Mr. John Lun. (Who appeared.) Do you know Bryan Haynes, Mr. Lun?

Mr. Lun. I have ſeen him twice; the firſt time I ever ſaw him was, I went into the Derby Ale-Houſe, to enquire for one Micklethwayte, a Kinſman of mine, and there this Bryan Haynes was, in a little Room next the Ditch, near the Door that goes out there, as if he were aſleep, and he rouſed himſelf up; and, as I was walking there, Sir, ſaid he, will you take part of a Tankard with me, (that was his expreſſion:) With that, ſaid I, I do not care if I do. And the firſt thing he began was the King's Health, then the Queen's, then the Duke of York's; then he fell very foul againſt the Grand Jury, becauſe they had not found the Bill againſt Colledge, who is a Gentleman that I never ſaw before in my life but once, as I know of: And he ſaid, my Lord Shaftsbury was a little Toad, but he would do his buſineſs very ſuddenly. Then he railed upon the Parliament, and ſaid they were a Company of Rogues, they would give the King no mony, but he would help him to mony enough out of the Fanaticks Eſtates. And he ſaid, they would damn their Souls to the Devil before the Catholick Cauſe ſhould ſink.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. When was this?

Mr Lun. It was three or four days after the Bill was brought in Ignoramus by the Grand Jury.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Was he alone?

Mr. Lun. Yes, he was.

Coll. Is that all you have to ſay?

Mr. Lun. One thing more, my Lord. On Monday laſt I was at Uxbridge, and a Gentleman ſent his man on purpoſe to let me know I muſt go to Colebrook, and ſtay till they came thither. When I came there, I met Bryan Haynes at the Crown Kitchin Window, and he was ſtirring a Glaſs of Brandy, and ſweetning it with Sugar; ſaid he, Sir, will you drink? here is the King's Health to you: So I drank, and ask'd him how he did. Do you know me Sir, ſaid he. Yes, ſaid I, I drank with you once. Says he, you have a good memory. So then a Pint of Sack was call'd for, and after that another, and then came down Mrs. Peacock; and being very fine, all in her flower'd Silks, I ask'd what Gentlewoman that was? Said he, it is Mrs. Fitz-harris. No, ſays I, it is not; they ſay ſhe is gone. But, ſaid he, it is her maid; and Sheriff Bethel is to marry her: As I have a Soul to ſave, I tell you nothing but what is truth. Thereupon, ſaid I, Sheriff Bethel is able to maintain her, he hath a good Eſtate. But, ſaid he, it ſhall be the King's e'er long,

Coll. So that here is a plain deſign againſt all the eminent Proteſtants.

Mr. Lun. So with that, my Lord, if it pleaſe your Honor, I clapp'd my Groat down at the Bar, and went out of the Room. Nay, ſaid he, let us have one Health more: And ſo he had his Tankard, and I had mine.

Haynes. I humbly deſire you to call for Mr. White, the King's Meſſenger, who was by. I never ſaw the man before he was at Uxbridge; and asking Mr. White who he was? Said he, his name is Lun, he was my Priſoner two Years.

L. Ch. Juſt. What ſay you to the diſcourſe he talks of at Fleet-Bridge?

Haynes. My Lord, I am upon my Oath, and I never ſaw him in my life before I ſaw him at Uxbridge.

Mr. Lun. I will take the Sacrament upon it, that what I have averr'd is true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I ſuppoſe you are both known, and then your Credit will be left to the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is Mr. White; pray ſwear him. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Do you remember that Haynes ask'd who Mr. Lun was?

Mr. White. It was at the Bar of the Crown Inn at Uxbridge, and I being there, Mr. Lun came into the Yard, and I knowing Mr. Lun, ask'd him how he did; he ſaid, he was glad to ſee me, and he called for a Pint of Sack to make me drink. Haynes ſtood by, and he ask'd who he was, and I told him; and we drank the King's health; but for any thing of thoſe Words that were ſpoken there, Sir, I did hear not one Word of them, but he thank'd me for my civility when I ſummon'd him up to the Court, and ſeeing Mr. Haynes by, he ask'd who he was?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you take it upon your Oath, that he ask'd you who Haynes was?

Mr. White. Yes, I do.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray did you hear any diſcourſe that time as if there had been a meeting upon Fleet-bridge?

Mr. White. Not one Word of that?

Mr. Lun. I will take the Sacrament upon it, what I ſay is true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We know you, Mr. Lun; we only ask Queſtions about you, that the Jury may know you too, as well as we. We remember what once you ſwore about an Army.

Coll. I don't know him.

Mr. Lun. I don't come here to give Evidence of any thing but the truth; I was never upon my knees before the Parliament for any thing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nor I neither for much; but yet once you were, when you cried, Scatter them good Lord.

Coll. Call Mr. Broadgate.

L. C. J. What is your Chriſtian name, Sir?

Mr. Broadgate. Jeremiah.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. Broadg. My Lord, I am a Stranger to the Priſoner at the Bar; what I have to ſay is concerning Mr. Turbervile, whom I met one day, and he ask'd me how I did? Said he, I owe you a little mony, but I will pay you in a ſhort time; but if you will go to drink a Glaſs of Ale. No, ſaid I, I am in haſte, and do not care for going to drink. Said he, You ſhall go; ſo away we went, and when we were ſat, ſaid he, When did you ſee Turbervile that was my Lord Powis's Butler; ſaid he, he was a great Rogue to me, and when I ſtood up for the Nation's good, he villified my Evidence, and afterwards he came to me with Doctor to beg my Pardon; but I would not forgive him for the whole World. And ſpeaking of the King's Evidence, ſaid he, The King's Evidence are look'd upon as nothing, as poor inconſiderable mean Fellows, and their Salaries are leſſened; and, ſaid he, I have had the greateſt proffers from Court of Preferment and Rewards, if I would go from what I have ſaid, and come upon the contrary; and he repeated it, Yes, upon the Faith of a man, and from the higheſt: But, ſaid he, I have a Soul and a Body; a Body for a Time, but my Soul for Eternity, and I cannot go from it. He went over it again; I might have what I would if I would go from what I have ſaid, and come upon the contrary.

Mr. Att. Gen. But he does not go from any thing of what he hath ſaid.

Coll. Did he ſay what he was offered, and by whom?

Mr. Broadg. He ſaid he had very great offers from the Court if he would diſown the Plot, and go upon the contrary.

L. C. J. But he does not diſown it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Nay, he had a Soul to ſave, and could not go from it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You talk of the contrary, and the contrary; What did he mean by that? what Plot ſhould he diſown?

Mr. Broadg. The Popiſh Plot.

L. C. J. He does not diſown it, nor never did diſown it.

Coll. He would make a Presbyterian Plot of it now, for he cannot ſay I am in the Popiſh Plot. Sir, do you know any thing more of him? Or did he name me? Or that he was to ſwear againſt me, or any Proteſtant?

Mr. Broadg. No, only he ſaid the King's Evidence were vilified, and look'd upon as poor inconſiderable Fellows; but it ſeem'd if he would go on the other ſide, he might have great Preferments and Rewards.

L. C. J. You make a wrong Comment upon it, Mr. Colledge; it was if he would retract his Evidence, and diſown the Plot.

Coll. I leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury, to make the Senſe of it.

Mr. Broadg. I ſaw Mr. Turbervile ſince I came hither, and he ask'd, Are you come, Mr. Broadgate, to give Evidence againſt me? Says I, I am come to declare the truth, and nothing but the truth.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You might have ſtaid at home for any thing material that you do evidence.

Coll. Call Mr. Zeal (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Chriſtian name, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. John.

L. C. J. What would you ask him?

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Where do you dwell, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. In London.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Whereabouts?

Mr. Zeal. In Fetter-lane.

Mr. Serj. Holl. What Countryman are you, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. Somerſetſhire.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whereabouts in Somerſetſhire were you born?

Mr. Zeal. By Sir William Portman's, within ſix miles of him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Trade, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. No Trade.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Have you any Eſtate?

Mr. Zeal. My Father has. I was bred to wait upon a Perſon of Quality.

Coll. Do you know Turbervile, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. Yes Sir, I do.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Mr. Zeal. Sir, I know nothing but what Mr. Ivy told me with his own mouth.

L. C. J. Do you know any thing of your own knowledge?

Mr. Att. Gen. Has Mr. Turbervile told you any thing?

Mr. Zeal. Not concerning Mr. Colledge, he has not.

Coll. Ivy was amongſt them.

Mr. Zeal. Yes, my Lord, he was the firſt that ſwore this Presbyterian Plot.

L. C. J. We know of no Presbyterian Plot.

Coll. Can you ſay nothing of your own knowledge concerning Turbervile?

Mr. Zeal. Nothing but what Mr. Ivy told me.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That is not of your own knowledge, and ſo it is nothing, for he is not produced in this Cauſe.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to call Mr. Ivy.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do if you will. (He ſtood up.)

Coll. What was that you heard Turbervile ſay of me, or of any Presbyterian Plot?

Ivy. I never heard him ſay any thing concerning a Presbyterian Plot in my life.

Coll. Did not you tell Zeal of ſuch a thing?

Ivy. No, I never did.

Coll. Hark you, Mr. Ivy, you have ſworn againſt me, have you not?

Ivy. What I have ſworn againſt you, or any other perſon, is true.

Coll. What have you ſworn againſt me?

Ivy. I am not bound to anſwer you.

Coll. Did not you call me out, with Macnamarra and Haynes, to the Hercules Pillars?

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, I will tell you ſomething for Law, and to ſet you right; whatſoever Witneſſes you call, you call them as Witneſſes to teſtifie the truth for you; and if you ask them any Queſtions, you muſt take what they have ſaid as truth: Therefore you muſt not think to ask him any Queſtion, and afterwards call another Witneſs to diſprove your own Witneſs.

Coll. I ask him, was he the firſt time with us, when I was call'd out of the Coffee-houſe to hear Haynes's Diſcovery?

L. C. J. Let him anſwer you if he will; but you muſt not afterwards go to diſprove him.

Coll. If he were ſworn againſt me, I would not ask him any Queſtions, for he is among them.

L. C. J. Ask him what you will.

Coll. I deſire not if he have ſworn againſt me, for truly I can't expect a good Anſwer from him; but he was by when Haynes made his Diſcovery.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Coll. I ask whether he hath given any Evidence againſt me any where?

Ivy. I am not bound to anſwer you.

L. C. J. Tell him if you have.

Ivy. Yes, my Lord, I have.

Coll. Then I think he is no good Witneſs for me, when he hath ſworn againſt me.

Ivy. I have ſworn againſt him and others. You know that you and I have had a great many Intrigues about this buſineſs in hand, and how we dealt with Mr. Haynes.

L. C. J. Look you, he does not call you for a Witneſs for him, you can teſtifie nothing, and ſo you muſt be quiet.

Coll.

Coll. Call Mr. Lewes. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Chriſtian name?

Mr. Lewes. William.

Coll. Pray Mr. Lewes, what do you know about Turbervile?

Mr. Lewes. I know nothing at all, I aſſure you of him that is ill.

Coll. Do you know any thing concerning any of the Evidence that hath been given here?

Mr. Lewes. If I knew any thing relating to you, I would declare it; but I know ſomething of Mr. Ivy; it has no relation to you, as I conceive, but againſt my Lord of Shaftsbury.

L. C. J. You would call Ivy for a Witneſs, and now you call one againſt him; and that I told you, you muſt not do; but Ivy is not at all in this Caſe.

Coll. Do you know any thing of the reſt of them, Haynes, or Smith, or Dugdale?

Mr. Lewes. No more than what Mr. Zeal told me, was told him.

Coll. Do you know any thing of a Presbyterian Plot?

Mr. Lewes. If the Court pleaſe to hear me, I will tell my Knowledge of that; but I know nothing that affects him in the leaſt, only that which concerns my Lord of Shaftsbury.

L. C. J. That is nothing to the purpoſe, call another.

Mr. Lewes. There was not, to my knowledge, a Word mention'd of your name: I will do you all the Juſtice I can; if I knew any thing concerning you, I would be ſure to relate it.

Coll. I cannot ſay who can, or who cannot; I am a Stranger to all of it.

L. C. J. Well, call your next Witneſs.

Coll. My Lord, there was a Petition preſented to the Common Council of London, wherein they ſet out, that they were tamper'd withal about a Plot againſt the Proteſtants.

L. C. J. A Petition, from whom?

Coll. I cannot tell from whom; from ſome of theſe Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Who preferr'd and ſign'd it?

Coll. Mr. Turbervile was one. Pray call Doctor Oates.

L. C. J. The Priſoner calls upon you, Mr. Oates. What would you ask him Mr. Colledge?

Coll. Where is the Petition to the Common Council, Doctor?

Dr. Oates. I have it here in my hand.

L. C. J. By whom was it preſented?

Dr. Oates. It was given by Mr. Turbervile and Mr. Macnamarra, to Mr Wilmore?

L. C. J. Was you preſent when it was deliver'd?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Wilmore did deliver it to me before he was apprehended; for, being to come down as a Witneſs, he was taken up and committed to Priſon.

L. C. J. Whoſe hands are to it?

Dr. Oates. I know Mr. Turbervile's hand, he will not diſown it.

Clerk reads. It is ſubſcribed Edward Turbervile, John Macnamarra.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, what Word is there in all this Petition that is a contradiction to what they have ſaid now?

Coll. I did not hear it, my Lord.

L. C. J. They ſay, they are conſtant Witneſſes for the King againſt the Papiſts; and they have been tempted to unſay what they have ſaid: How does that contradict what they ſay now?

Coll. I ſuppoſe they ſay they have been tempted to turn the Plot upon other people, and to make a Plot upon the Proteſtants.

L. C. J. They have been tempted, they ſay, by the Papiſts, to unſay what they have ſaid; but the Jury have heard it read, and will give it its due weight. Will you ask Mr. Oates any Queſtions?

Coll. What do you know of Mr. Turbervile?

Dr. Oates. As to Turbervile, my Lord, a little before the Witneſſes were ſworn at the Old Baily, I met with Mr. Turbervile; I was in a Coach, but ſeeing Mr. Turbervile, I ſtept out of the Coach, and ſpoke with him; for, hearing that he was a Witneſs, I did ask him whether he was a Witneſs or no, againſt Colledge? Mr. Turbervile ſaid, he would break any one's head, that ſhould ſay ſo againſt him; for he neither was a Witneſs, nor could give any Evidence againſt him. So, after he came from Oxon, I met with Mr. Turbervile again; and, hearing he had been there, I ask'd him if he had any thing againſt Colledge? He ſaid, Yes, he had been ſworn before the Grand Jury. Said I, did not you tell me ſo and ſo? Why, ſaid he, the Proteſtant Citizens have deſerted us; and, God damn him, he would not ſtarve.

L. C. J. Would he ſay ſo to you?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, he ſaid thoſe very Words.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. 'Tis Mr. Oates's Saying, 'tis Mr. Turbervile's Oath.

Dr. Oates. Several times he did repeat it; but when I ask'd him what he had ſworn, he ſaid I am not bound to ſatisfie people's Curioſities.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Turbervile?

Mr. Turbervile. My Lord, the firſt part of the Doctor's diſcourſe, in part is true; I met him juſt at my Lodgings, and the Doctor alighted out of his Coach, and ſpoke to me, and invited me to come to my old Friends; for he told me, they had ſome jealouſie that I was not true to them: and he told me, if I would come to the King's Head Club, I ſhould be received with a great deal of kindneſs: And never afterwards did I ſpeak with the Doctor a tittle about any Evidence.

L. C. J. He ſaid, you ſaid you would break any one's head, that ſaid you were an Evidence againſt Colledge; for you were not, nor could be.

Mr. Turb. There was no ſuch thing ſaid by me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath, did you tell him ſo?

Mr. Turb. Upon my Oath, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff Did you tell him that other paſſage, when you ſwore you would not ſtarve?

Mr. Turb. No, I did not.

Dr. Oates. Upon the word of a Prieſt, what I ſay is true. My Lord, I do ſay, as I am a Miniſter, I ſpeak it ſincerely, in the preſence of God; this Gentleman did ſay theſe words to me; which made me afraid of the man, and I went my ways, and never ſpake with him afterwards, nor durſt I; for I thought he that would ſwear and curſe after that rate, was not fit to be talk'd with.

L. C. J. 'Tis very improbable that he ſhould ſay ſo to you.

Mr. Turb. I always look'd upon Dr. Oates as a very ill man, and never would converſe much with him.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any thing more?

Coll. Do you know any thing of the reſt, Doctor?

Dr. Oates. I know nothing of Turbervile further, but that he did preſent this Petition, wherein he ſays, he lay under great temptations to go on the other ſide, and accuſe ſome Proteſtants. And truly till I heard he was an Evidence at Oxon,

after

after what he had ſaid to me, I did not believe it.

Mr Att. Gen. Doctor Oates, Mr Turbervile hath not changed ſides, you have; he is ſtill an Evidence for the King, you are againſt him.

Dr. Oates. Mr Attorny, I am a Witneſs for Truth, againſt Falſhood and Subornation; and it can plainly be made to appear there is Subornation againſt the Proteſtants. And moreover, my Lord, ——

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, you would do well to explain yourſelf.

Mr Serj. Jeff. If there be any Subornation relating to Mr Turbervile, or any of the other Witneſſes that have now ſworn againſt Colledge, make it out Doctor.

Dr. Oates. There is, my Lord, and there will be made further to appear in time to come. To my own knowledge as to Mr. Smith, Mr. Colledge and Mr. Smith had ſome provoking Words paſſed betwixt them at Richard's Coffee-houſe, and Mr. Smith comes out and ſwears, God damn him he would have Colledge's blood. So, my Lord, when I met him, ſaid I, Mr. Smith, you profeſs your ſelf to be a Prieſt, and have ſtood at the Altar, and now you intend to take upon you the Miniſtry of the Church of England, and theſe Words do not become a Miniſter of the Goſpel: His reply was, God damn the Goſpel: This is truth, I ſpeak it in the preſence of God and man.

L. C. J. Can you ſay any thing of any of the other Witneſſes?

Dr. Oates. As for Mr. Dugdale, I was engaged for him for 50 l. for laſt Lent Aſſizes, he wanted mony to go down to the Aſſizes, having paid ſome debts, and paid away all his mony; and ſo I engaged for 50 l. that he borrowed of Richard the Coffee-man. After he came from Oxon, I called upon him to haſten to get his mony of the Lords of the Treaſury, which, as near as I remember, was order'd him upon his Petition, for ſo I heard. And at that time, ſaid he, Sir, I hear there is a great noiſe of my being an Evidence: Againſt whom? ſaid I: Againſt ſeveral Proteſtants, my Lord Shaftsbury, and others: ſaid I, I never heard any thing of it: ſays he, there is no body hath any cauſe to make any ſuch report of me, for I call God to witneſs I know nothing againſt any Proteſtant in England. After that I met with Dugdale at Richard's Coffee-houſe, and preſſing him for the mony, and he ſaying he had it not juſt then, but would pay it in a little time: Mr. Dugdale, ſaid I, you have gone I am afraid againſt your Conſcience, I am ſure againſt what you have declared to me: ſaid he, it was all long of Colonel Warcup, for I could get no mony elſe.

Mr Att. Gen. Mr. Oates is a thorough-paced Witneſs againſt all the King's Evidence.

Mr Serj. Jeff. And yet Dr. Oates had been alone in ſome matters, had it not been for ſome of theſe Witneſſes.

Dr. Oates. I had been alone perhaps, and perhaps not; but yet, Mr. Serjeant, I had always a better Reputation than to need theirs to ſtrengthen it.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Does any man ſpeak of your Reputation? I know no body does meddle with it; but you are ſo tender!

Coll. Sir George, now a man is upon his Life, I think you do not do well to affront his Witneſſes.

Mr Serj. Jeff. I do not affront him; but now, my Lord, pray give us leave to call our Witneſſes. Mr. Smith, pray ſtand up.

L. C. J. Mr. Smith, do you hear what Mr. Oates hath ſaid?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then ſpeak it again, Mr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I will ſpeak it to his face. He ſaid coming out of Richard's Coffee-houſe, they having had ſome provoking words, as I underſtood when I came in, God damn that Colledge, I will have his blood: and, my Lord, when I did reprove him, and ſaid to him, Mr. Smith, you have been a Prieſt, and ſtood at the Altar, and intend to be a Miniſter of the Church of England; theſe words do not become a Miniſter of the Goſpel; and he replied, God damn the Goſpel; and away he went.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. Not one word of this is true, upon my Oath. 'Tis a wonderful thing you ſhould ſay this of me; but I will ſufficiently prove it againſt you, that you have confounded the Goſpel, and denied the Divinity too.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Mr. Dugdale, you heard what was ſaid againſt you?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, now Dugdale is come I will tell you ſomething more. There was a Report given out by Mr. Dugdale's means, that Mr. Dugdale was poiſoned; and in truth, my Lord, it was but the Pox. And this Sham paſſed throughout the Kingdom in our Intelligences; and this I will make appear by the Phyſician that cured him.

Mr Serj. Jeff. That is but by a third hand.

Dr. Oates. He did confeſs that he had an old Clap, and yet he gave out he was poiſoned; but now, my Lord, as to what I ſaid before of him, I was engaged for 50 l. for Mr. Dugdale; do you own that?

Mr. Dugdale. I do own it.

Dr. Oates. I did preſs upon you to haſten the payment of it.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, you did.

Dr. Oates. And did not you come to me and tell me, there was a noiſe of your being an Evidence? it was in time juſt before my Lord Shaftsbury was taken up.

Mr. Dugd. I never ſpoke to you till you ſpake to me.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, he came and ſaid to me, there is a noiſe of my being an Evidence; now I had not heard it then, but the day after I did hear it; and I did juſtify Mr. Dugdale, becauſe he had ſaid to me that he had nothing againſt any Proteſtant in England. So I did ſtand up in Vindication of him; but, my Lord, after he had ſworn at the Old Baily I met him again, and preſſed him for the mony, and urged him with it, why he had ſworn againſt Colledge, when he had told me ſo and ſo before; and he ſaid it was all long of Colonel Warcup, for he could not get his mony elſe; and Colonel Warcup did promiſe he ſhould have a place at the Cuſtom-houſe.

Mr. Dugd. Upon the Oath I have taken, and as I hope for Salvation, it is not true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Here is Dugdale's Oath againſt Dr. Oates's ſaying.

Dr. Oates. Mr. Serjeant, you ſhall hear of this in another place.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis an unhappy thing that Dr. Oates ſhould come in againſt theſe men that ſupported his Evidence before.

Mr. Dugd. My Lord, I ſay further, if any Doctor will come forth and ſay he cured me of a Clap, or any ſuch thing, I will ſtand guilty of all that is imputed to me.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, will you call any other Witneſſes?

Coll.

Coll. My Lord, I think this is not fair dealing with a man for his Life; becauſe theſe men be upon their Oaths, and deny the things again that my Witneſſes prove, therefore what they ſwear muſt needs be taken for truth: but if my Witneſs comes and ſays ſuch a thing upon the word of a Miniſter, and in the preſence of God, and which he is ready to maintain by an Oath, ſure it is not to ſtand for nothing, nor to be hooted out of Court, becauſe Mr. Dugdale denies it upon his Oath; I do ſuppoſe he will not acknowledge it. But, my Lord, I am the Priſoner, and cannot be heard as a Witneſs for myſelf: but God is my Witneſs, he hath ſaid a great deal more to me formerly; and he hath told me when I have ſeen him with Warcup, and ask'd him why he kept Company with Warcup, and others; ſaid he, I know they are ſuſpected men, but I muſt keep Company with them to get my mony; what would you have me do, ſtarve? And when I lent him mony out of my Pocket, and truſted him with my Horſe, I dun'd him for mony and could not get it; ſaid I, Will you pay me the 5 l. I lent you: he put me off, ſaid he, I ſhall have it, for the Attorny General hath made up his Accounts, and is very kind to me: why then, ſaid I, why have you it not? ſaid he, he is my friend, and I do not queſtion the getting of it; but here is new work to be done, ſuch work as my Conſcience will not ſerve me to do; there is more Roguery, they will never have done plotting, and counterplotting; but they will make a thouſand Plots if they can to deſtroy the real one.

L. C. J. Can you prove this now?

Coll. No, it was ſpoken to myſelf; and no body was by but myſelf.

L. C. J. Then you ſhould not ſpeak it. But you ask'd the queſtion whether a man may not be believed upon his word, as well as he that is upon his Oath. Your Witneſſes are not upon their Oaths, but they may be Witneſſes, and their weight is to be left with the Jury; they will conſider how improbable it is, that theſe men ſhould come, three men to one man, and all of them ſhould ſpeak that which would make themſelves Rogues and Villains; and that one man of them, Smith, ſhould ſay ſuch vile words, as, God damn him, he would have his blood; and, God damn the Goſpel: that Dugdale ſhould confeſs he was wrought upon by Warcup to teſtify againſt his Conſcience; and that Turbervile ſhould ſay to that purpoſe, he would not ſtarve; they have ſworn the contrary, and ſo there are all theſe three mens Oaths againſt one mans Affirmation; but it muſt be left to the Jury.

Coll There is his Affirmation againſt what they three ſay. He charges every one of them, and 'tis but the ſingle denial of every one of them to his Charge.

L. C. J. 'Tis improbable they ſhould own themſelves ſuch Villains to him.

Dr Oates. They muſt be ſo, if they will do what they have undertaken. I hope my Word will be believed as ſoon as their Oaths.

Coll. It is not to be thought, but when they have ſworn ſo againſt me, they will deny any ſuch thing when they are charged with it.

L. C. J. Have you done with your Witneſſes? Or will you call any more?

Coll. What is ſaid upon an honeſt man's Word in the face of a Court, is certainly to be believ'd as well as what is ſworn.

L. C. J. 'Tis a Teſtimony, that is moſt certain, and muſt be left to the Jury, they muſt weigh one againſt the other. But pray Mr. Colledge will you call your Witneſſes, for it begins to grow late.

Coll. There is Mr. Wilmore, that was a material Witneſs for me, who was Fore-man of the Grand Jury, that would not find the Bill upon this Evidence. What he had to ſay I don't know, but I am informed it was very material for me.

L. C. J. It will be enough for him to clear himſelf, for he is charged with High Treaſon, and by two Witneſſes too.

Coll. Call Alexander Blake.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. Do you know John Smith?

Mr. Blake. Yes, Sir.

Coll. Pray will you tell the Court what you know of John Smith?

Mr. Blake. I ſuppoſe you mean this Gentleman. Mr. John Smith, Gent. came to me one morning, and told me there was one Haynes under Examination, and this Haynes had diſcovered very material things againſt ſome great Perſons: This paſſed, and within few days after I met Mr. Smith at the Exchange Coffee-houſe, and having ſaluted him, I deſired him to drink a Glaſs of Wine, and ſo we went to the Sun Tavern, and when we were there, I ask'd him, what his Senſe was of Haynes and his Diſcovery? Said he, 'tis a Sham Plot: I ask'd him, what he meant by that Sham Plot? Said he, 'tis a meal-tub Plot. This is all that I know.

L. C. J. Would you ask him any thing elſe?

Mr. Blake. I know nothing more.

Coll. Do you know any thing of Turbervile or Dugdale?

Mr. Blake. Sir, I have no Acquaintance with him, nor deſire it: But I was acquainted with this Gentleman Mr. Smith, I know him very well.

Mr Serj. Jeff. You ſay well, ſtand down.

Coll. Call Mr. Samuel Smith.

L. C. J. What ask you him?

Coll. What he knows of Mr. Smith?

Mr S. Smith. Mr John Smith and I have had an Intimacy and Acquaintance ſeveral months, and ſince Mr John Smith ſwore at the Old Baily againſt Mr Colledge, and was gone out of Town, ſeveral People have talk'd with me concerning him, and asking me what I thought of him? I told them, I believed he was an honeſt man, however I would not believe otherwiſe till I knew a Reaſon of it. They told me, that he had ſworn againſt Mr Colledge, that he was to ſeize the King at the Parliament at Oxford, and that there was 1500 Barrels of Powder, and it was to carry on a Presbyterian Plot: Said I, I will never believe it, and the rather becauſe he hath ſaid to me often, there was a Popiſh Plot, but he does not believe any Presbyterian or Proteſtant Plot; and, ſaid I further, as to his giving any Evidence with Iriſhmen, I believe it the leſs for that, for I have heard him often ſay, they were a company of Rogues that had done the Proteſtant Intereſt more harm than ever they could do it good, and bid me have a care of coming into their company, and many other ſuch things, that Mr Smith here knows to be true. Then, my Lord, when Mr Smith came home (for I was very impatient till he did come home, to hear every day ſuch things ſaid againſt him) I went to him to ſee him. Said I, Couſin Smith, I have had great confronts about you ſince you went away, but I hope you can't be that ill man you are repreſented to be, and truly I ſhould be ſorry it ſhould be ſo: Pray Couſin, ſaid I, I have put every man off with this,

that

that I would ſuſpend my belief of you till I had ſpoken with you yourſelf; what is the Evidence you have given? They ſay, you have ſworn a Presbyterian Plot, or a Proteſtant Plot, a deſign of ſeizing the King at Oxon, and of ſo many Barrels of Gun powder that were provided. Says my Couſin, I did ſwear no ſuch thing, nor never a word of any ſuch thing as a Proteſtant Plot, or a Presbyterian Plot, and pray do not believe it of me. No, ſaid I, I thought you could not ſwear any ſuch thing, becauſe you have ſaid often to me, you believed there was no ſuch thing. I do not believe it yet ſaid he, and as to whatſoever Colledge ſaid, I did not believe it, for he did not believe it himſelf. And Mr. Smith told me after his return, that he did not know of any Proteſtant concerned in the Plot.

L. C. J. He does not ſay now 'tis a Proteſtant Plot.

Mr S. Smith. So far from that, that he told me after his return, he did not know any Proteſtant concerned in the Plot.

L. C. J. Mr Smith, thus I underſtand you: You ſay that he ſaid to you, that he had not teſtified any thing of a Proteſtant Plot, nor did believe there was any Proteſtant Plot, for he did not believe what Colledge ſaid himſelf: So by that diſcourſe it ſeems he did not deny, but he had teſtified againſt Mr Colledge, but he did not believe there was any Proteſtant Plot?

Mr S. Smith. No, my Lord, he did not deny but he had ſworn againſt Colledge.

Mr Juſt. Jones. Nor that what he had ſaid againſt Colledge was true?

Mr S. Smith. No, my Lord, but he did not believe him, and he thought Colledge did not believe it himſelf.

Mr Serj. Jeff. It ſeems Mr Colledge thinks the whole Proteſtant Intereſt concerned in him.

L. C. J. The Queſtion is, Mr Colledge, what you had in your mind, not what was in the mind of all the Proteſtants.

Mr S. Smith. This I do ſay, I would not ſpeak more or leſs than the truth, he did not deny but he had heard Colledge ſpeak thoſe Words he ſwore, but he did not believe him, and I think Mr Smith hath ſaid that, at another time before Mr Gardner.

Coll. If he knew of no Proteſtant Plot, it was very unlikely that I ſhould attempt ſuch a thing myſelf.

Mr S. Smith. My Lord, I find Mr Smith hath been very paſſionate and very inveterate of late againſt other men that he hath given me a very good report of before; and when I was talking of this, I was ſaying, If it be true that people ſay of you, a man goes in danger of his life to converſe with you. Mr Smith, ſaid he, I do not care for all the men between Wapping and Charing-croſs, there is never a man that will forbear my company, but would do or ſay as much as Colledge hath done or ſaid.

Mr J. Smith. 'Tis true, and I ſay ſo ſtill.

Coll. 'Tis a contradiction in itſelf, that there ſhould be ſuch a deſign, and none but myſelf to do it. God my righteous Judge knows my innocency.

Mr Juſt. Jones. You might ſay thoſe Words in hopes they would be of your party, and made ſo by your Libels and poiſonous Pictures.

L. C. J. Come, call another Witneſs.

Coll. Call Mr Tho. Gardner. But my Lord, how likely is it that I ſhould ſay, that I would ſeize the King, when he it ſeems ſays, he did not believe there was one man to ſtand by me?

L. C. J. What ſay you to this Gentleman?

Coll. I never ſaw him in my life.

Mr Gardner. Nor I you, Sir.

Coll. I know not three of all that come here.

L. C. J. Well, will you ask him any thing?

Coll. Pray do you know Mr Smith?

Mr Gardner. Yes.

Coll. What do you know of him? Can you ſay any thing concerning this matter that is ſworn againſt me of Treaſon?

Mr Gardner. My Lord, this day fortnight I think it was, Mr S. Smith, the Gent. that was juſt now up before me, ſent for me to the Rummer in Queen-ſtreet, to drink a Glaſs of Wine, where when I came, I found him and Mr J. Smith that is here, whom they call Narrative Smith, talking very briskly concerning one Colledge, I ſuppoſe that is the Gentleman, and the Jury that acquitted him, and he ſaid that two or three of the Jurymen were Raſcals and Villains; and ſays he, they talk up and down the Town, as if I did intend to ſham the Popiſh Plot, and to make a Proteſtant Plot, which ſaid he, I vow to God, and I will juſtifie it before God and all the World, that I know of no Proteſtant Plot, nor is there any Proteſtant concerned in a Plot to my knowledge, but this Colledge, and upon his Trial I believe he will be made appear to be more a Papiſt than a Proteſtant: But ſays Mr Smith to him, Now you are known to be a Witneſs in this Caſe, it will be a dangerous thing for a man to converſe with you.

Coll. Will it be now known that I am a Papiſt? No man could ever ſay ſo in this World.

Mr Gardner. Says he, I care not what all the World ſays of me, and I do not value all the men from Wapping to Charing-croſs, but that man that will ſhun my company will ſay and do as much to the King as Colledge hath done. But then I was ſaying, methinks it ſeems an improbable thing, that ſuch a man as Colledge ſhould ſeize upon the King, or provide 1500 Barrels of Powder, and thoſe other things Upon my word, ſaid he, with ſome paſſion, clapping his hand upon his breaſt, when Mr Colledge did ſay it, I did not believe a word of it, and upon my faith I believe Colledge himſelf did not believe it when he told me ſo.

Coll. Do you know any thing more, Sir?

Mr Gardner. No indeed Mr Colledge.

Coll. Call Dr. Oates again.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to him?

Coll. Pray Dr. Oates, Mr Smith charges me that I ſhould ſpeak ſome treaſonable words that time that Alderman Wilcox gave you a Treat at the Crown Tavern; you were there, and pray how long ago was it?

Dr. Oats. My Lord, I heard Mr. Smith ſpeaking of it at the Old baily, and if you pleaſe to take notice, it was thus, This Summer was twelve-month, or I am ſure a great while before Chriſtmas, the Alderman had invited me ſeveral times to give me a Treat, and I had not time, other buſineſs calling me off; but finding a time, I ſent him word I would come and ſee him. He ſaid he was a Brewer, and troubled at home with Cuſtomers, but he would give me a Dinner at the Crown Tavern without Temple-bar, that was the place fixed upon; there was Mr. Smith the Counſellor, who had been ſerviceable to me in ſeveral inſtances, I did get him to go along with me, and Mr. Colledge was with us, and I heard Smith ſwearing at the Old-baily that Mr. Colledge and he had diſcourſe from the Rainbow Coffee Houſe where we met, and went together.

Col.

Colledge. There I was invited by Alderman Wilcox.

Dr. Oats. But my Lord, I will tell my ſtory, I am not to tell Mr. Smith's. Colledge did tell me he was invited; ſaid I, You ſhall be welcome as far as I can make you welcome. So Colledge and I went together from the Rainbow Coffee Houſe to the Crown Tavern: Now indeed Colledge was very pleaſant and merry, and as I think, the diſcourſe betwixt the Rainbow Coffee Houſe and the Tavern was betwixt Mr. Colledge and me; for Mr. Smith ſtayed ſomewhat behind or walked before, I cannot tell which: When we came to the Crown Tavern we did, to divert our ſelves till Dinner came up, enter into a Philoſophical diſcourſe with one Mr. Savage who was formerly a Romiſh Prieſt, but this Savage is ſince pardoned by the King, and is a Member of the Church of England, and hath been Profeſſor of Divinity and Philoſophy beyond Sea. This as I remember was the Diſcourſe before we dined till we went to Dinner, it was concerning the Exiſtence of God, whether that could be proved by natural demonſtration, and whether or no the Soul was immortal. My Lord, after Dinner Smith went away, I did not hear the leaſt Diſcourſe of any ſuch thing as he ſpeaks of, and Mr. Smith and Colledge had no diſcourſe in my hearing from the Coffee Houſe to the Tavern; and when we were in the Tavern we did diſcourſe about thoſe two Points. Counſellor Smith, my Lord, will juſtify a great deal of this, and my Brother too, who was with us. But when I heard Mr. Smith ſwear as he did about this matter at the Old-baily, I did really, my Lord, in my Conſcience, look upon him to be forſworn in that particular.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And he does ſwear you are out in this.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Dr. Oats. If your Lordſhip pleaſe he ſpeaks of Mr. Wilcox to be a Man that contributes mony to buy Arms, Powder and Shot, I think Sir George Jefferies knows Alderman Wilcox is a man of another Employment.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir George Jefferies does not intend to be an Evidence I aſſure you.

L. C. J. Do you ask him any more Queſtions?

Dr. Oats. I do not deſire Sir George Jefferies to be an Evidence for me, I had Credit in Parliaments, and Sir George had diſgrace in one of them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Your Servant Doctor, you are a witty man, and a Philoſopher.

Coll. Call Mr. Tho. Smith.

L. C. J. What would you ask of him now?

Coll. Counſellor Smith, here is John Smith, or Narrative Smith, which you pleaſe to call him, hath charged me with ſpeaking Treaſon at our going to Dinner at Mr. Willcox's; I remember you were there, and I think you and I and Dr. Oats and his Brother and Mr. Goodwin Wharton went together; I did tell Mr. Smith of it, but I did not ſtir a ſtep out of the Coffee Houſe with him, but went away before him. How long ago is it ſince we had that Dinner?

Mr. T. Smith. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I do very well remember Mr. Alderman Wilcox, ſo they called him, did deſire to give Dr. Oats a Treat, with ſome other of his Friends at the Crown Tavern without Temple-bar; but really my Lord, as to the certain time I do not remember it, but to my beſt remembrance, my Lord, it was before Chriſtmas laſt, and ſome time before Chriſtmas laſt. And, my Lord, I was there all the time; Mr. Smith was at that time ſomewhat a Stranger to me, ſomething I had heard of his Name, and I did ſtay there all the while; I remember Mr. Alderman Wilcox was to go out of Town that day; and truly as to any matter of Treaſon, or treaſonable Words, or any thing tending towards it, I am confident nothing was, or could be ſpoken, and the Room was a very ſmall Room, and our Company did fill it up, and the Table was ſo big, that there was little more than for the Servitors to go about, ſo that any man might eaſily hear from the one end of the Room to the other. I remember there was ſome Diſcourſe betwixt Dr Oats, and Mr. Savage, who I think hath been a Jeſuit, and it was about ſome points of Philoſophy and Divinity; but for Treaſon, I do not remember the leaſt of it, and I am confident Colledge ſaid not any thing at that time, and my reaſon is this, I very well remember Mr. Colledge did ſet himſelf down upon one ſide of the Table, and fell aſleep, and unleſs he talked Treaſon in his ſleep, there could not be any ſuch thing ſaid, and if it had been ſaid, it would have been heard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Smith, did you never hear Mr. Colledge ſpeak any ill Words of the King?

Mr. T. Smith. Never in my Life. And if I were now to take the Sacrament upon it, I could ſay ſo.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You uſed to converſe with him, Mr. Smith, did he never ſay any thing like it to you?

Mr. T. Smith. Good Mr. Serjeant, you know I can take the Sacrament; pray, let us have no Reflections.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who did reflect upon you? I did not reflect upon you.

Mr. J. Jones. Mr. Smith, did he never deliver you any of thoſe Pictures?

Mr. T. Smith. No, Sir, he never did.

Coll. Good Sir George, don't reflect upon my Evidence. It ſeems Mr. Smith is miſtaken in the time, for he ſays, it was at Chriſtmas, but Mr. Smith ſays, it was ſome time before.

L. C. J. Mr. Smith does not ſay ſo, the certain time he cannot tell exactly; but your Witneſſes ſay, it was then.

Mr. T. Smith. I do ſpeak as much as if I were upon my Oath; and I do know what an Oath is, I thank God, and what it is to ſpeak before a Court of Judicature, and I know, and do ſpeak truth as much as if I were upon my Oath; and I do ſay I did not hear Colledge, or any one elſe that was in that Company, at that time ſpeak any thing reflecting upon the King and Government, or any thing tending towards it.

Mr. J. Jones. Can you remember a matter ſo diſtinctly, which Dr. Oates ſays was a year and half ago?

L. C. J. No, this Summer was twelve month.

Mr. J. Jones. And can you tell ſo long ago, not only your own Actions, but teſtifie to all other mens Actions too that were in the Room?

Mr. T. Smith. I cannot tell what Dr. Oats's memory is as to the time, but I remember the place, the occaſion, and the Perſons that were there.

Mr. J. Jones. And you take upon you to have ſuch a perfect memory, as to the Actions of all the perſons that were in the Room?

Mr. T. Smith. I do not ſpeak of all that was done; but I ſay, I remember no ſuch thing that was ſaid, and I believe no ſuch thing was ſaid, and I have given you my reaſons why. But my Lord, that which I ſay further for Mr. Colledge, is this; I do hear ſomething pretended, as if he provided Arms to go to Oxford. I have known him this three years, or thereabours; and my Lord, I do know that he did uſually ride with a Caſe of Piſtols before him. And before that time I had occaſion to borrow his Horſe of him, at the Election for Weſtminſter the laſt Parliament that ſat there, and I had it then with a Caſe of Piſtols. I likewiſe borrowed it at Michaelmas laſt, the ſame Horſe, and the ſame Piſtols they were, I did at the ſame time ſee a Suit of ſilk Armour, which he told me he did provide againſt the Papiſts, for he ſaid, he did expect we ſhould have a bruſh with them. Said I, do not trouble your ſelf for that, they dare not meddle; ſaid he, this will do no harm. And as I remember, it was a Suit of Armour made of Silk to wear under a Coat.

Coll. It was ſilk Armour only for the thruſt of a Sword. And I aſſure you my Lord, I had but one Suit, but one Caſe of Piſtols, and but one Horſe, I had two before, but they did not then make a Traitor of me, that was all that ever I had, but if I had had ten Horſes, and never ſo many Armours, I declare it upon my Salvation, I intended it for nothing but againſt the Papiſts, if they ſhould make a diſturbance, and whatever I did was with that deſign, and truly by the Grace of God, I would not have been the laſt man then, but I ſee whatever I provided my ſelf with for that, they have turned it all another way, that it might be believed the Proteſtants were againſt the King and the eſtabliſhed Government.

L. C. J. Thoſe Obſervations may be proper for you at laſt, Go on now with your Evidence.

Coll. My Lord, I am not a man of that great memory, I may forget it, and therefore I ſpeak it now whilſt I think of it.

L. C. J. Set it down in your Paper.

Coll. Smith ſays I talked with him coming from Richard's Coffee Houſe till we came to the Tavern, I do declare it, I went away before him, and went away with Dr. Oates.

L. C. J. Ask Mr. Smith that Queſtion if you will.

Coll. Pray Sir, do you know who went together thither?

Mr. T. Smith. I dare not undertake to ſay that, I cannot tell whether he went from the Rainbow Coffee-Houſe with us, or no.

Coll. He ſays after we had dined we divided our ſelves into Cabals, two and two together, I do declare it is that which is the real truth, I fell aſleep behind the Table, if any body was divided it is more than I know, but Mr. Smith you can tell, becauſe he ſays I ſpoke Treaſon to him when I was in the Room, he and I in one Cabal.

Mr. Tho. Smith. My Lord, I remember nothing of that, nor do believe it, for I told you the Room was ſo little that we could not divide our ſelves: And it is impoſſible in ſuch a little Compaſs where we was ſo many as we were, fourteen or fifteen of us; it may be one might talk to another that was next to him, but then the Company muſt hear, and whether they did ſo or no, I cannot tell, I do not remember Mr. Smith's ſaying any thing to any particular Perſon, but the great ingagement was between Dr. Oates and Mr. Savage, and about ſome Queſtions in Divinity, and that is the great matter I took notice of.

Coll. However, my Lord, I declare it, that was above a twelve month ago, and I hope your Lordſhip and the Jury does obſerve that there was no new Arms were found, but what were provided a great while ago; All that know me, know I was never without a Caſe of Piſtols and an Horſe, tho' I was but a Joyner, and there is no more that you ſee now. And as to what Smith ſaid about going into Cabals, that you hear Mr. Smith denies.

L. C. J. Will you call any other Witneſſes?

Coll. Yes, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip. Do you know no more Sir?

Mr. Tho. Smith. I know no other thing, if I did I would declare it.

Coll. Call Dr. Oates's Brother, Mr. Samuel Oates. My Lord, thus you ſee Smith's Teſtimony is falſe.

L. C. J. I do not ſee this contradicts his Oath, for he ſpeaks of ſeveral times that he did ſpeak with you, one was at Wilcox's, which is this they ſpeak of.

Coll. Mr. Smith ſays there was only that great Diſcourſe going on in the Room, and there was no ſuch things as Cabals which he ſpeaks of.

L. C. J. What do you ſay as to this Witneſs?

Coll. Do you know Narrative Smith?

Mr. Oates. Yes Sir.

Coll. What do you know of him; Were you at the Dinner which Mr. Wilcox gave your Brother?

Mr. Oates. Yes, yes, I was at that Dinner.

Coll. Were you at the Coffee Houſe when I went along with your Brother?

Mr. Oates. Yes, we went with you.

Coll. Did Mr. Smith go with us?

Mr. Oates. Yes, Mr. Smith followed us.

Coll. Did you hear any treaſonable diſcourſe between us?

Mr. Oates. Not the leaſt of a little Word.

Coll. Did we go into Cabals two and two together there?

Mr. Oates. There was nothing at all of Cabals that I ſaw, from the time of going to dinner; for we came juſt as Dinner was going into the Room as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What do you mean by Cabals?

Mr. Oates. That is as I diſcern by Mr. Colledge, as if there had been Cabals amongſt the Company.

Mr. J. Jones. That is going by couples.

Mr. Oates. Yes, yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did they talk of?

Mr. Oates. There was nothing at all ſpoken of.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did they ſay nothing all the while?

Mr. Oates. Nothing but matter of common diſcourſe, matters of eating and drinking, and talking of Country Affairs, there were ſeveral that had Lands in the Country, and they were talking of thoſe things.

Mr. J. Jones. Were you there all the while?

Mr. Oates. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Hark you Sir, Were there no Diſputations in Divinity?

Mr. Oates. Not at all.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nor of Philoſophy?

Mr. Oates. No.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Why pray Sir did not Dr. Oates and Mr. Savage talk very pleaſantly of two great Queſtions in Divinity, the Being of God, and the Immortality of the Soul?

Mr. Oates. There was not a Word of that, but only common diſcourſe.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Are you ſure there was no ſuch thing?

Mr.

Mr. Oates. Not that I know of in the leaſt, I ſat at Table with them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was it ſuch a little Room that you could hear all was ſaid?

Mr. Oates. There was Room enough.

L. C. J. People cannot give a perfect account of all things that have paſſed ſo long ago.

Coll. I did not hear that diſcourſe my ſelf, becauſe I was aſleep behind the Table; and perhaps Mr. Oates cannot remember it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was it before dinner, or after dinner that Colledge fell aſleep behind the Table?

Mr. Oates. He was not aſleep to my remembrance all the while.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Recollect your ſelf, pray, was Mr. Colledge aſleep there?

Mr. Oates. I do not remember he was.

L. C. J. 'Tis impoſſible to give an account, and therefore Witneſſes in Negatives are of little value.

Coll. Did Mr. Smith and you and I go together?

Mr. Oates. Mr. Smith followed us.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Oates. For you and I, and my Brother went together; you were a ſaying when we came out of the Coffee-Houſe, in a jocoſe way, Come Doctor, I will go along with you, and be one of your Guard. You ſpoke it in a jeſting way. So you may if you pleaſe, ſaid my Brother. And ſo he went by my Brother's ſide, and I went by Mr. Colledge's ſide.

Coll. Do you remember how long ago that was?

Mr. Oates. It was the laſt Summer, but to ſay exactly what month I cannot.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Oates, anſwer me this Queſtion, pray Sir. Mr. Oates. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. From what place did you go?

Mr. Oates. From Richard's Coffee-Houſe.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who went along with Colledge?

Mr. Oates. He came along with my Brother and me; for he ſaid to my Brother, I will be one of your Guard.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who went along with Mr. Smith?

Mr. Oates. I don't know, I took very little notice of things

Mr. Serj. Jeff. 'Tis ſufficient that he can tell who went with Colledge.

Mr. Oates. I remember one thing: Mr. Smith would fain have perſwaded me into ſomething that my Brother ſhould talk, but I heard nothing; ſaid I, do not examine me upon ſuch things, for I took little notice of any thing; but this I can ſay, whereas he does charge Mr. Wilcox, the Gentleman did not ſpeak five Words all the time he was there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He does not uſe to be ſo melancholy, I aſſure you.

Mr. Oates. I did wonder at it my ſelf, but he was not long with us, for I do not think he was there a quarter of the time; it ſeems he had a Son ſick in the Country, and he was going thither.

Coll. Have you any thing againſt Macnamarra?

L. C. J. He is no Witneſs here.

Coll. Do you know any thing againſt Mr. Dugdale? Mr. Oates. No, not I.

Coll. Then I can ſay no more to you.

L. C. J. Call another Witneſs.

Coll. Call Bolron.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. Do you know John Smith? Mr. Bol. Yes.

Coll. What ſay you againſt him?

Mr. Bolron. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, the laſt 25th of July, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Mowbray, were travelling from York towards London. We lay the 24th at and the 25th we were travelling towards London: Mr. Smith did ask me if I did remember what diſcourſe there was betwixt Sir John Brooks and I at Ferry-bridge when we were coming up before to London? I deſired him to tell me what diſcourſe, and I would tell him if I did remember it or no So my Lord he did ſay, the diſcourſe was, that Sir John Brooks did ſay, there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the Parliament did go provided, ſome with 8, ſome with 6, ſome with 4 men, and they were to meet at Grantham, and go together. This diſcourſe I did remember, That Sir John Brooks ſaid they went with Horſe and Arms to ſecure them from Highway-men; and Sir John Brooks did then further declare, that the diſcourſe was, there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, which made them go with Arms to defend themſelves. Mr. Smith did further upon the 25th, 26th, 27th and 28th of July (and it was our frequent Diſcourſe) tell me, that he had given His Majeſty an Account of it, which occaſion'd the diſſolving of the Parliament: That Diſcourſe that was made to the King, was, that Sir John Brooks ſhou'd ſay, that there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the Parliament-men went provided with 4 or 5, 6 or 10 men apiece; and he did tell me, he had given a further Account, that there was to be a Conſult at Grantham, wherein it was reſolved, that it was better to ſeize the King, than to let him go on. Now, this I knew nothing of but he would have perſwaded me to have given in this Evidence againſt Sir John Brooks, as to this Diſcourſe. But I declare, I did never hear it, and Mr. Smith was the firſt man that ever I heard it from, I never heard it before in my Life.

Colledge. Would he have had you been an Evidence, and ſwore it?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, he ſaid he had given an Account of it to the King, and if I did manage it rightly againſt my Lord Shaftsbury and Colledge, he would make me for ever; thoſe two Perſons were mentioned all along. But I do declare it, I did never hear them ſpeak Treaſon againſt the King in my Life. And he did further tell me, that I muſt ſay ſo and ſo; for if we did not agree, it would ſignifie nothing. But my Lord, I know nothing of the matter, I never heard any one ſpeak of it but Mr. Smith. My Lord, this is true, Mr. Mowbray was the man that was by when it was diſcourſed.

Mr. J. Jones. He would have had you ſworn it, would he?

Mr. Bolron. I diſcovered it to my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you diſcover it?

Mr. Bolron. Soon after I came to Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was it?

Mr. Bolron. Some time laſt Week.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it on Saturday laſt?

Mr. Bolron. It was the beginning of the Week.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Thou art ſuch a Diſcoverer.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, 'tis very true what I ſay. If I had known any ſuch thing, I would have diſcovered it. Mr. Serj. Jeff. Thou wouldſt have diſcovered it before that time, of my Conſcience.

Coll. My Lord, he hath been an Evidence againſt the Papiſts as well as Mr. Smith, and therefore pray Sir George don't make your Flouriſhes upon him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He was an Evidence, but had the misfortune never to be believed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Pictures of Mr. Colledge's making? Have you ſeen Rary Shew?

Mr. Bolron. Never in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you ſhew it in Oxford?

Mr. Bolron. No, never in my Life.

Mr. Serj Holl. Did you never declare to any Gentleman of Oxford, that Colledge made this Picture?

Mr. Bolron. I have ſeen the Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor, but I never ſaw Rary Shew.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Here is the very Gentleman that will make Oath of it.

Mr. Bolron. He was ſuppoſed to make them, I did not know that he did.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I do only deſire one thing, I do not ſay, that you ever had Rary Shew, but did you ever tell any body that Colledge made any of theſe Pictures?

Mr. Bolron. I have heard of ſuch a Paper, but I did never ſee it in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you know that Gentleman, Mr. Bolron? Mr. Bol. I know him not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I would ask you, whether you ever had any Diſcourſe with that Gentleman?

Mr. Bolron. Never in my Life.

Then the Gentleman was ſworn, being a Maſter of Arts.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What is the Gentleman's Name?

Mr. Serj. Holl. Mr. Charlett, of Trinity Colledge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray Sir, do you know that Perſon there?

Mr. Charlett. My Lord, in the new Coffee-Houſe that was by the Schools, that was ſet up in the Parliament-time, there was a Gentleman that is in the Court (I think) one Mr. Daſhwood, and one Mr. Box, were there together to drink a Diſh of Coffee, and hearing that ſome of the Evidence were there, we deſired their Company up, and that Gentleman was one; and among other diſcourſe, they were ſpeaking of ſome Pictures, and they ſhewed us the Picture of the Tantivies.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did this man ſhew it you.

Mr. Charlett. This very man. It was the Pictures of the Tantivies and the Towzer, and he told me they were made by Colledge, he was a very ingenious man.

Mr. Bolron. I know nothing of it, the Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor I have ſeen, but never the other, I never ſhewed him any ſuch thing.

Then the Pictures were ſhewn him.

Mr. Charl. It was ſomething like this, but I cannot ſay for any of the other.

Mr. Bolr. The Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor I ſay I have ſeen, and Colledge himſelf hath told me he made the Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor, I do not deny that I have ſeen that.

L. C. J. Would you ask him any more Queſtions?

Mr. Bolr. My Lord, I have ſomething to ſay concerning Mr. Bryan Haynes; in January, February and April laſt, ſeveral times I was in his Company, and I heard him ſay, he knew nothing of a Popiſh Plot, nor of a Presbyterian Plot neither, but if he were to be an Evidence he did not care what he ſwore, but would ſwear and ſay any thing to get mony. Mr. J. Jones. Did he tell you ſo?

Mr. Bolr. Yes, I did hear him ſay, To day he would be a Papiſt, to morrow a Presbyterian, he did not care for Religion, he would never dye for Religion, he would be of that Religion that had the ſtrongeſt Party. My Lord, he told me ſo at my own Houſe in Fleet-ſtreet.

Coll. He would ſay any thing for mony, pray my Lord take notice of that, for ſo I find he does.

Mr. Bolr. Then there is Dennis Macnamarra, and John Macnamarra.

Mr. Serj Jeff. We have nothing to ſay to them.

Coll. They have been Evidences againſt me, tho' you do not now produce them, they are all in a ſtring, but they are not now brought becauſe my Witneſſes are prepared to anſwer them.

L. C. J. Will you call your next Witneſs?

Coll Mr. Mowbray, pray Sir, do you know Narrative Smith, as he calls himſelf?

Mr. Mowbray, Yes, my Lord.

Coll. What do you know of it?

Mr. Mowbray. I came up from York with him when I returned, after I was commanded down upon the King's account to give in Evidence againſt Sir Miles Stapleton, he came to me the third of Auguſt and called at my Houſe in Yorkſhire, and was very importunate for me to come up to London with him, for he ſaid, he had a Letter come to him which commanded his Preſence at London very ſuddenly, and he produced that Letter which he ſaid came from a Gentleman of the Court, or ſome Court-dependent; ſo he read the Letter in Mr. Bolron's hearing. We ſet forward on Sunday, and upon our Journy to London he told me he had ſomething of importance to impart to me; ſo upon the road he began to diſcourſe of the Parliament and of the illegal Proceedings and Arbitrary Power of the two laſt Parliaments, he ſaid their Proceedings were very Illegal and Arbitrary, and he began to open ſome of the Votes, as that which they voted, that thoſe that ſhould lend the King mony upon the Crown Lands, ſhould be Enemies to the King and Kingdom, and thoſe that counſelled the King to diſſolve the Parliament; and he repeated many Votes, and ſaid he, theſe are ſigns of Arbitrary Power, and certainly they deſign to take off the King; ſo he proceeded further to ask me what was the diſcourſe of Sir John Brooks when he came up before, and he did much importune me to ſay, that Sir John Brooks did affirm there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the King was to be ſeized there. I told him I could have no plauſible pretence, becauſe I had no acquaintance with Sir John Brooks, nor did I come up with him, upon which he applied himſelf to Bolron, and importun'd him for the ſame, he asked me who I came up with, I told him I came up with three Members of Parliament, my Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern; he asked me what Diſcourſe we had upon the Road? And he asked, whether they had any Diſcourſe that tended to juſtifie their former Votes? For he ſaid, if they did think to juſtifie any of thoſe Votes, or if they would not allow the King mony, and ſtood upon the Bill of Excluſion, he ſaid, that was pretence enough for any man to ſwear that there was a Deſign againſt the King, and that the King was to be ſeized at Oxford.

Coll. An excellent pretence indeed, and like the reſt.

Mr. Mow. He would have tempted me to ſwear againſt my Lord of Shaftsbury the ſame. And he ſaid, it would be well if I did appear on Colledge's Trial at Oxon, for it was a thing of great Conſequence; the Popiſh Plot was thrown out of doors, and no man was look'd upon that did ſpeak of it.

Mr. J. Jones. Was all this in the preſence of Mr. Bolron?

Mr. Mowb. No my Lord. When he was diſcourſing about Sir John Brooks, Mr. Bolron rid up to us, and he applied himſelf to him, becauſe I told him I had no plauſible pretence to ſwear againſt him, having no acquaintance with him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray Sir, let me ask you one Queſtion, When came you from York?

Mr. Mowb. We ſet forward the 3d day of Auguſt from Wentbridge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray who came with you in the Company? Mr. Mowb. Mr. Bolron.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That was a Sunday as I take it.

Mr. Mowb. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Then pray how long did you continue before you came to London?

Mr.

Mr. Mowb. I think we came in on the Thurſday after. Mr. Serj. Jeff. When was the firſt time Mr. Smith came into your Company?

Mr. Mowb. Upon the Road on Sunday.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was that the firſt time?

Mr. Mowb. Yes. He had been at York, and went further, and afterwards came to us.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When did you come from York?

Mr. Mowb. About the Thurſday before, if I be not miſtaken.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was it in a Week before?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, within a Week it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you and Mr. Bolron came together? Mr. Mowb. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you left Mr. Smith behind?

Mr. Mowb. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And he overtook you upon the Road?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, he was to go further into the North as ſoon as the Trial of Sir Miles Stapleton was over, and therefore he did very much importune me to ſtay in the Country till he came to go up with me.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What day was the Trial of Sir Miles Stapleton? Mr. Mowb. On the Monday before.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You are ſure of that, and that Mr. Smith went further into the North.

Mr. Mowb. I ſee him take Horſe.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But he did not come into the Company of you and Mr. Bolron till the Sunday after that.

Mr. Mowb. See ye, Sir, He did deſire me to ſtay in the Country till he came, for he had a buſineſs of great Concernment to impart to me, but it would be a Week or a Fortnight e'er he came, but yet he came in a ſhorter time, for he ſaid, he had receiv'd a Letter that brought him up.

Mr. S. Jeff. You are ſure of this? Mr. Mow. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you did not ſee him from the Monday before, till that Sunday?

Mr. Mowb. No, no.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now then, I ask you, where was that place he met with you?

Mr. Mow. At Wentbridge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And then you came from thence towards London the next day. Mr. Mowb. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now would I deſire to know of you, for I perceive he did attack you to ſay ſomething againſt Sir John Brooks, and finding that you could not do it, becauſe you had no Acquaintance, he applied himſelf to Bolron. I would know, was it between that place and London?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And after the 3d of Auguſt?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, it was after we ſet out.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I thought it had been the 24th of July that you ſet out, and continued your Journy the 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th and 29th. Alas, we have loſt a great deal of time between Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray. Bolron ſaid, it was the 25th they lay at ſuch a place, and you are gotten to the 3d of Auguſt; you are miſtaken certainly, as to point of time.

Mr. Mowb. See Sir, I will look in my Almanack, 'tis all ſet down there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Let us ſee now if your Oxford Journy be as well ſet down, as your Journy to London is?

Mr. Mowb. Here is my Almanack, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Here, look upon his Almanack.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Jones, I don't care for his Almanack, I had rather Mr. Mowbray and Mr. Bolron could bring their Almanacks together, and I would have them compared to ſee whether the 3d of Auguſt in one be the 25th of July in the other. Did you diſcourſe with him upon the Road the 3d of Auguſt, and not before, and Bolron that came up with you, diſcourſe with him the 25th of July?

Mr. Mowb. I am miſtaken, I find.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Ay, that you are, one of you moſt groſly.

Mr. Mowb. See, Sir, here is my Almanack, whereby I find that it is my miſtake; but pray ſee, Sir, here it is ſet down, the day we came out was the 24th, the day we came up to London was the 27th.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. How didſt thou ſet out the 3d of Auguſt from that place, and yet come to London the 27th of July?

Mr. Mowb. I will refer myſelf to Mr. Smith, as to the time we came up, and here is my Almanack.

Mr. S. Jeff. I will believe thy Almanack to ſpeak truth, tho' it have never ſo many Errors about the Changes of the Weather, ſooner than I will believe thee. Coll. I perceive the man is miſtaken in the month and the times; but pray my Lord will you pleaſe to ſee, for Juſtice ſake, if the Almanack be new writ. L. C. J. Look you, here is the matter, Mr Colledge, he was asked again and again, what day it was, and he was poſitive to the 3d of Auguſt.

Coll. He was miſtaken, but his Almanack is right.

L. C. J. He ſpeaks raſhly, that is the beſt can be ſaid. Mr. Mowb. It was a miſtake of mine, Sir George, but my Almanack is right.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Nay, Mr. Mowbray, don't enter into Dialogues with me, I only make a little Obſervation upon your Almanack.

Mr. Mow. It was only my miſtake.

L. C. J. You are a raſh man to affirm ſo; if you had an Almanack, you ſhould have conſulted it, or referred to it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nay, we have loſt a day even by your Almanack; for yours ſays it was the 27th you came to Town, Bolron the 28th.

Mr. Mowb. I refer myſelf to Mr. Smith, he can't deny but he came up with us at that time.

Mr Serj. Jeff. You were examined at Sir Miles Stapleton's Trial, was you not, Mr. Mowbray?

Mr. Mow. I was an Evidence there.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Did the Jury believe you?

Mr. Mow. They did acquit Sir Miles Stapleton.

Coll. That is nothing to the purpoſe, ſo was Mr Smith too. L. C. J. Would you ask any thing further? Coll. Call Mrs. Mary Bolron.

L. C. J. If you have any more Witneſſes, pray call them. Mr J. Jones. Mr. Mowbray, was Mr Bolron's Wife by when this Diſcourſe was?

Mr. Mow. No, ſhe was in Town, ſhe did not go down with him at all.

L. C. J. Are you Mr. Bolron's Wife?

Mrs. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask her?

Coll. Mrs. Bolron, pray do you know Mr. John Smith? Mrs. Bolron. Yes, I do know him.

Coll. What can you ſay of him?

Mrs. Bol. He ſent ſeveral times for my husband and Mr. Mowbray to my houſe, ſomething he would have them be concerned in, ſome buſineſs he had in hand. L. C. J. When was that?

Mrs. Bol. Within this three weeks, ſince he came up from York Aſſizes.

Coll. You may ſee there was an underſtanding between them then.

Mr J. Jones. Did they go accordingly?

Mrs. Bol. Now and then they have gone to him, but they knew his buſineſs, becauſe they had diſcourſe with him, as they ſaid, upon the Road, and they would not go.

L. C. J. Would you ask her any thing elſe? What do you know more?

Mrs. Bol. Nothing, for I am not one that ſtirs much abroad. Coll. Call Mr. Everard.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. As for Mr. Everard, I need not ask him whether he knows him, for they know one another well enough. But Mr. Everard, that I would ask you is this, What do you know of Mr. Smith, and of this contrivance againſt me? Mr.

Mr Ever. Mr Smith I have been to see of late, and he told me he knew of no Presbyterian or Protestant Plot, and when my Lord Howard was tried, that is, the Bill brought against him, he said, he wonder'd how my Lord Howard could be guilty, and that both himself and I were join'd as Evidence to that Jury, only to put a gloss upon the Evidence, for says he, I have nothing material to say.

Coll. Mr. Everard, do you know any thing more concerning him, what he hath said at other times concerning me?

Mr. Ever. I have told you already, what I have heard him say, that he thought there was no Protestant or Presbyterian Plot, and that now of late within this little while.

Coll. Pray Sir, was there not some discourse betwixt Justice Warcup and you in Lincolns Inn Walks?

Mr. Ever. Is Justice Warcup an Evidence here?

L.C.J. No, no.

Coll 'Tis all but Evidence of a Prebyterian Plot, therefore pray Sir, what was the discourse between Justice Warcup and you? What would he have had you done? L.C.J. I think it is not material, there is nothing of Mr. Warcup in this Trial.

Mr. Ever. If the Court does allow of it, I will freely tell it.

Coll My Lord, the Papists design is to make a Protestant Plot to turn off their own, and they begin with me, but if I should go, they would not be satisfied with me, they would be as others.

L.C.J. There is nothing concerning a Presbyterian or Protestant Plot in the Case.

Coll. My Lord, if there be no Presbyterian Protestant Plot, and others to join in it, how could I do it by myself? 'tis impossible I should have such a design of seizing the King, and improbable I should speak it. Now my Lord, this man was solicited to come in for an Evidence of such a Plot.

Mr Everard. That is true.

L.C.J. I tell you it is not material, Mr Warcup is not concerned in your Trial.

Mr Ever. Justice Warcup would have perswaded me to have sworn against some Lords a Presbyterian Plot, but I deny that I know any such thing of them. Coll. The Papists aim is not at me only, but at others.

Mr Serj. Jeff. We have nothing to do with what you and Justice Warcup talk'd of. For Example sake my Lord, let us have no discourses that concern third persons brought in here.

L.C.J. Would he have perswaded you to say any thing that was not true?

Mr Ever. He did not say positively those words, but this he said, I knew several Lords——

Mr J. Jones. Now here is Mr Justice Warcup's fame traduced behind his back, in the face of the Country, and it is nothing to this Cause before us.

Coll. My Lord, I desire to know what he knows of these things, and that he may speak it out; 'tis a material thing for me and others: Here is a design of the Papists to turn a Plot upon the Protestants; they begin with me, and if they have my blood, who may feel the effects of it next I cannot tell.

L.C.J. Truly I think it not material to your Case, and indeed 'tis of ill consequence to have any man traduced behind his back, as Mr Warcup is.

Coll. My Lord, Macnamarra told me, that that man would have seduced him to have retracted his Evidence; upon my Salvation 'tis true.

L.C.J. We meddle not with Macnamarra neither, he is no Evidence against you.

Coll. Macnamarra hath sworn against me at the Old Baily, and at the finding of this Bill, but they have laid him by upon some trick or other; I desire Mr Everard may tell what he knows.

Mr Ever. I would not reflect upon any person, nor will I answer it, if the Court do not think fit.

Coll. My Lord, this is foul play, if I die myself for my Country's sake, I can do it freely, and the Will of God be done, I would have the truth out for the sake of the Protestants.

Mr Ever. I am very willing to tell the truth, if the Court think fit.

L.C.J. I see not that he says Mr Warcup would have had him swear that which was not true.

Mr Ever. But this he said, if the Court will allow me to speak it, Justice Warcup said, that certainly there was a Presbyterian Plot, and such things; and that some Lords, some of the Protestant protesting Lords must be guilty of it; and said he, certainly you know much of it, you know such and such things, therefore you may safely swear it, if I knew it; so by argument he would prove first there was a Plot and Combination amongst those Lords, and then said he, this you may safely swear.

Mr J. Jones. What is this to your purpose, Mr Colledge? only Mr Warcup's name is brought upon the Stage when he is not here to vindicate himself.

L.C.J. Would you ask him any thing else?

Coll. If he does know any thing more of any of them, I desire he would speak it.

Mr Ever. Concerning Mr Haynes, he told me it was necessity that drove him to speak any thing against the Protestants, and the hard P. and the gratitude he did receive from the Citizens.

L.C.J. Where did he tell you this?

Then Mr. Jones acquainted the Court, that Mr. Warcup was just come in, and desired to vindicate himself. But the King's other Council waved it, saying, there was no weight in it.

Mr Ever. In the fields near Grays-Inn.

L.C.J. How long since?

Mr Ever. About three weeks ago. I ask'd him, Mr Haynes, said I, I would not draw you from your Testimony in any thing; but how can this be congruous to what you have said formerly, that you knew nothing by them? The truth is, said he, I will not say much to excuse myself, but my Wife was reduced to that necessity, that she begg'd at Rouse's door, and craved some Salary, and Mr Rouse would not give her any; and, said he, meer necessity drove me to it.

Coll. He found better Pay in another place.

Mr Ever. And, says he, 'tis Self-preservation in the next place; for I was brought in guilty when I was taken up, and therefore I was obliged to do some things to save my Life.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, and Gentlemen, observe what this Gentleman says, Haynes takes this course to destroy innocent persons for his own preservation.

Mr Ever. Besides, he told me there is a Judgment impending upon the Nation, said he, either upon the King, or upon the People, I know not which; but these Irish-mens swearing against them, is justly fallen upon them for their Injustice against the Irish in outing them of their Estates.

Coll. So he did it then by way of revenge; for his Countrymen, I have nothing of their Estates, I am sure; therefore they had no cause to swear against me. But, Mr Everard, have you any more to say concerning any of them?

Mr Ever. No more concerning those persons that have sworn against you; I can say no more.

Coll. As to Dugdale or Turbervile?

Mr Everard. No indeed.

Coll. As to this Presbyterian Plot, Sir?

Mr Ever. If the Court does allow concerning other persons; but I would not intrude any thing but what the Court shall think fit.

Coll. I know not but they may come in against me; therefore pray tell what you know. Mr Everard, do you know any thing more? Pray let me know what you know.

Mr Ever. Nothing of any perſon that hath appeared againſt you as yet, but what I have told you. Coll. They may do, Sir.

L. C. J. And then we may properly hear him to them, and not before.

Coll. I deſire to know who they are; pray let me know their names. Mr Everard. Fitzgerald.

L. C. J. He hath been no Witneſs here.

Coll. Call Thomas Parkhurſt.

L. C. J. What do you ask him now he is here?

Coll. What do you know concerning Mr Dugdale?

Mr Parkh. Sir, the latter end of the laſt November, when the Parliament ſat at Weſtminſter, ſeveral times Mr Dugdale having promiſed me his further Narrative to publiſh, which he printed, I met him ſeveral times; one time I met him at Richard's Coffee-houſe, and it was towards the evening before we went away; he told me and Mr Symonds, that he was to ſpeak with Dr. Tongue; and he told us, that this Dr. Tongue did lie at Mr. Colledge's; and he having ſpoken the day before, and ſeveral times, of the danger he was in of his being aſſaſſinated by the Papiſts, Mr. Symonds and I offer'd to go with him, and we took a Coach; for we did not know where Mr. Colledge lived: he had then a Rheum in his eyes, and was not well; ſo we accompanied him to Mr. Colledge's to ſpeak with Dr. Tongue. It was the evening when we went; and whilſt we took a Pipe of Tobacco, in our diſcourſe we were ſpeaking of the times, and of the danger of the Papiſts; ſo Colledge took down a ſteel Hat that hung up there, which he ſaid he had, and he ſaid he had a quilted coat of defenſive Armor, and he ſaid he had a Blunderbuſs in his houſe, and two Piſtols. But I little thought of any thing of this, neither did I know well what I was ſubpœna'd down for: But theſe Arms I ſaw in his houſe, and it was only in diſcourſe that he was provided againſt the Papiſts; ſo I put the ſteel Hat upon my head, and pull'd it off again, and ſo did Mr. Symonds.

Coll. Did I ſay any thing, Sir, who I had thoſe Arms againſt?

Mr Parkh. At that time there was no diſcourſe in the world, but of the danger from the Papiſts; and he ſaid he was provided for them, if they did come to make any diſturbance.

L. C. J. When was it, Sir?

Mr Park. It was about the latter end of November. I have the Narrative that I printed, which was the 23d or 24th, and I have no directions but that to remember the exact time. So we carried Mr. Dugdale home again in a Coach, and gave him a pint of Wine at his Lodgings.

L. C. J. This does not contradict Mr Dugdale at all.

Mr Parkh. Mr Dugdale does own this for a truth.

Mr Serj. Jeff. So may any body own it.

Coll. Where is Mr Symonds? Pray, Sir, what do you know of Mr Dugdale?

Mr Symonds. What about, Sir?

Coll. I have your name here, Sir, but I know not for what.

Mr Symonds. I can ſay the ſame that Mr. Parkhurſt did; that I ſuppoſe is the buſineſs. All I know of it is this; I was with Mr. Parkhurſt and Mr. Dugdale at Richard's Coffee-houſe ſome time in November, I think it was about the printing of Mr. Dugdale's further Information; and Mr. Dugdale was ſaying, Dr. Tongue had ſent for him, but ſpoke as if he was fearful of ſome danger in going alone; ſo we proffer'd to go along with him, and we took a Coach at the Coffee-houſe door, and went with him to Dr. Tongue, who lodged at Mr. Colledge's. When we came into the Room, Mr. Parkhurſt and I thought fit we ſhould in civility withdraw, which we did; and Mr. Colledge brought us down into another Room, where we ſat and took a Pipe of Tobacco, and talking about the common diſcourſe of the times, about the Papiſts, and the danger from them, there hung up in Mr. Colledge's Room ſome Arms; what they were, I dare not charge my memory with to ſwear particularly, but I do think there was a ſilk coat of mail, and there was a cap of ſteel, and as I take it, it was cover'd with cloth, or ſome ſuch thing, what elſe I can't well ſay; I think there was a Blunderbuſs and a Caſe of Piſtols: And all the diſcourſe that I remember then, was only this, ſpeaking of the Papiſts, and ſome fears as if there would be an Inſurrection amongſt them, ſaid he, Let the Papiſt Rogues begin when they will, I am ready to defend myſelf for one. This is all I know.

Coll. Pray Sir, how long ago was this? Dr. Tongue died before Chriſtmaſs at my houſe.

Mr. Sym. I cannot tell exactly when it was; but during the Seſſion of Parliament I am ſure it was, and as I take it, in November, the latter end.

Coll. So then, pray my Lord, ſee that theſe Arms they charge me withal, were provided before Chriſtmaſs.

L. C. J. But there is nothing that contradicts Dugdale's Teſtimony in all this.

Coll. It does ſufficiently contradict him.

L. C. J. I do not ſee that this does at all contradict what he hath ſaid; but do you obſerve what you will upon it, when you come to make your defence.

Stranger. A Gentleman below deſires you to call Mr. Yates.

Coll. Pray Sir, what do you know concerning Dugdale?

Mr. Yates. I know that Mr. Dugdale ſent for me to a Coffee-houſe to beſpeak a Piſtol for you and told me that when I had made the Piſtol, I ſhould deliver it to Mr. Colledge, and Mr. Dugdale promiſed to pay for it when I had done it. Now ſome time after I did ſome ſmall matter for Mr. Dugdale, clean'd his Piſtols, or ſome ſmall buſineſs, and Mr. Dugdale ask'd me if I would drink a pint of Wine, which I agreed to; and being at the Tavern, Mr. Dugdale ask'd me if Mr. Colledge's Piſtol were done. I told him no, it was not as yet. So I ask'd Mr. Dugdale, becauſe he had promiſed to give Mr Colledge a Piſtol, what obligation there was betwixt Colledge and him, that he ſhould give him a Piſtol? to which he anſwer'd, that Mr. Colledge had been ſerviceable to him, in lending him a pair of Piſtols to ride withal ſometimes: So he gave him a Piſtol to ſatisfy him for the wearing of his Piſtols now and then. I thought, ſaid I, Mr. Colledge did impoſe upon your good nature too much, not but that I believe Mr. Colledge is a very honeſt man, and ſtands up for the good of the King and the Government. Yes, ſaid Mr. Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary.

Mr Att. Gen. When was this?

Mr Yates. A little after the Parliament ſat at Oxford; for I never knew Mr. Colledge before Mr. Dugdale ſet me at work for him.

Coll. Mr. Yates, pray was there nothing in the Coffee-houſe about one that he ask'd to go with him, when he ſaid he knew nothing againſt me?

Mr. Yates. I heard one ſay——

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You muſt ſpeak your own knowledge, you muſt not tell a tale of a tub of what you heard one ſay. Mr. Yates. I heard it affirmed——

Mr Serj. Jeff. But by whom?

Mr. Yates. By a perſon in the Coffee-houſe.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Who was that perſon?

Mr Yates. By one of the Servants of the houſe.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence at all; if you know any thing of your own knowledge, ſpeak it.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Is he here?

Mr.

Mr Yates. No, I think not.

Mr J. Jones. How long do you think muſt we ſit here to hear other peoples ſtories?

L. C. J. If you know any thing of your own knowledge, I ſay, ſpeak it.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray let me ask you that queſtion again; When was this that he ſaid he believed he was an honeſt man?

Mr. Yates. It was about three weeks after the Parliament ſat at Oxford.

Coll. Then he does me wrong now; for if I were an honeſt man then, it cannot be true that he ſays of me. L. C. J. Who do you call next?

Coll. Pray, my Lord, who hath been ſworn againſt me?

L. C. J. There is Stephen Dugdale, John Smith, Bryan Haynes, Edward Turbervile, Sir William Jennings, and Mr. Maſters.

Coll. Call Mr. Clayton. My Lord, at his Houſe it was I lay in Oxford, and that Dugdale ſays I ſpake ſome of the treaſonable Words. Pray Sir, do you know what time I came to Oxford?

Mr. Clayton. I remember it very well, it was at the time the Parliament ſat at Oxford, about two or three days after it began.

Coll. Pray what Arms did I bring to your houſe, Sir?

Mr. Clayton. As to the matter of Arms, there was no other but a Sword and a pair of Piſtols, a pair of Piſtols in his Holſters, and his Sword by his ſide.

Mr Att. Gen. Was there no Silk Armor?

Mr. Clayton. I ſaw none, if it pleaſe you; ſuch a thing might be.

Coll. My Lord, I continued at his houſe from my coming in to my going out, and that was till after the Parliament was diſſolved; and I came after they were ſat: But hark you Mr. Clayton, Mr. Dugdale ſays, he was with me at your houſe, did you ever ſee him there?

Mr. Clayton. I remember I have ſeen Dugdale at my houſe, but never in your company.

Coll. Did you ſell any Mum?

Mr. Clayton. No, I never did ſell any in my life.

Coll. Becauſe he ſays we had Mum there.

Mr. Clayton. I never ſaw him there with you, nor changed a word with him, as I know of.

L. C. J. Was he never in the company of Colledge at your houſe? Mr Clayton. Not that I ſaw.

Mr J. Jones. You don't know all the Companies that come into your houſe.

Coll. My Lord, I am told there are ſome that came from the Town where I was born, that know me, and have known me for 24 or 25 years together, if you think that material for me to prove whether I am a Proteſtant or no.

L. C. J. If you will make that out, you may. But 'tis your Loyalty that is in queſtion. If you will produce any that can make it appear, that you uſe to honor the King in your diſcourſe, or ſo, that is ſomething.

Coll. If I am a Proteſtant, then the deſign is plain, theſe men ſwear to make a Proteſtant Plot, and turn the Plot off the Papiſts.

Mr Serj. Jeff. What Church do you frequent in London to hear Divine Service?

Coll. I have received the Sacrament ſeveral times, Sir George.

Mr Serj. Jeff. When were you laſt at the publick Church?

Coll. I hope I may be a Proteſtant if I have not gone thither; but however, I do uſe to go to Church. L. C. J. Well, call whom you will.

Coll. Is Thomas Deacon there? Mr Deacon. Yes.

Coll. He lives my Lord in the Pariſh where I was born. If you pleaſe Mr Deacon to give my Lord an account what you know of me from my Childhood?

Mr Deacon. I have known Mr Colledge ever ſince he was a youth, he was born in the Town where I live. L. C. J. Where is that?

Mr Deacon. At Watford, a Town in Hertfordſhire. There he lived till he was a man, and married a Neighbor's Daughter of mine, and lived there while he had two Children; I never knew but that he was a very honeſt man, frequented and kept to the Church of England all along, and paid every man his own.

Mr Att. Gen. How long is it ago ſince he left that place?

Mr Deac. I can't directly tell how long it is truly, but I think 'tis eighteen years ſince you left Watford. Coll. 'Tis fourteen years ago.

Mr J. Jones. You ſay fourteen, and they ſay eighteen. Mr Deac. I ſay, I can't exactly tell.

Coll. But, Mr Deacon, I have been in your Country lately.

Mr Deac. He uſed to come there once or twice a year generally to ſee his friends. I have heard him declare himſelf againſt the Popiſh Church always very much.

L. C. J. Did you never hear him talk againſt the Government? Mr Deac. No, never in my life.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Nor againſt the King?

Mr Deac. Nor againſt the King.

Mr J. Jones. Was he in your Country the laſt Eaſter?

Mr Deac. I think it was about Eaſter he was there.

Mr J. Jones. Was he at Church there then, and received the Sacrament?

Mr Deac. I know not whether he was there on the Lord's-day or no: He did quarter at another Town, at Buſhy, where he has a Brother-in-law.

L. C. J. Well, call another.

Coll. Mr Whitaker.

L. C. J. What is your Chriſtian name?

Mr Whit. William. L. C. J. What do ask of him?

Coll. Whether he knows me and my Education?

Mr Whit. Sir, I have known him this 26 years: I knew his Parents, I know his mother, ſhe lives now at Watford: I have known his behaviour to be very civil and good; a very good Church-man he was when he lived with us; and I have inquired, and find he has the ſame Reputation in the Pariſh where he laſt lived in Black-fryers: He was no Jeſuit nor Papiſt I dare aver; he hath flouted them and mock'd them with their wooden Gods, and the like; for he could never endure that Perſwaſion.

L. C. J. He is not queſtion'd for that, but for Treaſon.

Coll. Did you ever hear me ſpeak any thing againſt the Government?

Mr Whit. I never knew any ill behaviour of him in my life.

Coll. But did you ever hear me ſay any thing againſt his Majeſty or the Government?

Mr Whit. Never that I know of. I knew him a Soldier for his Majeſty, in which Service he got a fit of ſickneſs, which had like to have coſt him his life; he lay many months ill, to his great charge.

Mr Serj. Jeff. Where was it he was in his Majeſties Service?

Mr Whit. At Chatham buſineſs.

Coll. It was under my Lord Rocheſter. But my Lord, I have a Teſtimonial under the hands of ſeventy people of Watford, to give an account of my good behaviour.

Mr J. Jones. He hath been gone thence theſe eighteen Years.

Mr Whit. He hath come there almoſt every half Year, ſometimes three or four times in a Year, becauſe his mother lives there now, and he came to pay his reſpects to her. His Children lived and went to School with us.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Come, who do you call elſe?

Colledge. Mr. Neale.

Mr. Neale. I can ſay no more than the other Men before me. I know the Man, he was bred and born at Watford, he lived there ſeveral Years, he married a Wife out of the Neighbourhood, frequented the Publick Worſhip.

L. C. J. How long ago is this?

Mr. Neale. Sixteen or ſeventeen Years ago. But then he uſed to come once or twice a Year into the Country.

Colledge. Did you ever hear me ſpeak any thing againſt the King or the Government?

Mr. Neale. No, never in my Life.

Colledge. How long is it ago ſince you were in my Company laſt?

Mr. Neale. When you were in Town laſt, I never heard you ſay any thing that was ill.

Colledge. How long ago is it ſince we were at the White-Hart together?

Mr. Neale. It was about Spring.

Colledge. I ſaid right, my Lord, I was there about Eaſter. Pray, did you ever hear me ſpeak for the King?

Mr. Neale. Truly, the Diſcourſe we had I never uſed to keep in my Mind, but I never heard him ſpeak any thing againſt the King or the Government.

L. C. J. Were you much converſant with him?

Mr. Neale. When he came down to give his Mother a Viſit, and ſee his Neighbours, we uſed always to ſee one another.

Colledge. Pray will you call Mr. Tanner and Mr. Remington.

[Mr. Remington ſtood up.]

Mr. Remington. I ſay I have known Stephen Colledge theſe Forty Years, and I have known that he always was an honeſt Man. He was a Soldier ſome time, but he always went to Church, was no Conventicler; and uſed to viſit his Neighbours when he came down to ſee his Mother, and was always looked upon to be a very good Man.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You ſay you knew him a Soldier, pray when was that?

Mr. Remington. About the time of Harwich buſineſs. That is all I can ſay.

[Then Mr. Tanner ſtood up.]

L. C. J. Come, what ſay you? what do you ask him, Mr. Colledge?

Mr. Tanner. I have known Stephen Colledge from a Child Forty Years, he was born at Watford, his Father worked with my Father, and great intimate Acquaintance we had with him, and ſaw him very often; I never knew any Fault in him, and I never heard a bad report of him in all the Town of Watford.

Mr. Serjeant Jefferies. Have you ſeen him at Church lately?

Mr. Tanner. No, I have not.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would fain know whether this Man hath been at Church himſelf; he looks as if he had not.

Colledge. I know not whether he hath been at the Church you mean, or no; but he may be an honeſt Man and a Proteſtant for all that.

L. C. J. Call another.

Colledge. Mr. Peter Norreys.

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Mr. Colledge? here he is.

Colledge. Do you know any thing concerning Mr. Smith?

Mr. Norreys. I was once in the Hercules Pillars where was Sir William Waller, Macnamarra, Mr. Ivy, and five or ſix of us together: and Mr. Smith was there, and we were talking concerning the Parliament approaching at Oxon.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Tell the Names of the reſt.

Mr. Norreys. Sir William Waller, Macnamarra, Mr. Ivy, Mr. Lewes, Macnamara's Brother, and I, and Mr. Smith.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Well ſaid; we don't meddle with any of theſe, but Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. Was John Smith there?

Mr. Norreys, He was there.

L. C. J. Well, go on then.

Mr. Norreys. We were talking of the Parliament at Oxon: Says Sir William Waller, Moſt of the Parliament-men are afraid to go up to the Parliament. Truly, ſaid Mr. Smith, I hope they will be provided to go, if they do go. Says Sir William Waller, I ſhall be provided with the reſt of my Friends: And Mr. Colledge ſaid, I will go up with the reſt of the Parliament-men; I ſhall be provided too, ſays moſt of the Evidence: ſays Sir William Waller, Will you go along with me, and I will provide you with an Horſe? ſaid he, I have a Horſe of my own, and if it pleaſe God I will have nothing elſe to do but to go with the Parrliament, and I will not neglect it. This was all the Diſcourſe of the Company for that Night.

Colledge. Did you hear Mr. Smith ſay any thing againſt me?

Mr. Norreys. No, not a word at all.

Colledge. But this were a material Evidence againſt others of the Confederates, if they had been examined.

Mr. Norreys. My Lord, I was at the Amſterdam Coffee-Houſe the twenty third of June laſt, and there was Mr. Denis Macnamara; ſaid he, Will you go, and I will give you a Pot of Ale.

L. C. J. There is nothing of Denis Macnamara in queſtion before us. If you have any thing to ſay againſt any of the Witneſſes that have been Sworn, go on with your Evidence, we muſt not hear Stories of other People.

Colledge. He would ſpeak againſt ſome Men that have Sworn againſt me, but are left out, for ſome Reaſons I know not. Pray call Mr. Thomas Norreys.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Colledge. My Lord, he knew me in this Country ſome fifteen or ſixteen Years ago.

Mr. T. Norreys. My Lord, I have been acquainted with Mr. Colledge about ſixteen or eighteen Years, and he hath always carried himſelf very civilly and well, and he kept to the Church for a conſiderable time, as duly as any Pariſhioner did.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. T. Norreys. This ſixteen Years.

L. C. J. You live in this Country, don't you?

Mr. T. Norreys. Yes, at Aylworth.

Colledge. I was at Aſtrop-Wells laſt Year. I believe Mr. Juſtice Levins ſaw me there.

Mr. T. Norreys. Yes, I was there with you.

Colledge. We did diſcourſe commonly then con-concerning the Papiſts. Pray, Sir, did you find me inclined to the Popiſh Intereſt?

Mr. T. Norreys. You ſpoke very much againſt them.

Colledge. Did you ever hear me ſpeak againſt the King or the Government?

Mr. T. Norreys. No, I never heard it; for if he were my Brother, I ſhould have diſcovered it.

L. C. J. How often have you ſeen him?

Mr. T. Norreys. Very often, and converſed much with him.

Colledge. My Lord, as to the Papers charged upon me that they were mine, I declare I know not of them. Dugdale ſays I owned them, and the Letter and ſeveral Prints; but truly, my Lord, I had done my ſelf a great injury if I had done or owned thoſe things he hath charged me withal. I never could make a Picture, nor never did draw a Picture in my life; and that very Perſon that he ſays I owned I got it to be printed by, hath denyed it before the King and Council; for he there teſtified, that he did not know the Perſon that cauſed it to be printed.

L. C. J. How came you to have ſo many ſeized in your Houſe?

Colledge. My Lord, here is Elizabeth Hunt, the Maid by whom they were taken in, and who can give you an account of it. I cannot deny but that they were in my Houſe; but that I was the Author, or did take them in, is as great a miſtake as ever was made. Call Elizabeth Hunt. I do not know whether Curtis be in Town; but this I am confident, he was examined before the King and Council, and he and his Wife denyed it.

L. C. J. He ſhall be called if he be here.

Colledge. I know nothing of the printing of them, nor was I the Author of them.

L. C. J. They were diſperſed by you up and down.

Colledge. That they were in my Houſe, I believe, my Lord; and this Woman will tell you how, my Lord. Pray tell the Court how theſe Papers that are called the Raree-ſhew came to be in my Houſe.

El. Hunt. A Porter brought three bundles to our Houſe, and asked whether my Maſter was not within. I told him, no, he was not. Said he, Theſe Papers are to be left here; ſaid I, Who do they come from? ſaid he, 'tis all one for that, you muſt pay me, and I muſt leave them here; ſo I gave him ſix pence, and he left the Papers, but I never ſaw the Man ſince nor before. And, my Lord, I never read them what they were, but I ſaw they were ſuch ſort of Prints as thoſe.

L. C. J. How long was it before they were ſeized?

El. Hunt. A matter of ſeven or eight Weeks.

Colledge. My Lord, it ſeems they were put in a Box, and left in my Counting Houſe: I never touched them, but there they ſtaid, for ought I know, till they were taken.

L. C. J. You were Colledge's Servant, were you not?

El. Hunt. Yes, my Lord.

Colledge. My Lord, I neither knew the Printer nor the Author; but I heard a Man was in Trouble about them, upon a By-Law in the Stationers Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you by that Original?

Colledge. Have you it there? I know of none was produced. But if I were a Perſon concerned, it were no Treaſon, and, my Lord, I hope you will do me that Juſtice, to let the Jury know they are not Treaſon, none of theſe Papers. And I do declare I know nothing of the Original, the Printer, nor the Author.

L. C. J. You ſpend time in making Obſervations out of Order of Time: when you have given your Evidence, then make your Obſervations.

Colledge. I confeſs I may err, as to matter of Order, for I never was in this Capacity before. But, pray, do you tell the Court how the Papers came there, and all the Tranſactions. For I was a Priſoner when they came and ſearched.

L. C. J. No, it was eight Weeks before you were taken they were left there.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you not tell your Maſter ſoon after they were left there?

El. Hunt. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Within what time did you tell him?

El. Hunt. I believe it was a Week or a Fortnight.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was your Maſter all that time?

El. Hunt. He was in the Country.

Colledge. My Lord, I did ſee them there, I muſt confeſs, I do not deny but I ſaw them there, but I knew not whence they came, nor whoſe they were. Nor did I ever intend to meddle with them, nor concern my ſelf about them. What have you to ſay more?

El. Hunt. Concerning Mr. Dugdale, if I may ſpeak.

L. C. J. Ay, go on.

El. Hunt. I went to receive the Money of Mr. Dugdale that he owed my Maſter, and asking him for it, he ſaid, he would pay me ſuch a time to morrow morning, if I would come for it; but when I came, he had not the Money ready for me. Sir, ſaid I, I think 'tis very hard that you ſhould keep my Maſter's Money from him, and yet you go and Swear againſt his Life too: what do you think we ſhall do at home in the Family, if you keep my Maſter's Money and he be in Priſon? Said he, There is a great deal of do about my Swearing againſt your Maſter, more than needs; but as I hope for Salvation, I do not believe Mr. Colledge had any more hand in any Conſpiracy againſt His Majeſty, than the Child unborn. Here is Dugdale, let him deny it if he can.

Mr. Dugdale. As I hope for Salvation I did not ſay ſo.

El. Hunt. Upon my Salvation 'tis true what I ſay.

Stevens. This was the Maid that hid her Maſter's Papers when they were ſearched for.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Be quiet; art thou got into Dialogues with the Maid now?

Colledge. Mr. Stevens, 'tis well known what a Man you are to propogate Witneſſes. My Lord, ſhe gave me an account of this in the Tower, before I came away, that Dugdale deſired to ſpeak with Mr. Smith, and told her, that nothing that he had to ſay would touch my Life.

El. Hunt. As I am alive 'tis true.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale denies it now.

El. Hunt. He is not a right Man if he denies it, for he told it me twice.

Colledge. I told Mr. Smith of it, when he had leave leave to come to me: I told him what the Maid ſaid he had ſaid to her, and this was three Weeks ago; ſaid he, I will ſpeak with him with all my Heart, if he has a mind to ſpeak with me; for he hath ſaid that he hath nothing againſt her Maſter that can touch an Hair of his Head, nor nothing that can touch his Life, that he knew nothing of a Plot or contrivance againſt the King; and if I could help it, I had as lieve have given a hundred Pound I had never ſpoken what I have. This he ſaid to her.

L. C. J. You tell her what to ſay.

El. Hunt. Sir, he does not tell me; for Mr. Dugdale ſaid thoſe very things to me.

Colledge. This is an account I had when I was a Priſoner; I could not direct her.

L. C. J. Do you deny what they ſay to be true, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, ſhe came to me for Money; I told her I had it not ready, but would pay her: And in the Shop, before the Apprentice-boy, ſhe deſired of me that I would write two or three Words what I had to ſay againſt her Maſter; and I told Mr. Graham of it. So, ſaid I, I cannot tell, I have not the Papers, nor what Informations I have given againſt him. So ſhe came again the next Morning, and ſhe was at me to write down what I ſaid. I wonder, ſaid I, your Maſter will ſend you! had not he as good ſend Mr. Smith, who is his Counſel? And this was all the Words we had.

El. Hunt. My Lord, I do ſolemnly aſſure you, he ſaid he would write down what he had ſaid againſt my Maſter, and would fain ſpeak with Mr. Smith; for there was more ado made about it than needs.

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Graham can tell what it was; for I came and told him immediately.

L. C. J. Did you tell her you had nothing to ſay againſt her Maſter that would touch his Life?

Mr. Dugdale. I could not ſay that I had ſaid nothing againſt her Maſter; for ſhe asked me that I would write down what I had ſaid; but I told her I knew not what was Treaſon, that muſt be referred to the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did he ſpeak it openly or privately to you?

El. Hunt. He did not ſpeak it aloud; no body heard him but my ſelf.

Mr. Dugdale. It was in the Shop, and the Apprentice-boy was by.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Was this after he had been at the Old-bayly, or before?

El. Hunt. Yes, it was after he had been at the Old-bayly, and after he had been at Oxon too.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Then it was before the Court, what could be made of it.

Colledge. She hath gone forty times for the Money I lent him out of my Pocket; and I lent him that, when I had little more my ſelf.

El. Hunt. I did tell him, Mr. Dugdale, if you can't let me have my Maſter's Money, if you pleaſe to tell me what you have made Oath againſt my Maſter. Said he, I can't let thee have it now; but thou ſhalt have what I have to ſay againſt him: I will draw it up in Writing, and thou ſhalt have it to Morrow-morning. The next Morning I came to him again, and, ſaid I, I am come again; what muſt I do? Said he, I have no Money; ſuch an one hath not helped me to it. Sir, then ſaid I, I hope you will be as good as your Word, to let me know what you have made Oath againſt my Maſter. Said he, I was about it Yeſterday, but could not do it: But, Sweetheart, ſaid he, (and took me by the Hand) I will give you a Copy of it to Day at ten of the Clock; and if I do not, I will tell it thee by Word of Mouth. So I came to the Houſe at ten, and ſtaid till eleven, but did not ſee him.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You had a great mind to be tampering.

El. Hunt. The firſt time, he asked me who was his Council; I told him, Mr. Smith; then ſaid he, I have a great deſire to ſpeak wit hhim So I told my Maſter of it.

Colledge. My Lord, you ſee it is but black and white, all this whole contrivance upon me. She hath proved I knew nothing of theſe Papers; and indeed I did not.

L. C. J. Do you call any more Witneſſes?

Colledge. There is my Brother-in-law that received thoſe Papers. Call George Spur and Sarah Goodwin.

[Mrs. Goodwin appeared.]

Colledge. Do you know any thing of the Papers that were carried to my Brother George Spur's?

Mrs. Goodwin. Yes, I do. The Saturday after my Brother's Confinement, about eight of the Clock in the Morning, I having heard of it, came into the Houſe, and in a quarter of an hour's time, in comes a Waterman and deſires an handful or two of Shavings. I knowing not who he was, nor what he deſired them for, told him, he ſhould have them; ſo he went up to the working Shop to gather them, for he pretended that to be his buſineſs.

L. C. J. Whoſe Waterman was it?

Mrs. Goodwin. A Waterman I ſuppoſe that belonged to His Majeſty, for he had a Coat marked with R. C.

Colledge. This is after I was in Cuſtody.

Mrs. Goodwin. Yes, it was the Saturday after. So no ſooner had he the Shavings, but he goes out of the Shop, and comes in again with Three of His Majeſty's Meſſengers, and they made enquiry after Papers, and I being innocent of concealing any Papers, or any thing, ſaid I know of none; ſo they came to one Box that had the Tools for the Men to work with, and they demanded the Keys. I told him I knew not where the Keys were. So they went to the next and found it open, but nothing did they find there; there was a Bed wherein formerly my Brother's Servants did lie: Said one to the other, Look well whether there be not ſomething hid in that Bed; ſaid I, I ſuppoſe there is no ſuch thing as you inquire for: if you pleaſe, you may take off the Cloths, and gave them free toleration to look; but for the Cheſt, I would not deliver the Keys, becauſe the Man was not there that owned it. In their ſearching, they flung down the Wainſcote, and did a great deal of damage to his Goods. Gentlemen, ſaid I, I ſuppoſe you have order to ſearch, but none to ſpoil a Man's Goods. When they were gone, having found none, they threatned, God damn them they would have them, for there they were. But I being ignorant of the concealment of the Papers, I requeſted the Maid and my Brother's Son, whether they knew of any Papers, and they ſatisfied me they knew of ſome Prints that were brought by a Porter, to be left at my Brother's, but they knew not whence they came came, nor what they were: and the ſame anſwer gave my Brother's Son, that he did not know whoſe the Papers were. But ſince his Father's Confinement they were laid up ſure and ſafe, for they knew not what they concerned. Upon this, my Lord, my Brother-in-law, George Spur, he comes into the Houſe, and if it pleaſe your Honour, I requeſted him to carry them into the Country to his Houſe, to ſecure them till we knew what they did concern, and who they did belong to. Whereupon he replied, my Lord, That he was fearful to carry any thing out of the Houſe; ſaid I, if you will pleaſe to take them of me, I will carry them out of the Houſe for your Security, becauſe his Wife looked every Hour (being with Child) when ſhe ſhould be delivered, and he was fearful of troubling her. So I carried them out of the Houſe, and delivered them to him.

L. C. J. To whom?

Mrs. Goodwin. To my Brother-in-law Mr. George Spur. So at my going out, after I had delivered them to him, in my way back again, I found a ſmall Paper-Book, and a ſmall parcel of Writings; who dropped them, or who laid them there, I cannot tell. But taking them up unadviſedly, I put them among the Prints which I carried out, I delivered them to my Brother-in-law. This is all I have to ſay, as to the Papers.

Stevens. Three parts of what ſhe hath ſaid is falſe.

Mr. Serjeant Jefferies. Well, hold you your Tongue.

Stevens. Mr. Atterbury is here, my Lord, that ſearched the Houſe.

Atterbury. Be pleaſed to give me my Oath, I will tell you what paſſed.

Mr. Att. Gen. We don't think it material, but you were Sworn before, ſtand up.

L. C. J. Tell the manner of finding the Papers. This Woman gives us an account of a Waterman that came in, pretending to fetch Shavings.

Atterbury. Upon my Oath it was not ſo. The Waterman was a Waterman that brought me and two more of my Fellows, and the Waterman followed us into the Yard, but came after us: and being order'd to look for Papers, I did ſearch the Houſe; for I had Intelligence that there were Papers there, but I did not find them there. But upon finding the firſt Papers, I made the more diligent ſearch, but could not find the reſt I moſt chiefly ſought after.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did the King's Waterman take any Shavings by himſelf?

Atterbury. We were altogether, we did not move out of any one Room, but together; this Gentlewoman was in the Houſe when I came, and there was a little Child, a Girl, and this Maid was there.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you come for Shavings there, pray Mr. Atterbury?

Atterbury. No, I did not.

Mrs. Goodwin. The Waterman did though firſt.

Colledge. Call George Spur. (But he did not appear.) But Mr. Atterbury, before you go down, pray tell the Court, did you take any of theſe Papers at my Houſe, or at my Brother-in-law Spur's Houſe?

Sewel. My Lord, I took the Papers, and I took them at Buſhy at Spur's Houſe. And this Woman carried out one half to Spur, and the Maid carried out the other.

L. C. J. When did he carry them?

Mrs. Goodwin. The ſame Day they ſearched for them, for my Brother came in at the ſame time.

L. C. J. How do you know Spur carried any away?

Mrs. Goodwin. He carried none out of the Houſe, I carried them out of the Houſe and delivered them to him.

L. C. J. Then they were in your Houſe?

Mrs. Goodwin. They were in the Counting-houſe.

Colledge. My Lord, if they were in any other place, I know not how they came there, for this was all done after I was a Priſoner; and Sewel ſays they were removed when I was a Priſoner. Where is George Spur?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It is admitted they were at your Houſe, and taken thence; and afterwards carried to Spur's.

Colledge. They carried them abroad and handed them from one to another, and took them into the Country, I know not what they did with them: but, my Lord, I neither know the Printer nor the Author, I declare it upon my Life.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Colledge. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. Will you that are of Council for the King call any more?

Mr. Att. Gen. One or two if you pleaſe, my Lord. Call John Shirland. And it is to this purpoſe; it ſeems very lately Mr. Bolron would have tempted him to have forſworn himſelf.

Colledge. My Lord, I hope if they bring in any Perſons of new Evidence, I may have leave to contradict them.

L. C. J. You need not fear but you ſhall be heard to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall prove Bolron to be a Suborner of Witneſſes; and that the Jury may know what he is, he and Mowbray have gone to give Evidence at ſeveral Trials, and the Jury would never believe them when they were on their Oaths.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I think it needs not, time hath been ſpent enough already.

Colledge. No Whiſpering, good my Lord.

Sir G. Jefferies. Good Mr. Colledge, you are not to tell me my Duty here.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Is it not lawful for the King's Council to confer together?

Colledge. Not to whiſper, my Lord, all ought to be ſpoken out.

L. C. J. Nothing ought to be ſaid to the Jury indeed privately.

Mr. Att. Gen. But ſhall not we talk among ourſelves?

Colledge. No, I hope not, of any thing that concerns my Trial.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You are deceived in that.

Colledge. I think 'tis Law, that all ought to be publick; I beg your Pardon if I am in the wrong.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear John Shirland. (Which was done.) Pray give the Court and the Jury an account of Bolron, what you know of him, Shirland. Bolron, my Lord, laſt Whitſon-Tueſday, would have given me Ten Pounds and an Horſe to go down and Swear againſt Sir Miles Stapleton. I was to ſwear I was ſuborned by his Friends, and ſeveral other Perſons, which I have diſcovered upon my Oath.

L. C. J. Is this Man Sworn?

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes.

L. C. J. Now call Bolron to confront him.

Colledge. He offered you an Horſe, as much as I offered Turbevil an Horſe, and I never offered him an Horſe in the World.

[Then Bolron appeared.]

L. C. J. Is this the Man, Shirland?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give you Ten Pounds to Swear?

Shirland. He bid me Ten Pounds and an Horſe to ſwear againſt Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Juſtice Jones. Did you ever ſee him, Bolron?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, he was to have been a Witneſs againſt Sir Miles Stapleton, and he pretended that he was Suborned by Sir Miles, or ſome of his Friends.

Colledge. What are you, Sir? Mr. Bolron, what is Mr. Shirland?

Mr. Bolron. He is a Man that lives by his Shifts: He hath been whip'd in Bridewel.

Colledge. Do you know him, Sir? what is he?

Mr. Bolron. Even an idle Man.

Shirland. You, once when you ſaw me, drew your Sword on me, becauſe I would not do as you would have me.

Mr. Bolron. I profeſs, my Lord, 'tis not ſo.

Att. Gen. Here is Mr. Smith, hear what he ſays againſt Mr. Bolron.

Mr. Smith. As we were coming up along, he was ſpeaking to me of Colledge, and told me, he had as much to ſay againſt him as any body; and if I would ſpeak for him, he would evidence againſt Sir John Brookes for a Diſcourſe at Ferrybridge.

Mr. Bolron. I never did hear any ſuch thing.

Mr. Smith. No Man in your own Country will believe you.

Colledge. They believed you no more, it ſeems, neither.

L. C. J. Do you call any more Witneſſes, Gentlemen?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, I think we need not.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, as I underſtand it, the King's Council will produce no more Witneſſes. You may make what Obſervations you will upon the Evidence to the Court, and then muſt them make what Obſervations they will to the Court; and then we will give the Charge to the Jury.

Colledge. My Lord, I have only Innocence to plead; I have no Flouriſhes to ſet off my Defence. I cannot take the Jury nor the Court with an Oratory; I am unhappy in thoſe things. But, my Lord I do declare, as to my own particular, in the preſence of God Almighty, That as to whatſoever is ſworn againſt me, as to the ſeizing His Majeſty, providing Arms, or having any deſign either at Oxford or London, or any other Place in the World, to ſeize upon the Perſon of the King, or to rebel againſt the Government eſtabliſhed; I vow to God Almighty, I never had ſuch a thought in me: 'tis a truth, my Lord. My Lord, they have ſworn deſperately againſt me, and it hath appeared, I think, by very credible Perſons, that they have contradicted one another. It hath been proved that this was a deſign; that they were tampered withal; that they complained they were in Poverty, that they wanted maintenance; and they did confeſs they were tempted to come over to ſwear againſt Proteſtants: and now the Lord knows they have cloſed with it, and they begin with me. I hope the Jury have taken notice that I have contradicted them ſufficiently in what they have ſworn; and that it is not poſſible, if I had a grain of ſence, for me to diſcover my ſelf to be ſuch an one to Haynes that was an Iriſh-man, and ſhould ſpeak all the Treaſon that he hath galloped thro' at firſt ſight, that as ſoon as ever I ſaw him, that I ſhould ſpeak ſo to him; I hope you will conſider whether it conſiſts with common Reaſon, when there could be no probability of making any uſe of him in the World. My Lord, all my Witneſſes that I have brought, your Lordſhip can, and I hope will ſum them up better than I can; for I declare it, I have been ſo concern'd, that I have not been able to write half of it down. But I think there is never a Man that hath ſworn againſt me, but hath been ſufficiently confuted by Perſons of Integrity and Honeſty, Men of Principles, and Men of Religion; they are ſuch, my Lord, that make Conſcience of what they ſay: they are Perſons altogether unknown to me, moſt of them, as to what they had to ſay, it was what they offered voluntarily; and I am certain they have had nothing but their bare Charges, if they had that, for their Pains in coming hither; and, my Lord, there is no probability that they ſhould come and atteſt any thing that is falſe, for me who am a Stranger, for nothing: No Man is a Knave for nothing, as I believe theſe Men are not. My Lord, I do declare it, I was bred a Proteſtant, and have lived ſo; I am ſo to this very Day; I have been a Lover of the Church of England, and of all the fundamental points of Doctrine believed in it; I own the ſame God, the ſame Saviour, the ſame Goſpel, and the ſame Faith; I never had a prejudice againſt any Man in the Church in my Life, but ſuch as have made it their buſineſs to promote the intereſt of the Papiſts, and ſuch I muſt beg leave to ſay there are amongſt them: for there is no Society in the World without ſome bad Men; and theſe do promote the intereſt of the Papiſts, by dividing the Proteſtants, and allowing none to be true Proteſtants but thoſe that are within the Church of England eſtabliſhed by Law; which is a Notion ſo wide I could never cloſe with that. I never had a prejudice againſt any Man but a Knave in my Life. I have heard, I confeſs, ſome of the Diſſenters, and I have found very honeſt, juſt, pious, godly Men among them; Men free from Oaths and all Debauchery; Men that make a Conſcience of what they ſay: not like ſome Perſons that ſay they are of the Church of England, that carry themſelves in their Lives and Actions, ſo as that no credit can be gained to the Church by them. My Lord, I have been an hearty Man againſt the Papiſts; I have been an hearty Man as any Perſon of my Condition, for Parliaments, which I look upon to be my Birthright, and under God Almighty, the Bulwark of our Liberty; and I am ſorry if any Man ſhould be an inſtrument to create a miſunderſtanding betwixt the King and the Parliament: for I always thought I ſerved my Country, when I ſerved the Parliament, and I ſerved my King when I ſerved my Country. I never made any difference between them, becauſe I thought them both one. I had the honour to be entruſted by them before, and upon that account I came voluntarily down hither. I rid my own Horſe, I ſpent

ſpent my own Money, and eat my own Bread; I was not beholding to any Man for the value of ſix pence all the while I was here. My Lord, I have ever ſince the Plot hath been diſcovered, endeavoured with all my Heart, and all my Power, to detect and come at the very bottom of it: I have ſpared for no time nor pains, what lay fairly in my way, in every thing to encourage thoſe that diſcover'd the Villanies of the Popiſh Plot againſt the Life of the King, and for the Subverſion of the Religion and Government eſtabliſhed by Law. Now certainly it is not ſtrange to the World; for I think all Chriſtendom is aware how plain the Popiſh Plot hath been proved. Theſe Men that ſwear againſt me, were they that uſed to follow me ſometimes; they would ſay, it was they that had come to ſave our Lives, and yet we let them want Bread. That Argument, my Lord, was ſo fair, that I thought it unreaſonable to ſee them ſtarve: And I have ſaid ſometimes to ſome honeſt conſiderable Men, That it was hard they ſhould have this to ſay of us, That they ſhould want Bread to eat that were the King's Evidence, to detect a Popiſh Plot wherein we our ſelves were concerned; and that when they had ſaved our Blood in our Veins, they ſhould be ſuffered to ſtarve. And one time, I think, ſome three or four Gentlemen of the City did give me 42 s. or 40 s. and 18 d. or thereabouts; which I did diſtribute amongſt them: and they never came to me in my Life, but to ſeek Relief, they knowing that I had a general Acquaintance. And ſometimes they thought it might be fit to petition the Common-Council of the City of London to take care of them: Sometimes they would ſpeak to me to ſpeak to particular Men, that care ſhould be taken of them. At other times indeed it was not this ſort of Diſcourſe they had with me; but they would pretend they had ſomething to diſcover of the Popiſh Plot, and ſo they would apply to me as a Man of ſome Acquaintance. And the firſt time I ſaw Haynes, was upon ſuch an account, the beginning of March laſt, and it was thus: I was at Richard's Coffee-Houſe at Temple-Bar, where Macnamarra did deſire me to go out, and I ſhould hear ſuch a piece of Roguery I never did hear in my Life, againſt my Lord Shaftsbury. So I did go out with them, and I called Captain Brown, who is ſince dead, to go with me; and we went to the Hercules-Pillars, and Haynes there diſcovered what I told your Lordſhip before, a deſign to deſtroy the Parliament at Oxford; an Army that was to land in the North, and another in Ireland, and the Duke of York was to be at the Head of them. My Lord, after I had heard all out, he did deſire us all to conceal what he had ſaid till the Parliament ſat, and then he would not only diſcover this, but much more. He at the ſame time told us, that there was a deſign of Fitzgerald's againſt my Lord Shaftsbury to take away his Life, and he was employed to come to his Cozen Macnamarra to get him over to joyn in the deſign, and he ſhould never want for Money, if he would but come over and do as they would have him. After he had diſcovered himſelf, Sir, ſaid I, You are a Stranger to me; and I never ſaw him before in my Days, if he had ſeen me I can't tell: But, Sir, ſaid I, either this is true, or this is falſe. If it be true, ſaid he, 'Tis all true, and much more. So he up and told us much of Coleman, and of the Reconciliation between the Duke of Ormond and the Duke of York, and how he came to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and how Plunket came to be Primate, and by means of whom, and the Letters that paſſed, and how ſo much a Year was given to Plunket for carrying on the Correſpondence; and he told us ſo much, that I did wonder to hear any Man talk after that rate. After I had heard what he had to ſay, I told him, Sir, ſaid I, this is either true or falſe that you have ſaid: if it be true, my Lord Shaftsbury ſhall know it to Night; for I will not conceal ſuch a thing concerning a Peer of the Realm: and if it were a colour, he ſhould know of it. And I did ſend him word that Night; and, ſaid I, Sir, you ought to go, for your own ſecurity and ours too, to ſwear it before a Magiſtrate. Said he, if I ſhould, I ſhould be diſcovered. Said I, I can't think you would be diſcovered; if you ſwore it before Sir George Treby or Sir Robert Clayton, they will not diſcover you. So he agreed he would ſwear before Sir George Treby; and he did go accordingly: But he being out of Town, I cannot have the Affidavit to produce it. There was a Letter ſent laſt Saturday-night to Sir George to Briſtol, and I hoped he might have been here to Day. This was the firſt Acquaintance I ever had with Haynes. The next time I heard of him, was upon this occaſion. Ivy comes to me in Richard's Coffee-houſe, and, ſaid he, Yonder is the Man that made that diſcovery, which I told you before that Haynes had ſaid to me; it was about a Month or three Weeks before the Parliament was at Oxford. After the Parliament was diſſolved at Oxford, Ivy comes to me, and I think it was betwixt the two Terms wherein Fitz-harris was arraigned and tried: I know not the Names of them; but he comes to me and tells me he had been with my Lord Shaftsbury, and that there was a Friend of his that would confirm all that Fitz-harris had diſcovered concerning the Murder of Sir Edmund bury Godfrey; and, ſays he, my Lord of Shaftsbury hath ſent me to you to acquaint you with it. Where is your Friend? ſaid I. He is without, ſaid he. So we went out of the Coffee-Houſe; and when we came out of Doors, there was this Haynes: we went to the Crown-Tavern without Temple-Bar; it was in the Forenoon. When we came there into the Room, he examined all the Corners, and Cupboards, and Places about the Room, to ſee that no body was there. When he thought all was ſecure, he began to tell me he had been to acquaint my Lord Shaftsbury that there was a Friend of his that would diſcover the whole Intrigue of the Murder of Sir Edmund bury Godfrey, all that Fitz-harris had ſaid, and much more: and he deſired me that I would intreat my Lord Shaftsbury to be inſtrumental to get him his Pardon before he diſcover'd particularly. Then I told him, I think 'tis convenient, ſaid I, that you diſcover ſomething in Writing, and give under your Hand what you can ſay. He was not willing to do that. Can you believe, ſaid I, that my Lord of Shaftsbury will betray you? Says he, I will not truſt any body; I ſhall be aſſaſſinated. Said I, if you will not give it to any body elſe, Will you give it to Mr. Michael Godfrey, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Brother? you can have no jealouſie of him that he will ever diſcover you. Said he, if my Lord Shaftsbury will engage to get me a Pardon, I will tell the whole Truth. Said I, I will go to my Lord and acquaint him: So I went to both my

Lord

Lord and Mr. Godfrey; and Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's two Brothers both met me at my Lord of Shaftsbury's Houſe. This is the thing that he tells me; he would have me get my Lord's Protection and a Pardon for Treaſon; but the real Truth is, he ſent me upon this Errand. So I came to my Lord Shaftsbury, and the two Mr. Godfreys were in the Room; and after I had told my Lord what Diſcourſe I had with him, ſays my Lord, Colledge, Theſe Iriſh-men have confounded all our buſineſs; and thou and I muſt have a care they do not put a trick upon us: This may be a trick of the Papiſts to ruine us; and if they have ſuch a deſign, if they will not put it upon you and I, they are Fools. Upon your Lordſhip, ſaid I, they may; but I am a poor inconſiderable Fellow. Says my Lord, I'll tell you, Mr. Godfrey, Mr. Colledge hath not only been an honeſt Man, but an uſeful and an active Man for the Proteſtant Intereſt. So I told my Lord how far I had gone with him, and that I deſired it might be put in Writing. Says my Lord Shaftsbury, If he will put it in Writing, I will go once again; for I have been ſince I ſaw the Fellow, with my Lord Macclesfield, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Pemberton, and my Lord Chancellor, and I have told them that there is ſuch a Perſon in general, but I knew not the Man; as indeed my Lord did not, for only Ivy was the Perſon between them that my Lord knew: And I told them, ſays my Lord, that he can confirm all that Fitz-harris has ſaid concerning the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and that he would prove my Lord of Danby was in it, if he might have his Pardon; and my Lord ſaid, They promiſed to ſpeak to His Majeſty that it might be granted. But ſome time the latter end of the Week I heard it would not be granted; and both of theſe Men followed me to know what they ſhould do. Said I, My Lord Shaftsbury knows not but that it may be a Trick; and ſaid I to Ivy, I wonder why he ſhould conceal it all this while, being a neceſſitous Man, and 500 l. proffered by the King in his Proclamation. Why, ſays Ivy, do you think there is no Truth in it? ſays I, 'Tis not my Judgment, but my Lord Shaftsbury and Mr. Godfrey's Judgment too. He anſwer'd me again, Fitz-harris hath deſired he may have a Pardon granted for himſelf and a Frenchman; and if ſo be there were nothing in in it, Do you think he would move for a Pardon? Says I, Did Mr. Fitz-harris move for Haynes's Pardon? How do I know that, ſays Ivy again: Fitz-harris's Wife told me ſo. Says I, Let me ſpeak with Fitz-harris's Wife, let me hear her ſay ſo, and I will believe you. The next Day he did bring her to me to my Houſe: And this was the time and the occaſion that brought Fitz-harris's Wife, and Haynes, and Ivy, and Mr. Fitz-harris's Maid to my Houſe; and I never ſaw Fitz-harris in my Days, till his Trial, nor had any Communication with him. But, my Lord, ſhe did talk with Haynes, and confirmed it to me, That her Husband had deſired a Pardon for him: Why then, ſaid I, he would do well to diſcover what he knows to my Lord Shaftsbury; for I was with my Lord, and he ſays he will meddle no more, unleſs he will give it under his Hand what he has to ſay. And he did confeſs to me in my own Yard, for there we were together, That he ſaw my Lord of Danby come into the Chappel at Somerſet-Houſe, when the Body of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey lay under the Altar.

L. C. J. Here hath been nothing of this made appear by Proof.

Colledge. My Lord, I only tell you which way they introduced themſelves into my Acquaintance.

L. C. J. You may obſerve what you will upon the Evidence, as we told you; but you ramble from the matter you are to ſpeak to. And as we told Mr. Attorney, that what he ſaid ſhould go for nothing, unleſs he made it out by Proof; ſo muſt we ſay to you, what you ſay goes for nothing, further than you have proved it. Now you have quitted the Proof quite, and not ſpoke to that, but run into other Stories. I would have you keep your ſelf to your Proofs, and make your Obſervations upon them.

Colledge. 'Tis, as I humbly conceive it, to my purpoſe, but I hope my ignorance may excuſe me, if I err. I tell you the truth of things, thus it was.

L. C. J. Truth! Why if yours or any Man's Word in your caſe ſhould go for Truth, No Man that ſtands at a Bar, could be convicted: for every Man will ſay he is an honeſt Man, and all the plauſible things in the World. Make you your Obſervations upon the Proof, that is proper for you to do; and urge it as well as you can, and to the beſt Purpoſe you can: but to tell us long Stories of Paſſages between you and others that are not a whit proved, that is not uſual, nor pertinent.

Colledge. I thought it had been to the point, when this Man pretends to have a familiarity with me, to ſhew how his Acquaintance begun.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Why do you think 'tis an Anſwer to him in what he proves upon his Oath? Have you proved one jot of it? not that I have heard. 'Tis your part to ſum up the Evidence on your own ſide, and to anſwer that which is proved upon you, if you can. Do that, and we will hear you ſpeak to it as long as you can. But to tell Stories to amuſe the Jury with that are not proved, and to run out into rambling Diſcourſes to no Purpoſe, that is not to be allowed, nor never was, in any Court of Juſtice.

Mr. Juſt. Raymond. Not one of your Witneſſes have mention'd any thing that you ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. I wonder, Mr. Colledge, you ſhould forget your ſelf ſo much: for you found fault with Mr. Attorney at the beginning for opening the Evidence, and you were told, and the Jury were told at your requeſt, that what he ſaid, and did not prove, paſſed for nothing. But I muſt tell you, 'tis much worſe in your caſe: for Mr. Attorney only opened what he might prove afterwards, but your Obſervations are upon what hath been proved already; and yet you run out into Stories of what hath not been proved at all, after your Proof is paſt.

Colledge. Sir, I could not prove this otherwiſe than by Ivy, who hath been ſworn againſt me.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Would you have the Jury to believe you upon your Word?

Colledge. There is no more than his Oath againſt me; and why my Oath, being an Engliſh-man and a Proteſtant, ſhould not be taken as well as his that is an Iriſh-man, and hath been a Papiſt, I know not.

L. C. J. You go upon that Ground that your Word is to be taken, as appears by your defence; but I muſt tell you, all the Courſe of Juſtice were deſtroyed, and no Juſtice againſt Malefactors

ctors were to be had, if the Word of him that is accuſed ſhould paſs for Proof to acquit him.

Colledge. My Lord, I have given your Lordſhip an account of theſe Fellows Converſations; and what other Proofs to make, I know not: for I knew not what they would ſwear againſt me, and I had not Witneſſes in my Pocket to confront them.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Well, the Jury have heard it over and over again, firſt upon your requeſt, that nothing is to be taken notice of that is not proved.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, then as to Haynes. My Lord, I do obſerve that there was a Witneſs for me that did prove, he owned he was one that was employed to make a Proteſtant Plot, and another that did hear him Swear, damn him, he would Swear any thing againſt any body for Money, for it was his Trade.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Now you are right; ſpeak as much as you will as to your Proofs.

Colledge. My Lord, I think Turbervile and Dugdale Swear as to the tenth of March in Oxon; I deſire it may be proved I was in Oxford the tenth of March.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You yourſelf came down the middle of March.

L. C. J. I do not remember that they ſaid the tenth of March.

Colledge. Did not the Indictment ſay ſo?

Mr. Att. Gen. It is only in the Indictment.

L. C. J. As to the time mentioned in the Indictment, it is not material; that is the conſtant rule in Tryals upon Indictments; as if an Horſe be laid to be ſtole the tenth, if it be proved the Priſoner ſtole it another Day, it will be ſufficient, the time is not material; the queſtion is whether the Indictment be true in ſubſtance. Mr. Colledge, my Brothers will all tell you that the Law is ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Though it is laid the tenth of March, yet if it be proved the firſt or twentieth before or after, it is all one; ſo the thing be proved, they are not bound to a Day.

Colledge. My Lord, the punctilio's of Law I know not, but it was the twenty fourth or twenty fifth er'e I came down.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Colledge. Dugdale ſays I meant by the Word Rowley, the King.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He does ſo.

Colledge How does he come to know, that by that Word I meant the King?

L. C. J. That we did ask hlm, and he ſays you uſed ſo to expound it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Why look you, he ſaid you and he uſed to have frequent Communication concerning the King, and you did moſt frequently ſpeak of the King by the Name of Rowley.

Colledge. But I ſay, my Lord, I never ſpake of the King by the Name of Rowley in my Life.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay it, and he ſwears the contrary.

Colledge. I don't remember that he ſays I declared it ſo, but he ſaid, I meant it; for if I had declared it, then it had been the ſame thing for me to have named the King downright.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Look you Mr. Colledge, as to that, when any Witneſs had done his Evidence, you had liberty to croſs examine him.

L. C. J. Would you have him called up again to clear this?

Colledge. Yes, if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Stand up Mr. Dugdale. I underſtood by your Teſtimony, when, Mr. Colledge and you diſcourſed of the King, you ſometimes diſcourſed of him by the Name of Rowley, and that he explained that Name to be the King.

Mr. Dugdale. The firſt Time I ever heard what Rowley meant, was from him, for I asked him what he meant by the Name Rowley; I heard it before, but I did not underſtand it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Where was it?

Mr. Dugdale. At Richard's Coffee-houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What was the anſwer he made you?

Mr. Dugdale. He ſaid it was the King.

Colledge. Upon what occaſion did I explain it to you?

Mr. Dugdale. Upon the account of the Pictures.

Colledge. I know not which of the Pictures has the Name of Rowley in it.

Mr. Dugdale. It was when we were talking of one of the Pictures you brought in Rowley, and Mack and Mac was the Duke of York, and Rowley was the King.

Colledge. Upon what Picture was it, that I took occaſion to explain the Name Rowley to you?

Mr. Dugdale. I am not certain.

Colledge. Remember you have an account to give as well as I.

Mr. Dugdale. You have ſo many Pictures that I can't remember them; you have ſhewed me more than have been produced in Court.

Colledge. Where had you that Picture from me that they call the Raree-ſhew?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly I received of them twice at Richard's Coffee-houſe.

Colledge. Twice, do you ſay.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, two of them at two ſeveral times; for you having promiſed me one, you brought it according to your Word.

Colledge. When was that?

Mr. Dugdale. I did not keep an account of the Day of the Month; and another I do remember at the Green-Dragon Tavern you thruſt into my Pocket, and Mr. Baldwin was by at that time. And ſaid he, Mr. Colledge, You will be ſo open, that you will come to be diſcovered at laſt.

Colledge. Then will I be willing to dye for it, if he and I and Mr. Baldwin were at the Green Dragon Tavern together. When was it that I gave you any Pictures there? was it ſince the Parliament at Oxon?

Mr. Dugdale. Do I charge you ſince the Parliament?

Colledge. I never ſaw Raree Shew before the the Parliament at Oxford.

Mr. Dugdale. I do not ſay it was that; you gave me one of the others.

Colledge. 'Tis ſtrange you will ſtick to nothing; When was it we were at the Green Dragon Tavern?

Mr. Dugdale. We were there before the Parliament ſat at Oxon; it was ſince Chriſtmaſs.

Colledge. What Picture was it I gave you there?

Mr. Dugdale. It may be I can't remember which of them it was, it was not Raree Shew; I ſuppoſe you gave me one of them concerning the Biſhops, where you put Biſhop Mew kiſſing the Pope's Toe; for it was a Biſhop with a

Patch

Patch on, and that you told me was Biſhop Mew.

Colledge. I put it, did I make it?

Mr. Dugdale. You ſaid you were the Author.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Mr. Colledge, Will you conſider upon what Mr. Dugdale was called up about, the Expoſition of the Name Rowley?

Colledge. I did examine him, and he hath contradicted himſelf; for he hath ſaid at the Green Dragon Tavern I gave him a Picture of Raree Shew.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He ſaid no ſuch thing, he ſaid he did not know which it was.

Colledge. I am certain he meant that then when he ſpake it; for he named it before, that he had two from me at Richard's Coffee-houſe, and one I thruſt into his Pocket at the Tavern? and I ſay, I never was at the Green-Dragon Tavern with Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Baldwin, nor in the Tavern theſe three quarters of a Year.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Mr. Colledge, you were in the right Way juſt now to manage your Evidence, in oppoſition to the other Evidence, go on in that Way.

Colledge. My Lord, I don't know well what was ſaid, for I could not hear half, nor write a quarter of it; but, my Lord, I hope your Lordſhip hath taken Notes of it, and will remember it for me. You are my Council as well as my Judges.

L. C. J. In matter of Fact we are.

Colledge. My Life and your Souls lye at Stake to do me Juſtice; therefore I hope you will take notice of what I have not had the opportunity to write down. I have obſerved that every one of my Witneſſes have ſpoken materially to contradict what they have ſaid, to prove that this was done for Money, and that there hath been Confeſſions from every Man of them; that they were hired to do it; that they did it for a Livelihood; and one of them ſaid, It was a good Trade, Damn him, he would do any thing for Money: And I hope then you will conſider the improbability, that I ſhould ſpeak to an Iriſh Man who I had never ſeen before in my Life; and that I ſhould at the firſt daſh utter all that Treaſon that he gives in Evidence, I think it cannot conſiſt with any Man's underſtanding to believe me ſo mad or ſo weak.

Mr. Juſt. Levine. That is as to Haynes only.

Colledge. As to Smith now I ſuppoſe it does not come within the reach of the Statute; for the Dinner that was made by Alderman Wilcox, was made before laſt July was Twelvemonth; all the Witneſſes do ſay it was before Chriſtmas, and Dr. Oates ſays it was in the Summer; I know it by a very good Obſervation, becauſe I went to Aſtrop Waters after that, and I ſaw Sir Creſwell Levins at the Wells: Now Sir you were there before this time Twelvemonth. So then whatever he ſays I ſaid to him there, I cannot be charged withal by the Statute, more or leſs, if I had never a Witneſs againſt him; but I have Witneſſes that have contradicted him ſufficiently that he is forſworn in that; and if ſo, he is not to be believed in any thing elſe; for he ſays, he and I went to the Coffee-houſe together, and we diſcourſed ſuch and ſuch things, which is not above half a Bows ſhoot, and he made it I ſay a quarter of a Mile's diſcourſe; if I had had all the talk, the Diſcourſe could not be ſo long, tho' he had ſaid never a Word: So you ſee what a kind of Witneſs he is. And Dr. Oates's Brother did ſay, That I did go along with Dr. Oates, and offered to be one of his Guard, and I did ſay ſo, and went along with them, but Mr. Smith he came after. And as to what he ſays he is ſufficiently confuted, that is, about the going into Cabals after Dinner; for it is proved, That I fell aſleep behind the Table, and Dr. Oates was diſcourſing with Mr. Savage upon Points of Divinity; but I took no notice of it, neither did I ſee Smith any more, but he went away, and ſo did the reſt of the Company. But, my Lord, when Haynes was taken, Smith comes to me that Day to my Houſe at the Ditch-ſide, and ſends in a Man for me, his Man; I was writing in my Parlour, and drawing the Deſign for Wainſcotting Alhallows Church, a Platform for it; his Man told me, His Maſter would ſpeak with me, and Haynes was taken that Morning: But as I underſtand ſince, it was by agreement and his own conſent, tho' he hath pretended otherwiſe. You hear, ſays he, Haynes is taken? Yes, ſays I, I do, he hath been ever ſince 9 a Clock before the Secretary upon Examination, and he was till 5 a Clock at Night examining, ſaid he: I believe he confeſſes a great deal, ſaid I: Of what, ſaid he? Of ſome deſign of the Proteſtants, ſaid I, What, againſt the Government? I do not know what they may affright him into; he is a great Rogue if it be true all that he hath ſaid of himſelf: He ſays, He was concern'd in the Fire of London, and knew of a Deſign to deſtroy the Proteſtants then; of a Rebellion that was to be in Ireland; of Plunket's being made Primate, and a great many of thoſe things: So that if he ſpeaks truth, he hath been a great Rogue, and as he hath pretended alſo, he was a great Coward. So then I believe he may ſay any thing to excuſe himſelf; ſays Mr. Smith, I wiſh you are ſafe: This was the very Night before I was taken.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Have you proved any thing of this?

Colledge. My Lord, Pray give me leave to tell you what is Proof.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You are not to repeat this, unleſs you prove it, Sir.

Colledge. He ſpake cautiouſly to me, as if he would have intimated to me, he would have had me run away. Said he, I believe you are not ſafe, I would have you take care of your ſelf, for you were concerned with him. Now, my Lord, if I had been a guilty Perſon, I had time enough to get away; and to prove this, I can only ſay, this was betwixt him and I. But, my Lord, you hear Dr. Oates ſays, that this very Smith did ſwear he would have my Blood, and that was upon this occaſion of my vindicating Sampſon, whom he had ſtruck and abuſed; and I asked, Why he did it? Said he, I value no Man's Life, if he affront me, if 'tis any Man in England, I value him not. My Lord, upon this occaſion the Words riſe between us; and when he came out of doors, and was going away, Dr. Oates ſaid, He ſwore he would have my Blood, and that was the occaſion of his ſpeaking that Blaſphemy.

L. C. J. Dr. Oates did ſay ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Well you are right now if you will go on in that Way.

Colledge. My Lord, This is for Smith and Haynes, that Haynes ſhould ſay it was a good Trade, and damn him he would ſwear any thing for Money, and that Smith ſhould ſwear dam him he would have my Blood. I cannot ſum up the reſt of them for I have not them here.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. There is Turbervile, and Dugdale, and Smith; we will help you as to the Perſons.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Pray keep to the buſineſs, and do not run out.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord I have one thing to ſay about Smith; he ſays I ſhew'd him my Arms, which I have had for any time almoſt theſe three Years, ever ſince the Plot brake out. I have been Armed ready to oppoſe the Papiſts, and I did my duty in the City in Perſon in the Trained-bands, but Smith ſays theſe Arms were to deſtroy the King's Guards, but he does not prove that I was Confederate with any other Perſon, but inſtead of that there were other Perſons that ſay with his own Mouth, that he did not believe there was any Proteſtant Plot; nay, he did believe I ſaid it only in wantonneſs. This is all, then how probable was it, that I my ſelf ſhould ſeize the King, or deſtroy his Guards.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You remember Captain Brown, Captain Couton, and Don Lewes, Mr. Colledge.

Colledge. Did he ſwear they were all in my company at Oxon?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Yes, Dugdale did.

Colledge. My Lord, Captain Brown and Lewes were Friends to my Lord Howard, with whom and other Company I came down to Oxon, and they lay with me at the Chequer, and they were in my Company becauſe they were Gueſts in the Houſe, and we came along together, but he does not ſay they were either of them Armed more than my ſelf, nor was he ever in Company with us, how then does he know we were in a Conſpiracy?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Becauſe you told him at London firſt that they were ſuch Perſons.

Colledge. I never ſaw Lewes in my Days till I ſaw him that Morning, I came down from Oxon, and Brown I was not acquainted with a Fortnight before. This is a truth, but however they have ſworn a Plot upon me at Oxon, and then come and prove I declared theſe were the Men, and ſpoke ſuch and ſuch Words at London; I deſire your Lordſhip's Judgment in this matter of Law, whether what be done at London can be ſufficient matter of Proof in Law to maintain an Indictment againſt me at Oxon? And if not; they do not prove legally that I have ſpoken ſuch Words. Beſides I conceive 'tis not a good Proof, becauſe there is but one Witneſs.

L. C. J. Yes, look you, there are two Witneſſes, Dugdale and Turbervile, as to what you ſaid at Oxon, and two Witneſſes as to what you ſaid at London, Haynes and Smith, who teſtifie what you ſaid you would do at Oxon. Now in caſe you came to Oxon with any ſuch intention, that coming to Oxford is an overt-Act, and the Witneſſes that ſpeak what you ſaid in London, is Evidence to maintain the Indictment here, and to prove what your intention was.

Colledge. Does that become an overt-Act if I go to Oxon upon an honeſt occaſion, any other occaſion, tho' I had ſaid thoſe Words before.

L. C. J. If you came with that intent to joyn with others, and with a real Purpoſe to ſeize the King, that is the overt-Act, and the Words before prove the intention.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He declared it himſelf by his Words.

Colledge. Smith ſays that about a Week after Wilcox's Dinner, I diſcourſed with him at the Ditch-ſide, that comes not within the compaſs of the Statutes. Then there is twice of the 3 times he ſpeaks of, the laſt Day I do not remember when it was.

L. C. J. All was in London that Smith ſpeaks of you.

Colledge. How comes that to be Proof here, then nothing he ſays is to go for any thing.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Nothing will ſerve your turn; we have declared our Opinions once already, that if the Witneſſes ſwear true, here are two Witneſſes; nay, if one were of what was done at London, and the other of what was done at Oxon, if they be to the ſame Treaſon they are two Witneſſes in Law.

Colledge. My Lord, I obſerve one thing upon Turbervile's Evidence, he ſwears there was a diſcourſe in the Room when Brown was upon the Bed, but afterwards if your Lordſhip minds it, he ſays, I diſcourſed with him as he and I lay upon the Bed. Before he ſaid when Brown lay upon the Bed, and in the Room, and afterwards when we lay upon the Bed.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Both the one and the other.

Colledge. But he ſaid firſt one way, and then the other.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Whilſt Brown lay upon the Bed, and when he was gone, whilſt you both lay upon the Bed.

L. C. J. We will do you no wrong, therefore if you will, Turbervile ſhall ſtand up and clear it.

Colledge. My Lord I believe thoſe that have taken the Paſſages can prove he contradicted himſelf in that.

L. C. J. He ſaid both. But the Jury have taken Notes of the Evidence, and will take notice of it.

Colledge. As to Mr. Maſters, the Evidence he gives was, he ſays that he and I ſhould diſcourſe of the Parliament in 40.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And the juſtifiableneſs of the late King's Death, that they had done nothing but what they had juſt cauſe to do.

Colledge. He ſwears that I did ſay to him, that the late Parliament did not cut off the King's Head.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And you ſaid the laſt Parliament that ſate at Weſtminſter, was of the ſame Opinion with that in 40.

Colledge. I dare appeal to Eſquire Charlton, in whoſe Shop the Diſcourſe was. I did not know that Mr. Maſters was to be an Evidence againſt me, and truly they have taken that courſe with me, by which any Man may be deſtroyed with half this Evidence, were they of good Credit, let his Innocence be what it will. I have been uſed ſo barbarouſly in the Tower, kept from all Converſation, and ſo in an utter ignorance of what was ſworn againſt me; for elſe I could eaſily have diſproved Mr. Maſters, if I had been in London, and had liberty to provide for my Defence, but they have taken a courſe to prevent that, and brought me hither becauſe 'tis impoſſible I ſhould here defend my ſelf.

L. C. J. You have not offered at any Witneſs to impeach Mr. Maſters's Credit.

Colledge. Mr. Maſters's Diſcourſe he ſpeaks of was in Mr. Charlton's Shop, I durſt have appealed to him about it, for I know if he were here he would do me right. Mr. Maſters did ſay the Parliament liament cut off the late King's Head. We held a diſpute upon that which I was not willing to enter into; I ſaid they did not, and we did then diſpute whether they began the War againſt His Majeſty: I ſaid they did not that I knew of, neither were they the Perſons, but the Papiſts that began that War, and that broke off the Treaty at Uxbridge, and that the Papiſts carried it on to that ſad iſſue, and put it upon the Proteſtants, that they had the odium of it, but it was another ſort of Men that carried it on. I ſaid that I did always underſtand that Parliament to be an honeſt Parliament, that minded the true Intereſt of the Nation, and much of the ſame Opinion with the Parliament that ſate laſt at Weſtminſter. But before I ſaid this, I ſaid they were Perſons altogether innocent of the King's Murder, and raiſing the War againſt the King, I did always underſtand that ſo the Parliament in 40 were.

L. C. J. But they were guilty of a Rebellion, and are declared ſo by Act of Parliament ſince His Majeſty came in.

Colledge. My Lord, I am unacquainted with the Law, I ſpeak only my ſenſe of it. And, my Lord, I did excuſe them as to the Murder of the King, and the beginning of the War, that according to my underſtanding they were not guilty of it, and from thence I did maintain they were an honeſt good Parliament, and much of Opinion with the Parliament that ſate laſt at Weſtminſter, which was for the true Intereſt of the Nation.

L. C. J. And was that the true Intereſt of the Nation, to cut off the King's Head?

Colledge. I did argue that with him ſome time, and I did tell him that it was the Papiſts that did all the Miſchief.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But he ſays no, upon his Oath, that when he had ſaid the Parliament begun the Rebellion, and the Parliament did cut off the King's Head, you ſaid the Parliament did nothing but what they had juſt Cauſe for, and the Parliament that ſate laſt at Weſtminſter was of the ſame Mind.

L. C. J. Thoſe were his words.

Colledge. Pray let him be called again.

L. C. J. Let Mr. Maſters ſtand up again.

Colledge. Pray Sir relate the whole Diſcourſe that paſſed between you and I, whether I did not argue with you it was not the Parliament cut off the King's Head, nor begun the War, but the Papiſts.

Mr. Maſters. No, you did not ſay any ſuch thing. We had a great deal of Diſcourſe in the Shop, and under the Arch, and the thing that was ſaid, Mr. Colledge was this. You did ſay to me, that you did juſtifie the late long Parliament of 40, and their Proceedings, and you ſaid they were a Parliament that did nothing but what they had juſt cauſe for. Said I, How can you be ſo impudent to ſay ſo, when they raiſed the Rebellion againſt the King, and cut off his Head? Said he again, They did nothing but what they had juſt cauſe for, and the Parliament that ſate laſt at Weſtminſter were of the ſame Opinion.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I did you no wrong in repeating the Evidence, you ſee, Mr. Colledge.

Colledge. Did I not firſt diſpute with you that they did not begin the War, nor cut off the King, but the Papiſts did it.

Mr. Maſters. Look you, Mr. Colledge, you would have had it the King began the War.

Colledge. Don't you ſay ſo, for I ſaid the Papiſts began the War. Sir, ſay no more to me than what you will anſwer to God Almighty; for I always ſaid the Papiſts did all the Miſchief in the late Times; and I wonder, Sir, you would not be ſo juſt to His Majeſty, as to detect me for what I ſaid then, if you apprehend it to be as you now ſay; but I am ſure you did not, nor could not.

Mr. Maſters. Mr. Colledge, it was ſo far from that, that I was afraid it was of dangerous Conſequence, and I gave ſome Perſons of Honour an account of it; and I was ſent to but on Friday laſt, to know what it was was ſaid, and I was deſired and commanded to come down hither.

Colledge. Pray, Mr. Maſters, you are upon your Oath, do me but Juſtice, and ſpeak upon your own Conſcience; look you to it that you ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. Maſters. I will do you all the Right I can in the World.

Colledge. Then before the Court do you declare whether we did not diſcourſe at that time as I ſaid, for this Diſcourſe was at Mr. Charlton's Shop at the further end.

Mr. Maſters. No, it was at the entrance into the Shop, Mr. Colledge; and did not we go into the Arch and talk there.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Maſters, don't trouble your ſelf, your Reputation is not upon the Level with that Gentleman's.

Colledge. I deſire he may ſpeak the very Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Maſters. I do, as near as I can, and do you no wrong; you did in your Diſcourſe ſay the Parliament did not begin the War, nor cut off the King's Head.

Colledge. You did ſay to me they did cut off the King's Head, and I told you no, the Papiſts did.

Mr. Maſters. I think you did ſay that the Papiſts had an hand in it; but, Sir, you have left out the moſt material part of our Diſcourſe, which was, that you ſaid they did nothing but what they had juſt cauſe for.

Colledge. I do ſay, and it was my ſence always, That the Parliament did not cut off the King's Head, for they were long out of doors before that came to paſs, and a new unhappy War was begun.

L. C. J. The War was a Rebellion on the Parliament's part, let us not mince the matter, and ſo it was declared by Act of Parliament; and if you argued after that rate, it ſhews your Temper, and that you are a very ill Man; for they that juſtify ſuch things, as to the time paſt, would lead us to the ſame things again if they could. Therefore don't go about to palliate it, ad faciendum populum, here, 'tis nothing to the matter, but only to ſhew your Principles, and the Jury have heard what Mr. Maſters ſays.

Colledge. I was then a Child, and do not know all the Paſſages, but I ſpeak my ſence.

L. C. J. You ſhould not have juſtified ſuch things.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Who appointed the High-Court of Juſtice that tried the King and condemned him, but the Parliament?

Mr. Juſt. Levins. It was the Garbage of that Parliament, I am ſure, that is the Rump, but they called themſelves the Parliament of England, and the Parliament it was that begun the War.

Colledge. My Lord, I did not know, nor don't know that it is proved yet, that the Parliament were thoſe that did cut off the King's Head. I don't know, Mr. Maſters is pleas'd to ſay this of me; but I thought no evil, nor did he underſtand it ſo, I believe, at that time, for he did not ſeem to take advantage of my Diſcourſe. I know he talked violently and paſſionately with me, as he uſed to do; and for Mr. Maſters to ſay this of me now, is a great unkindneſs; for I thought he was ſo much a Gentleman, that if I had ſpoken any thing that had not become me, he would have taken notice of it then.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He did then, he tells you.

Colledge. Had I known of it, I am ſure Mr. Charlton would have done me Juſtice, and ſet things right; but this I ſay, I did firſt excuſe the Parliament from being concerned in the Murder of the King, or that they did begin the War, but the Papiſts did it: If it were otherwiſe, it was more than I underſtood: And after that I ſaid, I thought that the Parliament that ſate laſt at Weſtminſter, did ſtand up for the Peoples Rights, after the ſame manner that the Parliament in 40 did.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What, juſt after the ſame manner, in raiſing War and Rebellion againſt the King?

Colledge. After I had diſcourſed it thus, my Lord, as I told you, it could not be underſtood that I thought that Parliament would cut off the King's Head: And therefore you that are my Jury, pray conſider, and take it all together, there could be no ſuch meaning made of my words; for I did not conceive that that Parliament were concerned in thoſe things, but were a Parliament that ſtood up for the Rights of the People: Now, if it were ſo, then the Parliament at Weſtminſter were of the ſame Opinion.

L. C. J. I tell you the Long-Parliament's levying War is declared Rebellion by Act of Parliament.

Colledge. My Lord, if there hath been an Act ſince, that ſays they were guilty of Rebellion, I declare 'tis more than ever I knew before: This is the firſt time that ever I heard of it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You are a mighty Learned Gentleman to talk of thoſe Points indeed.

Colledge. My Lord, I deſire to know whether any Words that were ſpoken ſix Months before they gave in their Depoſitions, can be a ſufficient Evidence in Law againſt me now?

L. C. J. 'Tis upon the Act of the 13th of this King you ſpeak.

Colledge. Yes, my Lord, I take it upon that Statute.

L. C. J. I tell you, as to that part of the Statute which concerns Miſdemeanors, there is a particular Clauſe for Proſecution by order of King and Council; but as to that part of the Statute that concerns Treaſon, it muſt be proſecuted within ſix Months, and the Indictment within three Months after.

Colledge. What Statute is this Indictment grounded upon?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. All Statutes that concern Treaſon.

L. C. J. Upon the Statute of the 25 of Edw. 3. which declares the Common-Law, and the Statute of the 13th of this King, which when you have done, I will have read to the Jury.

Colledge. Then, pray my Lord, let me ask you one Queſtion, Whether the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. does not ſay that there ſhall be two poſitive Witneſſes to Treaſon?

Mr. Juſt. Jones. No, but there is another that does.

Colledge. I am ignorant of the Law, and therefore I ask the Queſtion.

L. C. J. Well, I will tell you, there muſt be two Witneſſes in the Caſe, but one Witneſs to one Fact at one time, and another Witneſs to another Fact at another time, will be ſufficient Evidence to maintain an Indictment of Treaſon; this was told you in the Morning.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And it was told you withal, That it was the Reſolution of all the Judges in the Caſe of my Lord Stafford, when he was tried in Parliament.

Colledge. They proved Fact in that Caſe, writing of Letters, and offering Money to kill the King: but nothing of Fact is proved againſt me, but riding in the Country with Arms that I had three Years before.

L. C. J. We will read the Statute of the 13th, wherein Words are declared to be Treaſon.

Colledge. I pray it may be read, if you pleaſe. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Look you here, To compaſs or imagine the impriſonment of the King, and to expreſs it by malicious and adviſed ſpeaking, when proved by two lawful Witneſſes, is Treaſon by this Act.

Colledge. Now, whether you will diſtinguiſh, that there muſt be two Witneſſes to diſtinct Places or Times, or whether the Statute intends two Witneſſes to every particular Fact and Words.

L. C. J. We told you our Opinion before, That one Witneſs to one Fact, and another to another of the ſame Treaſon, was ſufficient. We are upon our Oaths in it, and ſpeak not our own Opinions, but what hath received publick Reſolution in Caſes of the like conſequence.

Colledge. What lies before theſe Gentlemen of the Jury, as done at Oxon, 'tis but upon a ſingle Teſtimony.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Nay, Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Turbevile both ſwear the ſame thing, your deſign to ſeize the King at Oxon. And it would be the difficulteſt thing in the World to prove Treaſon againſt any Man, if the Law were not ſo, and a Man might commit all ſorts of Treaſon ſecurely; for to be ſure he would never ſay the ſame things before two Witneſſes in one time, and the King would be in no ſort ſafe; for there would never be two Witneſſes to one and the ſame thing: But that hath been reſolved often and often, over and over again, particularly in my Lord Stafford's Caſe, as you have been told.

Colledge. My Lord, you ſay the King is not ſafe upon thoſe Terms, and no private Man is ſafe in the other way.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. We ſay that the Law is ſo, and there is good reaſon for it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. We muſt not alter nor depart from the allowed received Law.

L. C. J. I ſay the thing hath been conſidered in other Caſes, and the Law hath been adjudged and ſettled. It was ſo reſolved in my Lord Stafford's Caſe, when the Judges by the command of the Parliament, did deliver their Opinion upon that Point moved by him.

Colledge. There is nothing of Fact proved againſt me but a pair of Piſtols, a Sword, and an Horſe.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. We have told you the Law, and anſwered your Queſtion.

Colledge. But as the Caſe ſtands, if that be the Law, all Society and Converſation muſt be ruined by it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Pray go on, when do you think we ſhall have done elſe?

Colledge. However I do not inſiſt upon that ſo much, as that the Teſtimonies and Oaths of theſe Men are altogether invalidated, by ſubſtantial Perſons that have here teſtified againſt them. I do declare upon my Salvation, (I have nothing elſe to ſay) I am wholly innocent, and the Jury are my Judges, and I beſeech them, as they will anſwer me at the great Day of Judgment, where they muſt appear as ſure as I ſtand at this Bar now, that they do me right, and go according to their own Conſciences; for if a Man ſhall be ſworn againſt by ſuch Fellows as theſe are, no Man is ſafe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The worſe, the better to be truſted by you.

Colledge. I am ſure it cannot be thought by Men of common Reaſon, that I ſhould ſpeak Treaſon at that rate that they have ſworn, and to ſuch Men, Men of their Profeſſion, Iriſh Men, and Papiſts, Traitors that have declared they have been in all manner of Rogueries, Murders, Plots and Treaſons. Therefore, my Lord, I cannot do any more for my ſelf, becauſe I have no Notes, and cannot recite what hath been ſaid for me or againſt me; but I do depend upon your Lordſhip, and I hope you will inform the Jury rightly, and do me Juſtice; and I do pray the Jury that they will let their Conſciences be ſatisfied, as they are Engliſh Men, and as they are Chriſtians, to conſider how the Caſe lies with me, whether there has not been more occaſion of talking of late, and whether a ſlip of the Tongue may be called a premeditated, malicious, adviſed ſpeaking, I mean, my Diſcourſe with Mr. Maſters. He talked with me as hot as fire, he was ſo violent, and I did diſcourſe him at that rate I have told you, and that is truth, as I have a Soul to be ſaved: I did excuſe the Parliament, that as I underſtood it, they had no hand in the beginning of the War, or the Murder of the King. My Lord, As for the reſt that have ſworn againſt me ſo deſperately, I muſt ſay, that if the Jury did not as well conſider my Evidence as theirs, yet they might well conſider, whether it conſiſts with common Sence and Reaſon, that I ſhould ſpeak to theſe Men after this rate, when I could lay no obligation upon them, nor have any confidence in them; neceſſitous Perſons, that could not aſſiſt me one Mite, Men that were beholding to me to borrow Money of me, and that eat of my coſt, that I had always been obliging to, and not they to me. But I hope I need inſiſt upon this no further; the whole Nation is ſenſible what is doing, and what this does ſignifie: They have begun with me in order to the making of a Presbyterian Plot, which they would carry on to ſtifle the noiſe of the Popiſh Plot; and this is not the 1*ſt*. the 2*d*. nor the 10*th*. time that they have been at this Game; how many Shams have they endeavour'd to raiſe —

Mr. Att. Gen. Who do you mean by they?

Colledge. The Papiſts.

Mr. Att Gen. There is nothing of Popery in the Caſe; they are all Proteſtants.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. They are all Perſons that have lately receiv'd the Sacrament.

Colledge. They were all Papiſts, and I believe are ſo ſtill; for Mr. Dugdale did juſtifie to me the Church of Rome in ſeveral things: And when I told him that they were all Knaves and Fools that were of that Religion, he told me, that many of their Prieſts were holy good Men.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Have you proved that?

Colledge. I can't prove it, it was betwixt him and me, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Then I hope you have done.

Colledge. If I had ſworn againſt him, he had ſtood in my Place.

L. C. J. Have you done, Mr. Colledge?

Colledge. My Lord, I only deſire the Jury to take all into their ſerious Conſideration; I expect a Storm of Thunder from the learned Council to fall upon me, who have Liberty to ſpeak, and being Learned in the Law, underſtand theſe things better than I, who muſt defend my ſelf without Council. I know not whether it be the Practice in any Nation, but certainly 'tis hard meaſure, that I being illiterate and ignorant in the Law muſt ſtand here all Day, they being many, and taking all advantages againſt me, and I a ſingle Perſon, and not able to uſe one means or another either of writing or ſpeaking. But, Gentlemen, I do declare and proteſt, as I ſhall anſwer it at the Day of Judgment, that as to what theſe People have ſworn againſt me either as to Words, or as to any manner of Treaſon againſt the King, the Government, the Laws eſtabliſhed, I take God to witneſs I am as innocent as any Perſon upon Earth. And therefore I muſt beſeech you be not frightned nor flattered; do according to your Judgments and your Conſciences; you are to be my Judges both in Law and Fact; you are to acquit me or condemn me, and my Blood will be required at your Hands. And whatſoever is ſaid to you by others, you are my true Judges, you muſt give an account of the Verdict you give; and therefore you muſt ſee that you do Juſtice, as you will anſwer it at another Bar, where you muſt all certainly appear, and the Lord Almighty direct you that you do me true Juſtice, and I ask no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. Here hath been a great deal of time ſpent, and truly I think for no other Reaſon but to divert you from the matter that is before you, and that you might forget the Evidence that hath been given. And therefore I will briefly repeat it to you, that I may refreſh your Memories about what hath been ſworn. Gentlemen, the Crime charged upon Mr. Colledge is High Treaſon in imagining and compaſſing the Death of the King; the Proof of that hath been by a Conſpiracy to ſeize the King here at Oxon, which Conſpiracy he declared he was in, by ſhewing Arms prapared for that Purpoſe, and by coming down to Oxon with that intent, this is the Proof of his deſign to kill the King.

Colledge. Is the Conſpiracy proved of that Mr. Solicitor?

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, We have had a great deal of Patience with you, you have ſpent a great deal of time, you muſt contain your ſelf now, and let them go on.

Colledge. Do not let him do me wrong, my Lord.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will do you no wrong Mr. Colledge.

Colledge. Sir, there is no Conſpiracy proved.

L. C. J. Look you Mr. Colledge, you have taken up a great deal of time, and we have had much Patience becauſe we conſider your condition, and had rather hear too much than be hard upon you, and becauſe the Evidence was long and difficult to repeat, now we have heard you, you muſt have patience to hear what the King's Council repeat and obſerve upon it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. As I was ſaying, the Fact that is charged upon him, is a deſign to kill the King, the manifeſtation of that deſign is by preparing Arms to that Purpoſe, and by coming down to Oxon to ſeize the King here, and that this was his Manifeſt intent to ſeize the King, the Proof of it hath been by Witneſſes, that I think by and by you will have no Objections againſt. Theſe Witneſſes were Dugdale, Turbervile, Smith and Haynes, theſe are the moſt material Witneſſes to the Treaſon, there are two other Witneſſes indeed, but they are to other circumſtantial matters that I will take notice of to you by and by, and make my obſervations upon them in their proper Place.

Mr. Dugdale was the firſt that was produced, and his Evidence is very full, he proves that Mr. Colledge declared to him at the Coffee-houſe here, that he was come down with an intent to ſeize the King, that he had an expectation ſome thing would be done, that he was Armed, and that he did adviſe Mr. Dugdale to be Armed too, for he was provided for the rooting out of Popery, which he explained himſelf what he meant by it, that was the Church of England, and the King and all his Adherents. He came hither Armed for that Purpoſe, Gentlemen, and did adviſe Mr. Dugdale to Arm himſelf too, that he did declare to him the King was a Papiſt, and all his Family were Papiſts, he was as deep in the Plot, and as Guilty of the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, as any body elſe. This was what he declared to Dugdale here, and this he ſwore to you when he gave his Evidence.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Turbervile, and he is poſitive to the matter that is laid in the Indictment, and ſwears to you expreſly, that he did declare to him at the Chequer-Inn, that they came down here in expectation of ſome ſport, that ſomething would be done, that they did expect the King would begin with them, but if they did not, they would begin with him, and they would ſecure him till they had brought him to Compliance. He ſhewed him his Arms, that he was ready to ingage in that deſign, and adviſed Turbervile to be ready too. And rather than Turbervile ſhould not be ready he offered to procure him an Horſe.

Colledge. Every Man had the ſame Arms that I had, and I had had them long before that time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But every one had them not with the ſame intent, but Gentlemen, becauſe Mr. Colledge interrupts me with an Objection, I will take notice of it now by the Way. He ſays thoſe Arms he had before, and therefore they were not provided for this Purpoſe, Gentlemen, we do not pretend to prove when this Traiterous intent firſt began, and how long this deſign hath been hatching, but ſuch a deſign there was, and ſuch a deſign he manifeſted to be in himſelf when he made the Declaration to Turbervile, and adviſed him to Arm himſelf; whether he prepared them againſt that time or no is not material, if he had them before, and if he had them firſt innocently, yet if he afterwards deſigned them for ſuch a Purpoſe, and ſhewed them in a readineſs for it, that is a ſufficient Evidence to prove this Treaſon.

So here are two Witneſſes you obſerve againſt the Priſoner of this matter that is laid againſt him in the Indictment, an intent to kill the King, they both prove it poſitively upon him at Oxon. Mr. Dugdale ſpeaks to matters precedent to, for he tells you, his Diſcourſe before they came down, that they would come down for that Purpoſe, that they had an expectation ſome thing would be done, and therefore he came down in an Equipage not ſuitable to his Profeſſion, for you ſee he was by Trade a Carpenter or a Joyner, but Armed on Horſeback with a Caſe of Piſtols, things that don't become ſuch Men to Travel with, and he did declare to Mr. Dugdale for what Purpoſe he came down. The next Witneſs is Mr. Smith, and Mr. Smith is as poſitive and full to this matter of Treaſon as any of the reſt.

Colledge. There is ſcarce a Carpenter or a Joyner in London but hath Piſtols when he rides.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, We muſt not ſuffer this, We had ſo much patience with you that we expect you ſhould be quiet now and not interrupt the Council.

Colledge. My Lord, Let me not be overborn upon, there is ſcarce a Poulterer in London, but what hath Piſtols.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We had great Patience with you Mr. Colledge, and did not interrupt you I am ſure, but let you ſay what you would. I think I do you no wrong, if I do, I am under the Correction of the Court, they will reprove me if I do that which does not become me.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Did not you ramble I don't know how, and yet you were ſuffered to go on?

Mr. Sol. Gen. He tells you of a Diſcourſe as he came from the Coffee-houſe to go to a Dinner whither he was invited by Alderman Wilcox; and the Diſcourſe was, That the King was as great a Papiſt as the Duke, and much more to that Purpoſe, vilfying the King. That Alderman Wilcox was a Man that gave Money to buy Arms to bring the King to ſubmiſſion. He objects againſt this, and ſays 'tis impoſſible ſuch a Diſcourſe ſhould be, and that all this ſhould be talked in ſo little a time, as in paſſing from the Coffee-houſe to the Crown-Tavern without Temple-Bar.

Colledge. Pray remember whoſe Company it was proved I went in, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, Gentlemen, when you conſider, how buſie a Man he was, and how ready at talking of Treaſon, you will not think, but that this Man might talk much more than this; but this I mention to do him right, it being one of the Arguments he uſed; and, to give an Anſwer to it, tho' when you conſider it, I believe you will think it not to need an Anſwer. But I would do him all the right I can, and now you have heard it, you will conſider the weight of it.

Gentlemen, he tells you of another Diſcourſe afterwards, that does relate to his being here at Oxon, he tells you he had Arms in his Houſe, and was ready upon all occaſions, and he ſhew'd Mr. Smith his Arms, and told him, theſe were the Things that were to deſtroy Rowley's Guards, as he he ſaid, which by the Evidence is made to appear he meant the King by that Name, his Arms he ſaid were for that purpoſe. That he would go down to Oxon, and there he expected ſome Sport. I know not what ſport he thinks there is in Rebellion; you ſee what Principles he is of, that does maintain and juſtifie the greateſt and horrideſt Rebellion that ever was in England, and ſays they did nothing but what they had good Cauſe for. He tells Smith, that he thought the King would ſeize upon ſome Members, and with that expectation he came down, but he was as ready as the King, and would be one in the ſecuring of him, if he medled with any of the Members. This Proof Mr. Smith made; and that after the Parliament was diſſolved, he ſaid, that the King ran away, and was very much afraid. This is proved by Smith likewiſe, and this Colledge did declare after he came to Town. Smith proves further, That he did wonder the King did not conſider how eaſily his Father's Head was brought to the Block; and for Mr. Colledge's part he did declare, that he did believe this King would be ſerved ſo ſhortly. And this does confirm what his other Witneſſes have ſpoken of his Words at Oxon. Thus then there are three Witneſſes, tho' two are enough to convict a Man, if they be poſitive to the Treaſon.

Mr. Haynes is the fourth Witneſs, and he is as full as any of them. I do but repeat it in ſhort; you have had it ſo often canvaſſed by Colledge, that I believe you will eaſily remember it. He did adviſe Haynes that he ſhould not value the King at all, for the King ſhould be called to account for all his Actions; he ſaid he would ſeize the King and bring him to the Block as they did his Father, with an undecent Expreſſion of that bleſſed King, not fit to be repeated. And he ſaid, they did intend, when they had cut off him, never any more of his Race ſhould Reign. This it was Haynes ſays, tho' there are other Matters. I would take notice of one thing more, and I need not but mention it, you will remember it, and that is about the Libel of Fitzharris. Haynes tells you, upon diſcourſe of that Libel, he ſaid, That every word of it was true, as ſure as God was in Heaven. Now that was a Libel made by a Papiſt, an Iriſh Papiſt, who hath been Tried, Convicted, and Executed for it, and the horrideſt Libel it was that ever was writ. And this is the Libel which this Gentleman, who is ſo very converſant in Libels, and Books of that ſort, avers to be as true as God is in Heaven. This is the ſubſtance, Gentlemen, of that Proof which hath been made to you; we have other Circumſtances to prove, That as he came down with that intent to ſeize the King, and as he expected, what he calls, ſome Sport, ſo he did endeavour to begin the Sport, he did quarrel in the Lobby of the Houſe of Lords with Fitz Gerald, ſome blows paſſed, and Sir William Jennings telling him his Noſe bled, he did declare, I have loſt the firſt Blood in the Cauſe, but it will not be long before there be more loſt. Thus after he had come down, he endeavoured to begin a Commotion, for from little matters great things do ſometimes ariſe, and when all Men were poſſeſt with an Expectation, ſuch as he himſelf did declare, he and others came down with an Expectation that the Parliament ſhould be attacked; a little matter, might have begun ſuch a Commotion which no Man knows what end it would have had.

Gentlemen, this hath been our Proof. Now the Objection made to this Proof by Mr. Colledge, is, That this is a Popiſh deſign to raiſe a new Plot, and caſt it upon the Proteſtants, and that theſe Witneſſes are now to deny all the Evidence they have given of the Popiſh Plot, and throw all upon the Proteſtants. This is that he would perſwade you to believe, but which I think when you do conſider a little of it, it will be impoſſible for you in the leaſt to have ſuch a thought. For what are the Evidence that have proved this? who are they? Men of Credit, that have been Evidences againſt the Popiſh Plotters, and againſt Men that have ſuffered for that Plot, Men that ſtill ſtand to the Evidence they have given, and affirm it every Word to be true, and one of the very Men that he brought ſays, that they ſtill ſtand to it; for Turbervile who was one of the Witneſſes againſt my Lord Stafford was tempted by ſome Perſons to deny the Evidence he had given againſt the Papiſts, but his anſwer was, no, I can never depart from it, I have a Soul to ſave, that was true which I ſaid, I cannot deny it. If then the Witneſſes which he would have you believe to be guilty of denying the Popiſh Plot, do confirm what they have ſaid as to that diſcovery, that objection is taken off, and they do ſtand ſtill to it that every part of it was true, and aver the ſame thing; and yet forſooth theſe Men are going about to ſtifle this Plot.

Gentlemen, theſe are the Men the whole Nation have given credit to, the Parliament having impeached my Lord Stafford upon the credit of them (for it was upon the credit of Dugdale and Turbervile that they impeached him, for there was not two Witneſſes till Turbervile came in and made a Second, and upon their credit) after ſo ſolemn a Tryal where all the Objections that could poſſibly be made were made, the Houſe of Lords thought fit to find my Lord Stafford Guilty, and my Lord Stafford ſuffered for it, and dyed upon the credit of theſe Men. Theſe are the Witneſſes, Gentlemen, that this Man thinks ought to be blown off with that frivolous Objection, that they are Perſons he would have you believe, who are Guilty of a deſign to throw the Plot upon the Proteſtants. But becauſe he hath deſired to ſave himſelf in an Herd, by numbring himſelf amongſt the Proteſtants, I muſt a little obſerve to you what a ſort of Proteſtant he is, a Man he would have you to believe, ſo popular for his Religion, that he hath obtained the Name of the Proteſtant Joyner. But when you have conſidered what his Actions are, I believe you will a little ſuſpect his Religion. If the Proteſtant Religion allow any Man to vilifie the King, to Arraign the Government, and to throw off all manner of Allegiance, then this Man is a Proteſtant, but if this be to act the Part of a Papiſt, and if the Papiſts could wiſh that ſuch an Infamy might be put upon the Proteſtant Religion, that it ſhould juſtifie ſuch a Rebellion as the late horrid one was, and own ſuch a Principle that it is lawful for any Subject to aſperſe and vilify the King, as this Man by thoſe many and ſcurrilous Libels ſeems to do; If they could wiſh this Nation overturned, and the Government in confuſion, and the Church of England deſtroyed, the beſt Bulwark now in the World againſt Popery, and the beſt or only refuge at this Day left for the Poor afflicted Proteſtants abroad. Then whilſt Mr. Colledge does thus act the Part of a Papiſt, piſt, he does very ill to call himſelf a Proteſtant. Gentlemen, I cannot but obſerve one thing to you, and it was the Evidence of Dr. Oates, when he did firſt diſcover the Plot, and without his Evidence you would eaſily believe the thing. He told you there were two Ways they had to accompliſh their deſign, by direct murdering of the King, or if that failed, by putting all things into Confuſion here, and raiſing Rebellion and Diſturbance amongſt us, and the Way to affect that Rebellion it was by having Emiſſaries ſent among us, to work us into a diſlike of the Church, and by that means into a Rebellion againſt the State. That ſome Men were ſent abroad for that Purpoſe to preach at Conventicles, ſome whereof were catched, and ſome did ſuffer. Now without this Evidence it would not be hard to believe, that ſuch there are, and have been, for all that know the Hiſtory of our Reformation do know that it was an early Practice among them, to raiſe Sects amongſt us, to bring confuſion firſt into the Church, and then in the State. And we have already found the ſad Effects of it.

Now, Gentlemen, if Colledge have all this while under the Name of a Proteſtant acted the Part of a Papiſt, though I cannot ſay he is a Papiſt, nor that he is one of thoſe Emiſſaries, yet I may ſay he is not that good Proteſtant he pretends to be. Gentlemen, I muſt now to do him right, come to repeat the Evidence that he hath given againſt our Witneſſes; for Mr. Haynes he hath produced ſeveral Witneſſes, one is Mr. Hickman, who ſays he overheard Haynes ſay to one that was his Tenant, that it was his Trade to ſwear, and he muſt get Money by it. This he overheard him ſtanding and liſtning at a Door. You have another Man Lun, that is the next Witneſs, and he ſays that at the Fleet-ditch where he ſaw him, there he declared the ſame thing to him, that he would ſwear any thing for Money, and damn his Soul rather than the Catholick Cauſe ſhould ſink; and now he comes to prove a Plot upon him that is a Proteſtant, and in his Perſon upon all the Proteſtants of England, and this Man would fain throw off the credit of the Popiſh Plot, and turn it upon the Proteſtants. But, Gentlemen, it is ſtrange, that Mr. Haynes ſhould have this Diſcourſe with Lun, the firſt time that ever he ſaw him, for I am ſure his own Witneſs Lun ſays it was the firſt time, and that he ſhould immediately talk to him at this rate is ſomewhat ſtrange: But for an Anſwer to it, this Lun we have confronted with the Evidence of White the Meſſenger, who ſwears, that afterwards meeting him at Uxbridge, Lun asked him what Gentleman that was, and did not know Mr. Haynes, and yet he takes upon him to prove, that he had ſpoke ſuch Words to him before. I think there is never another material Witneſs againſt Haynes except Whaley, who was an under-Officer in the Kings-Bench; and he ſays, that Haynes while he was a Priſoner there ran away with a Silver Tankard, but he never was indicted or proſecuted for it, tho' he remained afterwards in the Houſe; and this was five or ſix Years ago.

Now, Gentlemen, I think the nature of this Evidence hath not that weight, as to take off the credit of what this Man hath ſaid upon his Oath, eſpccially when this Man's Evidence is ſo backed with the Evidence of other Men, that I think there is no Objection at all againſt it. For the other Witneſſes, Dugdale, Smith and Turbervile, are Men whoſe credit has not been impeached, and they have confirmed in ſubſtance what the Evidence of Haynes is; ſo that he does not ſtand alone in what he here ſwears, but 'tis confirmed with concurrent Evidence with it.

Then, Gentlemen, for the Objection againſt Dugdale, Turbervile and Smith, they have produc'd Dr. Oates to you, and he muſt vilifie the credit of thoſe Men, whoſe Teſtimony as to what he gave at firſt in diſcovering the Popiſh Plot, received credit by being ſeconded by theſe Men. And I cannot but obſerve it as a ſtrange thing, that this Man comes now to vilifie the teſtimony of thoſe, who have given Evidence and been credited by the whole Kingdom; that he ſhould come here upon the Word of a Prieſt to declare, that Mr. Dugdale was a Man of very lewd Converſation, and was a Perſon that had a foul Diſeaſe on him, when he pretended he was poiſoned. I remember this was an Objection that hath been made by the Papiſts to him, and I believe you have heard it often out of their Mouths; but it is the firſt time that ever I heard it from any one that is a Witneſs of the Popiſh Plot, and pretends to ſtand up for the Proteſtant Religion. Gentlemen, if any ſuch thing as this could have been made out againſt him, it had been made out e're now, the Papiſts would have taken advantage of it, and when the wit of all that Party was bent againſt him, he could not have eſcaped the having it proved. If it had been true, yet Dr. Oates takes upon him now to vilifie his credit, and takes up thoſe Arguments the Papiſts have maliciouſly ſuggeſted, but yet were never able to make out. This looks as if the Doctor were again returning to St. Omers, that he is thus going about to diſparage the Evidence of Mr. Dugdale, which in great meaſure verified the truth of that diſcovery, which himſelf firſt made of the Popiſh Plot.

Againſt Turbervile, Gentlemen, I think there hath been very little at all objected that can have weight with you. Mr. Brodgate, as I ſuppoſe you obſerve, has ſaid enough to confirm Turbervile's credit; for he hath proved to you, That when he was tempted to renounce his Evidence againſt the Papiſts, he refuſed to do it, he had more Conſcience than to do it, he knew well enough what he had ſaid was true, and as he had a Soul to ſave, he could not go from it. This is the Evidence that he gives, and which certainly ſerves much to confirm the truth of Turbervile, beſides the ſtrict Examination he hath been under, and beyond any thing that Dr. Oates, I think, has been able to contradict him in.

Dr. Oates contradicts Smith about his coming from the Coffee-houſe to Wilcox's Dinner. He ſays, he did not come along with Mr. Colledge, but Colledge came along with Dr. Oates, and Smith followed them. But, Gentlemen, you hear what Smith hath declared upon his Oath, That they came both together out of the Coffee-houſe; and you hear what his Witneſs Mr. Smith the Councellor ſays: He does not poſitively remember that circumſtance, yet one would think he ſhould; for Oates ſays, Mr. Smith the Lawyer walked juſt before them, and Colledge followed. Mr. Smith that is the Witneſs for the King, he ſwears he came along with Colledge, but Mr. Smith the Lawyer being asked that Queſtion, he does not remember that. Then another thing is, Dr. Oates ſays, when they were there, Colledge was was ſo far from diſcourſing of any Treaſonable matters, that he was very merry in the Company, and talking innocently, but Mr. Smith ſays, he was ſo far from being merry or talking Treaſon, that he fell faſt aſleep, and ſlept behind the Table. Gentlemen, theſe Objections you ſee what the weight of them is, and how little the Evidence agree one with another, but there is nothing that does contradict Mr. Smith in his main Evidence. 'Tis poſſible they may not remember particular Circumſtances, whether Mr. Colledge and Mr. Smith came together, ſo they might come together for ought they know, and they may not remember any Circumſtance about their retiring, but they can't take upon them to ſwear it is not ſo, and their not remembring it does not prove it was not ſo, and the Circumſtance it ſelf is ſo trivial, that there was no neceſſity they ſhould remember it. So then no Evidence that comes from Dr. Oates can take off that that is given by Smith, tho' if Mr. Smith were out of the Caſe, and Mr. Haynes too, yet there is Evidence ſufficient from Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Turbervile who are not impeached, and are both of them poſitive, both to the Fact and to the Place.

There are two Witneſſes more that I muſt mention, and they are Bolron and Mowbray; they ſwear that Smith travelling upon the Road with them, would have ſuborned them to ſwear againſt John Brooks, about a Diſcourſe at ſome place; but it happened, Gentlemen, they differ in point of Time in their Teſtimony; the one ſaid it was the 25th of July, the other was poſitive it was the 3d of Auguſt. But I think I need ſay no more to theſe Men, but only to deſire you to weigh their Credit. Bolron and Mowbray, I confeſs, have been Evidence againſt ſeveral Men that have been accuſed of the Popiſh-Plot, but they have been ſo unfortunate as never to gain Credit with any Jury. Mr. Smith hath been believed by the whole Court of Parliament: But if there were no more in the Caſe, theſe are two Men that never were yet believed, Men that have been ſworn in their own Jury have rejected the Credit of their Teſtimony: But beſides that, comparing the Teſtimonies and the difference that was between them, is a ſufficient Evidence to confront all that they have ſaid.

I think, Gentlemen, this is the Subſtance of what hath been offered by his Witneſſes, againſt the Witneſſes produced for the King, except that of Mr. Everard, who ſays ſomething againſt Haynes, that Haynes ſhould ſay he ſwore for Self-preſervation. And againſt Mr. Smith he ſays that he heard him ſay, he did not know of any, Presbyterian Plot. I believe that may be true, and yet it does not contradict Smith's Evidence againſt Colledge; for Mr. Smith does not tell you, that he was privy to any ſuch Deſign of the Presbyterians, that he knows of any Conſultations that they held, or the ways and means by which they would arrive at the Treaſon charged upon the Priſoner at the Bar, but his Evidence is, That this Man declared there was ſuch a Deſign, That there was a Party would do it, and, That he would be ſure to be one, and Armed himſelf for that purpoſe: But his not being privy to any Plot, or knowing the Particulars, is no Contradiction to what he ſaid.

This is that he hath produced for his Defence, and by theſe things he hath endeavoured to take off the Credit of our Witneſſes, and he would have you believe that he is a very good Proteſtant, tho' he does that which no Proteſtant would do, and which is the Papiſts Work; he hath produced you Witneſſes that he has gone to Church, but I do not ſee he hath produced any Witneſſes at all that are now converſant with him, his own Pariſhoners in London, but if he had brought never ſo many Witneſſes of his going to Church, and of his Conformableneſs to the Church, yet if he were Guilty of theſe Practices, he muſt give me leave to ſuſpect the Truth of his Profeſſion; and I think it a great piece of Arrogance for him to take upon him the Title of a Proteſtant, when he hath abuſed that Title by ſuch unſuitable Practices: And, Gentlemen, if ſuch Practices as theſe are, which we have fully proved, as ſuch as all good Men muſt abhor, I cannot but reflect upon the Condition of this Man, whoſe only hopes is, that you ſhould now forget your ſelves, and become as ill as he is. But as that cannot be preſumed, ſo I ſhall not need to ſay any more to you; you are Men of that conſideration that can judge between things, and the appearances of them, and you know very well how to give the due weight to the Evidence we have given to you, as well as the Objections made by the Priſoner, and ſo, Gentlemen, I ſhall leave it to you.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; It hath been a long time that hath been ſpent in the courſe of this Evidence; whether there has been any Art or Deſign in protracting the time, on Purpoſe to obtrude upon the Patience of the Court, or that you Gentlemen ſhould forget the force of the Evidence that hath been given againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, when there hath been ſo much time taken up unneceſſarily, when there was no occaſion, as I muſt needs ſay, there was not for ſuch a tedious Defence, I leave it to you to determine: But which was truly intimated by the Court at the beginning of the Tryal, muſt in the end of this Cauſe be repeated, and indeed go thro' it all, that we of the King's Council, and what the Priſoner has affirmed, that has not been given in Proof, ſignifying nothing, and is not to be any guide at all to you. You are upon your Oaths, and by the Oath you have taken you are bound in Conſcience to give a Verdict according to the Evidence that has been given to you, and that is your guide; ſo that what we opened and have not proved, is no more to be believed then what the Priſoner has ſaid for himſelf in his own Defence; and whatſoever he ſays, if he make not good Proof of it, is no more to be regarded, then what we who are for the King have alledged, and not made out.

So then this being in the firſt Place premiſed, I ſhall take care as near as I can to ſave the time of the Court, and not to treſpaſs on your Patience, Gentlemen, unneceſſarily, in a Caſe whereupon as great a concern does depend, as perhaps ever came to Tryal at any Bar: For I ſay 'tis a Caſe wherein the Life and the Liberty of the King is concerned, and that is the great concern of the Nation; the Religion of the Nation is concerned; I would be underſtood aright, I mean the Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed by Law; for I know of no other Religion Men ought to Sacrifice their Lives and Fortunes for, but the Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed by Law; and when theſe things are concerned, 'tis a Caſe of great Conſequence: God forbid any Perſon, Proteſtant, or other, ſhould attempt the Life of the King, and the Subverſion of our Religion, and by ſtiling themſelves by the Name of Proteſtants, ſhould excuſe themſelves from any ſuch Crimes.

For the Evidence that has been given, I ſhall not enumerate the Particulars againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, other then ſuch as have been omitted, (if I miſtake not,) by Mr. Sollicitor.

In the firſt Place there are the things that hapned at Oxon, for you have had it already ſufficiently told you by my Lords the Judges who are upon the Bench, and who (under Mr. Colledge's favour) are the Priſoners Judges in Point of Law, as you are his Judges in Point of Fact. They have (I ſay) already told you what the Law is in Relation to Treaſons; that in Caſe the Treaſon be in two Counties, if the Witneſſes ſpeak to the ſelf ſame Treaſon, tho' to different Facts, that will be two Witneſſes to prove High-Treaſon; and that there hath been ſuch a Caſe, the Priſoner at the Bar, who he ſays is a Proteſtant (for his own Soul's ſake I wiſh he were a good one) muſt take notice, that Gavan the great Prieſt who was tryed at Newgate, and convicted, by what Evidence? By one of them that is a Witneſs now againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, that is Dugdale, his Treaſon was committed part in London, part in the Country, of which part Dugdale gave Evidence; but being both to the ſelf ſame Purpoſe, by the greater Part of the Judges, who were in the Commiſſion, and preſent at the Tryal, they were reckoned a ſufficient Teſtimony to prove him Guilty of High-Treaſon: and I hope we do not live to that Age, that any Proteſtant whatſoever ſhould come to trip up the Heels of the Popiſh-Plot; by ſaying, that any of them who ſuffered for it, did die contrary to Law, or without ſufficient Proof: for if Mr. Dugdale was not a Perſon fit to be believed; or if the reſt of the Judges who tried Gavan were out in the Law, then that Man died wrongfully; for he had as much right to have been tryed according to the Law, as any other Perſon whatſoever. Therefore, Gentlemen, as to that matter, we muſt ſubmit it to my Lords the Judges, who are to give you an Account what the Law is in all Particulars before you; but as to the Fact whereof You are Judges, that is the great matter we ſhall apply our ſelves to, and for that it ſtand thus.

Here is Dugdale that does give you an Account what his Deſign was in coming to Oxford; how he came to be armed as an Index (Gentleman) of his mind. And pray give me leave to put you in mind of one thing. You have firſt a Libel produced, and read to you; a pretended Letter, wherein there are Queries that have been taken notice of, and which ſeem to back the Evidence given by Mr. Maſters: for there is a Vindication in thoſe Queries of the Proceedings of that Parliament of 41. which he has confidence enough now at the Bar to juſtifie too. But, Gentlemen, you were told by the Court, and you know it, That that Parliament was guilty of High Rebellion; And even in thoſe Queries he aſperſes not only the Government, but every Man that has any Concern in it; for it takes notice not only of the King, but of all His Council. Never a Judge nor an Officer in the Nation but is traduced by it; and which is moſt material, it was the Foundation of that Libel which has been mentioned to you, and which Fitz-harris was ſo juſtly condemned and executed for, that moſt Traiterous and Infamous Libel in part of it has theſe Queries, and a great Paragraph of this Libel makes up part of that Libel of Fitz-harris, which our Witneſſes ſay Mr. Colledge was pleaſed to affirm was as true as God is in Heaven. Another thing is this, This Gentleman whoſe proper buſineſs it had been to manage his Employment at London for a Joyner, is beſt ſeen in his proper Place uſing the proper Tools of his Trade. I think it had been much more proper for him, and I believe you will think ſo too, than to come with Piſtols and all thoſe Accoutrements about him, to be regulating of the Government; what have ſuch People to do to interfere with the buſineſs of the Government, God be thanked we have a Wiſe Prince, and God be thanked he hath Wiſe Counſellors about Him, and He and they know well enough how to do their own Buſineſs, and not to need the Advice of a Joyner, tho' he calls himſelf the Proteſtant Joyner. What had he to do to engage himſelf, before his Advice was required? How comes he to concern himſelf ſo much that after he had writ this Libel wherein he is pleaſed to take notice of Tyrants, afterwards ſhould go to make a Print, I mean the Raree Shew? And when Dugdale comes to inquire of him, What do you mean by ſuch a thing, The Tyrant ſhall go down? Says he, I mean by that, the King. And what do you mean by having them go to Breda? Why there he explains it, that he puts all the Government, the Lords and the Biſhops upon the King's Back, and being asked what he meant to have done with them, Why, the Biſhops, and the King, and all were to go to Breda. Theſe are the things that himſelf did acknowledge he was the Author of, and theſe Prints he did cauſe to be made, and he is the Perſon that gives you an Account, that it was but the conception and imagination of Dugdale, that Rowley meant the King; but Dugdale being called again, he tells you after ſome time, that he was under ſome difficulty to know the meaning of it; and then Colledge tells him it was meant the King, and ſo he expounded it to him. And ſo Smith tells you of that ſame Name of Old Rowley again. Gentlemen, thus I tell you what hath been omitted. The Evidence hath been long, and therefore we muſt be pardoned, if we can't exactly repeat it. This is the Evidence that was done at Oxon, the next is Mr. Smith, who ſpeaks of what was done in London, and he is an Evidence both as to the Word Rowley, as to the coming with Arms, and as to the declaring to what end he came, and what he had done, Mr. Haynes he tells you both before and after the ſame, and that I muſt take notice of to you, Mr. Smith does particularly ſay, he uſed thoſe Words, which I hope every honeſt Man, and every good Man, that deſires to preſerve the Government according to Law, will hear with the greateſt deteſtation and abhorrence; he talked of the taking away the Life of the late King of bleſſed Memory at ſuch an impudent rate, that every true Proteſtant's Blood would curdle at the hearing of it. And this he ſaid not only to Mr. Maſters, but he juſtified it to Mr. Smith too.

In the next place you have Turbervile, who gives you all the Reaſons, how he did not only tell of theſe Things himſelf, but encouraged him to prepare himſelf accordingly, and he gave him him a Mark, a Ribbon with No Popery, no Slavery. Theſe were Marks whereby they were to be known, and they were to be one and all, as they call it, that when ſuch a Blow was ſtruck, they ſhould be ready to fall in. There is one thing more that I take notice of, that is, what was ſaid by a Gentleman Sir William Jennings which is a confirmation of all the other Evidence, that Gentleman who hath appeared to you to be a Man of Honour, even by the confeſſion of Mr. Colledge himſelf, and by his own Words, for he ſaid like an honeſt Man, and like a Loyal Man too, that he would rather engage himſelf in three Dangers for the Service of the King at Sea, than come in cold Blood to give Evidence againſt a Man for his Life at the Bar. And yet this Man who tells you this of himſelf, and that very Perſon whom Colledge himſelf calls a Worthy Perſon, hath given you this Acoount, that when he told him his Noſe bled, he anſwer'd him, It was the firſt Blood loſt in the Cauſe, but it would not be long e're there was more loſt: An excellent Cauſe for a Man to venture his Blood in. When he was told of this, he began to put it off, and to uſe his own Words, had a great mind to ſham off the buſineſs, but in truth there was no Anſwer given to it. Gentlemen, the Objections that have been made againſt the Evidence that have not been taken notice of, I deſire to take notice of. I think againſt three of them there has been only Mr. Oates, and Mr. Oates, I confeſs, has ſaid, in verbo Sacerdotis, ſtrange things againſt Dugdale, Smith, and Turbervile: I have only the Affirmation of Mr. Oates, and as ill Men may become good Men, ſo many good Men become ill Men; or otherwiſe I know not what would become of ſome part of Mr. Oates's Teſtimony. And in the next place, if theſe Men have not ſworn true, I am ſure Mr. Oates muſt ſtand alone in the greateſt Point, in which all the Evidence agree, that is the Popiſh Plot.

But, Gentlemen, I muſt take notice to you, that it is ſtrange to me, that ever you, upon your Conſciences, ſhould perjure three Men, who poſitively upon their Oaths deny any ſuch Diſcourſes as Mr. Oates ſpeaks of againſt them, I do put that upon your Conſciences, whether you, upon the bare affirmation of Mr. Oates, in this place, will convict three Men, upon whoſe Teſtimony the Lives of ſo many as have ſuffered, have been taken away, and, as we Proteſtants do believe, juſtly. I ſay, whether you will do it upon the bare Affirmation of Mr. Oates, againſt their Oaths.

In the next place, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, Beſides the poſitive Evidence of theſe Gentlemen, there is circumſtance of Improbability in the very words he ſpeaks of. Will any Man tell me, that after ſuch time as Men have given their Oaths, as Smith had given his that he was concerned, and ſo had Dugdale und Turbervile too, that theſe Men ſhould come and voluntarily tell Mr. Oates they were all Forſworn, are theſe Men ſuch great Coxcombs as he would have us to believe? Is it ſo probable a thing, that any Men of common Knowledge would do it? Do you think a Man of that Knowledge and Conſideration, as Smith is, an allowed Scholar, and a Man of known Learning; and Mr. Dugdale, who has been reckoned by all Men to be a good Evidence; do you take theſe Men to be ſuch abſolute Novices, that they muſt ſeek an occaſion to tell him they were bribed off and were Forſworn? If you can think this, and if a bare Affirmation againſt theſe poſitive Oaths can prevail; Gentlemen, upon your Conſciences be it.

In the next place, 'tis a ſtrange ſort of thing to believe, that Mr. Smith ſhould come out of a Coffee-Houſe, where a Quarrel is pretended to have been between him and Colledge, but Mr. Smith does, upon his Oath, ſay, he never had any ſuch Quarrel with him, and that he ſhould fall a damning and ſinking againſt Colledge, and againſt the Goſpel, that there ſhould be ſuch impudence in the World in any Man as to deſire or wiſh ſuch a thing? Gentlemen theſe are ſtrange ſorts of Apprehenſions, and Men muſt have very ſtrange Thoughts, that can ſtrain themſelves up to the belief of them.

In the next place, here it is ſaid by the Priſoner, Good Lord? What a condition we ſhall be in! Here is a Plot upon the Proteſtants! I hope in God there is no Proteſtant Plot, but I alſo hope the whole Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion is not involved in the Priſoner at the Bar, and all will be deſtroyed, if Mr. Colledge dies for Treaſons. Gentlemen, the Queſtion is not, whether there be a Presbyterian or a Proteſtant Plot, we declare we know of none; but whether the Priſoner at the Bar have ſpoken ſuch Words, and done ſuch Things as are ſworn againſt him. And I would fain know what all the Diſcourſes we have had about Iriſh Witneſſes and Papiſts ſignifie, when in all the courſe of our Evidence, there has been but one Iriſh, and never a Papiſt: But here have been great Diſcourſes about Macnamarra and Denis, and what it hath been for, but to make a Noiſe, and raiſe a Duſt, I can't tell, for in this Caſe there has not been one Iriſh Man beſides Haynes, and never a Papiſt throughout the whole Evidence: So that it is eaſie, if Men think it will take with the Auditory, for a Perſon to cry out, O Lord! we are all like to be undone, here are Iriſh Witneſſes brought againſt us. And yet, after all this ſtir, there is but one Iriſh Witneſs, and never a Papiſt. And as for him, Truly, Gentlemen, I muſt take notice, that even Colledge himſelf, till ſuch time as he was taken, reckoned him an honeſt Man.

Colledge. Never in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It was ſo ſaid. But I do ſay, Gentlemen, ſuppoſe (which I do not admit) that the Iriſh Man he ſpeaks of be out of the Caſe; not that the Country is an Objection againſt any Man's Teſtimony, God forbid it ſhould be ſo affirmed; for Truth is not confined to Places, nor to Perſons neither, but applied to all honeſt Men, be they Iriſh Men or others; but, I ſay, ſet Mr. Haynes out of the Caſe: Suppoſe there was no ſuch Man as Haynes in this Caſe; yet I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, you have as great a Proof as poſſibly can be.

In the next place, I muſt take notice to you of ſome Account that hath been given of him by himſelf: It is wonderful ſtrange, when there was that kindneſs of intimation given by the Court, that he ſhould do well to prove his Loyalty, as well as his Religion, but he did not produce ſome of his later Acquaintance. If this Man that makes himſelf a Proteſtant, would have it believed he is ſuch, I wiſh he would have brought ſome of theſe Men that knew him at London, to give you ſome account of him, and not to ſtretch backward ſixteen Yeurs to prove his Birth and Education; that is not the beſt account ſure a Man can give of himſelf, to ſay, after he hath been talking at this diſloyal rate, that he is a good Proteſtant, becauſe he was thought ſo eighteen Years ago.

Again, in the next place, here is an account of the Libels given by the Old Woman that is his Siſter; Truly ſhe would have it, and that is another Libel at the Bar, as tho' the Man in the Red Coat, with R. C. upon it, had dropped this kind of Libel in his Houſe, and ſo he, or ſome body elſe, put a Trick upon him; and becauſe ſhe would inveigle you to ſuch an Interpretation, ſhe ſays that they ſtaid behind till the Man in the Red Coat had fetched away the Shavings, and ſo here is a new Sham-Plot to be put upon the Priſoner, by dropping Papers in his Houſe; a pretty kind of Inſinuation. But, Gentlemen, againſt the Evidence of this Woman, you have the very Perſon that was there, the Officer, who ſwears that he and his Fellows came before the Waterman into the Houſe: But I ſuppoſe you obſerve how that notable talking Maid and ſhe does agree, for the Maid tells you, there came a ſtrange Fellow ſeven Weeks before, delivered theſe Things into her Hands, her Maſter was abroad, and ſhe was not to enquire whence they came, or what they were, but paid him Sixpence for bringing thoſe things. Now 'tis very ſtrange that the Maid ſhould pay for the bringing of thoſe Things, and yet after that ſhould imagine that ſome body elſe ſhould put them there.

But now, Gentlemen, in the next place, I muſt tell you another thing, which I would beg you to take notice of: Here are two Gentlemen, Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray, and they have given you an account, that they have been Evidence againſt the Papiſts; they did well in it; but it hath been their misfortune, hitherto they have not been believed; but whether they have been believed or not before, is no guidance to you at this time: but that which is to guide you is, whether or not they have given you now a Teſtimony that you in your Conſciences can believe. Now, can you believe what they have ſaid; nay, can you believe it without any Circumſtance to confirm it, againſt thoſe expreſs Objections that ariſe from themſelves, and againſt the Oath of the Perſon, when the one tells you ſo exactly of the 25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th of July; and the other tells you, that Smith took Poſt, and yet overtook them not till the Sunday after, which was the third of Auguſt; and when the Almanack is produced, it was ſo far from making out what they ſpake of to be the ſame Time, that whereas one ſaid he came to London the 28th, the other's Almanack ſays it was the 27th; then pray how do theſe Perſons agree, when the one ſays that Mr. Smith talked with him upon the Road the 28th, and the other ſays, that they came to London the 27th. Theſe are Circumſtances, Gentlemen, that you muſt weigh; and you may bring the North and South together, as ſoon as their two Teſtimonies, they are ſo far aſunder. Beſides, Gentlemen, I hope you take notice of a Perſon that was ſworn, a Perſon of ſome Quality, a Scholar in the Univerſity here, that ſays Bolron (tho' he denied it) did ſhew him one of theſe Pictures, and did diſcover they were Mr. Colledge's; and Bolron himſelf, his own Witneſs, tells you, that he did acknowledge one of thoſe Pictures was his. It appears then how buſie he was, and concerned himſelf in what belonged not to his Profeſſion.

So that, upon the whole matter, after this long Evidence that hath been given, I muſt wholly appeal to your Lordſhips and the Jury; as to the Law, to your Lordſhip and the Court; and as to the Fact, to the Jury: for I do not deſire any ſort of Evidence ſhould be ſtrained againſt a Priſoner at the Bar, who is there to be tryed for his Life. God forbid, if he be innocent, but he ſhould be acquitted; But on the other ſide, conſider the Murder of that great King of ever bleſſed Memory is before you, and remember that baſe reflection which the Witneſſes tell you of upon that horrid Action; and as a great Evidence, remember that ſeeming Vindication of it at the Bar, which certainly no Engliſh Man, no Proteſtant according to the Church of England, can hear without having his Blood ſtirred in him. And theſe things are not only teſtified by Dugdale and Smith, but by Gentlemen of known Reputation and Quality; and he hath a little diſcovered himſelf by that defence he hath made againſt their Teſtimony. But know, Gentlemen, that the King is concerned, your Religion is concerned, that Plot that is ſo much agreed to by all Proteſtants is concerned; for if Dugdale, Smith and Turbervile be not to be believed, you trip up the Heels of all the Evidence and Diſcovery of that Plot. Then I will conclude to you, Gentlemen, and appeal to your Conſciences; for according to the Oath that has been given to you, you are bound in your Conſciences to go according to your Evidence, and are neither to be inveigled by us beyond our Proof, nor to be guided by your Commiſeration to the Priſoner at the Bar againſt the Proof; for as God will call you to an account, if you do an injury to him, ſo will the ſame God call you to account, if you do it to your King, to your Religion, and to your own Souls.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I ſhall detain you but a little, and ſhall be as ſhort as I can, for your Patience has been much exerciſed already: It is a burden, and a neceſſary one that lies upon us all, for there is nothing more neceſſary than that ſuch Tryals as theſe ſhould be intire and publick, intire for the Diſpatch of them, and publick for the Satisfaction of the World, that it may appear no Man receives his Condemnation without Evidence, and that no Man is acquitted againſt Evidence.

Gentlemen, there are theſe two Conſiderations in all Caſes of this Nature; the one is, the force of the Evidence; the other is, the truth of the Evidence. As to the force of the Evidence, that is a Point in Law that belongs to the Court, and wherein the Court is to direct you; as to the truth of the Evidence, that is a queſtion in Fact ariſing from the Witneſſes, and muſt be left upon them, whereof you are the proper Judges.

As to the force of the Evidence in this Caſe, it muſt be conſidered what the Charge is; it is the compaſſing the Death of the King, and conſpiring to ſeize the Perſon of the King, which is the ſame thing in effect; for even by the Common Law, or upon the interpretation of the Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3. that mentions compaſſing the Death of the King to be Treaſon, it hath always been reſolved, That whoſoever ſhall imagine to depoſe the King, or impriſon the King, are guilty of imagining the Death of the King;

King; for they are things that depend one upon another; and never was any King depoſed or impriſoned, but with an intention to be put to Death; they are in conſequences the ſame thing.

Now, Gentlemen, in Caſes of Treaſon the Law is ſo tender of the Life of the King, that the very Imagination of the Heart is Treaſon, if there be any thought concerning any ſuch thing; but then it muſt be manifeſted by ſome Overt-Act, upon the Statute of the 25th Edw. 3. but upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, made for the Preſervation of the King's Perſon, if it be manifeſted by malicious and adviſed ſpeaking, 'tis ſufficient. This is as to the Charge, and as to the Law concerning that Charge, I muſt tell you there muſt be two Witneſſes in the Caſe.

Now then, for the force of the Evidence, the Queſtion will ariſe there, whether this Evidence, admitting it to be true, is ſufficient to maintain the Indictment; ſo that if there be two Witneſſes, you muſt find him Guilty. Now as to this, Gentlemen, the Priſoner has before-hand called upon the Court, and had their reſolution; and I hope you will remember what hath been ſaid, and I ſhall have occaſion to trouble you the leſs. There have been ſix Witneſſes produced for the King; there are two of them, Sir William Jennings and Mr. Maſters, that are ſome way applicable to the Caſe, tho' they do not go to the Treaſon, they are only to inferr the Probability of the Treaſon. This of Sir William Jennings, was upon the occaſion of the bleeding of the Priſoner's Noſe, after his Quarrel with Fitz-Gerald, when he ſaid, He had loſt the firſt Blood, and it would not be long e're there would be more loſt; which ſhews there were ſome extraordinary Thoughts in his Heart, concerning ſome Diviſions, Quarrels, and Fighting that he expected ſhould be. That which Mr. Maſters has ſaid, (beſides what he offered concerning his Principles in juſtifying the long Parliament) was this, That when he called him Colonel, Marry mock not, ſaid he, I may be Colonel in time; that ſhews ſome extraordinary thoughts were in his Heart.

Colledge. Will not that bear a more favourable interpretation, my Lord? Muſt that neceſſary follow upon my ſaying, I might be a Colonel in time; and that more Blood would be loſt? if I had expreſſed it ſo.

L. C. J. I ſay you had ſome extraordinary Thoughts in your Heart.

Colledge. I am ſure fitteſt to explain my own Thoughts.

L. C. J. You would have done well to have explain'd it, which Way you expected to be a Colonel.

Colledge. It was not an expectation, for a may be, may not be; my word was, mocking is catching: I thought he had called me Couſin.

L. C. J. Well Gentlemen, theſe are Witneſſes, I ſay, that go not to the Treaſon, but only relate and reflect ſomewhat, to ſhew there were thoughts in his Heart; but no body could tell what they were, or know what he meant by them.

Colledge. Then always they are to be taken in the beſt ſence.

L. C. J. For the other Witneſſes, Stephen Dugdale, John Smith, Bryan Haynes, and Edward Turbervile, they are all of them, taking what they ſay to be true, very full Witneſs. The Priſoner hath objected as to two of them, becauſe they ſpeak to nothing that was done in Oxfordſhire; but Turbervile and Dugdale they ſpeak to what was ſaid in Oxfordſhire. Now for that I muſt tell you, if you believe any of theſe Witneſſes, as to what was ſaid in Oxford, and any of them as to what was ſaid in London, relating to the ſame Fact of Treaſon, they will be two good Witneſſes to maintain the Indictment, tho' the one is in the one County, and the other in another; for if a Treaſon be committed in two Counties, it is the King's election where he will exhibit the Indictment, and the Evidence from both Counties is good Evidence; that I take for Law; and theſe four Witneſſes, with that conſideration that they are true, as I think are full Witneſſes to maintain this Indictment.

Why then the next Head is concerning the truth of this Evidence of which you are to be Judges, and you are the proper Judges whether the Witneſſes ſpeak true or no? therefore you muſt have your own Conſciences to direct you in that caſe, and what I ſhall ſay about them, ſhall be only for your Aſſiſtance.

Gentlemen, I ſhall not take upon me to repeat the Evidence to you, it has been long; and for me to ſpeak out of Memory, I had rather you ſhould recur to your own Memories, and your own Notes; only I ſhall ſay ſomething in general to contract your Conſideration of it.

And, as I told you at firſt, you muſt mind nothing of what the King's Council ſaid, for nothing muſt have Impreſſion upon you, but what they proved; ſo you are not to conſider any thing of the Facts the Priſoner ſpake of, that are not proved neither; for common Juſtice is concerned in it, and no Juſtice can be done at that rate, if the Priſoner's own Affirmations or Purgations ſhould be taken. No Man ever can be accuſed but he will be ready to ſay he is innocent, and ſay as flouriſhing and popular things as ever he can for himſelf. And therefore theſe things muſt not weigh with you further than, as was ſaid, argues upon the Proofs you have had. And you are to conſider upon the Proofs what the Priſoner has produced, not what he ſays; on the other ſide, for the Proofs you have heard a great many Witneſſes in general produced by him, that ſay he was bred a Proteſtant, and has been an honeſt Man, that they knew no ill by him, that will be of little weight in a Caſe of this Conſideration, for unleſs he were a Man that had committed Treaſon to the knowledge of all the World, there is no Man but can produce Witneſſes that know no ill of him, nor any Treaſon nor Harm in him; therefore the Queſtion will lie upon the Credit of the Witneſſes produced for the King barely, and that will be the Conſideration you are only to have, and you are to weigh them in the Ballance againſt the Witneſſes produced againſt them.

Now, Gentlemen, for theſe Witneſſes I ſhall not repeat them to you, but only this I ſhall obſerve in general, that Dugdale and Turbervile, that are the two moſt material Witneſſes relating to what was ſpoken in Oxford-ſhire, have the leaſt ſaid againſt them. I do not remember, I profeſs to you I do not (but your own Notes muſt guide you) that there was any very material thing ſaid againſt them, except what is ſaid againſt them by Dr. Oates, and Dr. Oates does ſay againſt Smith, that he came out of the Coffee-Houſe, and ſwore damn him he would have Colledge's Blood; and when

when he reproved him, and ſaid it was not fit for a Miniſter of the Goſpel to uſe ſuch Expreſſions, he ſaid, God damn the Goſpel: if that be true 'tis a great Reflection upon the Credit of Smith. He ſays as to Dugdale, that when he was expoſtulating with him about his Evidence he excuſed himſelf, that he was in want of Money, and was preſſed to it, and being asked, he did ſay he was preſſed to ſwear againſt his Conſcience, he ſaid yes, and much of the ſame kind he ſays as to Turbervile, that he ſaid he was diſſerted and would not ſtarve. Now all theſe three Witneſſes being called upon their Oaths, deny that which Dr. Oates teſtifies. Now if it were in an indifferent and probable matter to have three Men condemned, and ſet aſide by the Teſtimony of one is not equal, unleſs the Man were of mighty extraordinary Credit, and his Teſtimony of more than ordinary weight. But then I muſt tell you this matter is very improbable, that after Witneſſes had ſworn a thing they ſhould voluntarily acknowledge themſelves to be forſworn, and that without any Provocation, they ſhould at ſeveral times come to this one Man and declare themſelves Rogues and Villains; but if it were probable, here are three Mens Oaths againſt one Man's Affirmation, this I ſay as to what concerns Dugdale and Turbervile, I do not ſee any thing material againſt them; beſides now if you believe them, they are two Witneſſes to the full matter of the Indictment, and two Witneſſes to what was done in Oxford-ſhire, and that ſatisfies all the Conſiderations of Law.

As to the reſt of the Witneſſes Bryan Haynes and John Smith, you have had many Witneſſes produced againſt them, I ſhall not undertake to repeat the Evidence, 'tis your Place and Duty to weigh their Teſtimony, and I ſhall leave it to your Conſideration.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I ſhall add nothing to what my Lord hath ſaid, nor indeed can.

Colledge. My Lord, I wiſh you would look upon your Notes, you would then find there was much more Evidence, that you have not repeated againſt Turbervile and Dugdale, beſides what your Lordſhip urged.

L. C. J. If there be, I refer it to the Memory of the Jury, I can remember no more.

Colledge. I deſire nothing but Juſtice, and true Juſtice.

L. C. J. I am ſure I deſign nothing elſe, you are a Stranger to me; I believe I have ſeen your Face, but I never knew you by Name till now. Look you, if the Jury be like to ſtay, they may take ſomething to refreſh themſelves at the Bar before they go.

Colledge. My Lord, I did ſee when the Bill was brought againſt my Lord Howard, Mr. Attorney-General and Mr. Solicitor were an Hour and half with the Grand-Jury.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You muſt ſay nothing now my Lord has given the Charge.

Colledge. Let me have Juſtice done me, my Lord, that's all I crave, that no body may be with the Jury.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, they might be with the Grand-Jury, but as to the Petty-Jury there ſhall be a Bailiff ſworn, and neither Mr. Attorney nor Mr. Solicitor, nor no Body elſe ſhall come to them till they be agreed of their Verdict.

Mr Juſt. Jones. If that be the thing you ask, you ſhall have it according to the Law.

Colledge. And any Friend of mine may be by.

L. C. J. There ſhall be an Officer ſworn to keep them.

Then the Court called for two Bottles of Sack, which the Jury divided among themſelves at the Bar, for their Refreſhment in the Preſence of the Priſoner.

After which a Bailiff was ſworn, and the Jury withdrawing to conſider of their Verdict, the Court adjourned for half an hour, and when they returned, Proclamation being made for attendance, the Court ſent to ſee whether the Jury were agreed, who immediately came in to Court.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Om. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Om. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. Stephen Colledge, Hold up thy Hand, look upon him you of the Jury: How ſay you, is he Guilty of the High Treaſon, whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Look to him Goaler, he is found Guilty of High Treaſon; what Goods, &c.

At which there was a great Shout given; at which the Court being offended, one Perſon who was obſerved by the Cryer to be particularly concerned in the Shout, was committed to Goal for that Night, but the next Morning having received a publick Reproof, was diſcharged without Fees.

Then it being about three a Clock in the Morning, the Court adjourned to Ten. At which Hour the Court being ſate, and Firſt Mr. Aaron Smith having entred into a Recognizance of 500 l. to appear the firſt Day of the next Term, at the Court of Kings-Bench.

L. C. J. Where is the Priſoner Stephen Colledge?

Cl. of Cr. Set up Stephen Colledge.

Then the Priſoner was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. Hearken to the Court and hold up thy Hand; Thou haſt been Indicted and Arraigned of High Treaſon, and for thy Tryal haſt put thy ſelf upon thy Country, and they have found thee Guilty, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgment on thee to dye according to the Law.

Colledge. My Lord, I have nothing more to offer, but only that I am innocent of what is laid to my Charge; I think it was ſevere againſt me, now contrary to what was ſworn at London: They ſwear now, I was to ſeize the King at Oxon, in London they ſwore I would pluck the King out of Whitehall, but 'tis altered ſince, and now 'tis to ſeize the King at Oxon, but be it either one or t'other (for the one is as true as the other) I am wholly innocent of either, I never had ſuch a thought in my Life, God forgive them that have ſworn againſt me, I have no more to ſay, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you Mr. Colledge, it is too late to profeſs your Innocenee, you have been tryed and found Guilty; but becauſe you ſay it now, 'tis neceſſary for me to ſay ſomething in Vindication of the Verdict, which I think the Court were all very well ſatisfied with: There were ſuf-

ſufficient Proofs to warrant it, and the Jury did according to Juſtice and Right. I thought it was a Caſe, that as you made your own defence, ſmall Proof would ſerve the turn to make any one believe you Guilty. For as you would defend your ſelf by pretending to be a Proteſtant. I did wonder, I muſt confeſs, when you called ſo many Witneſſes to your Religion and Reputation, that none of them gave an Account that they ſaw you receive the Sacrament within theſe many Years, or any of them particularly had ſeen you at Church in many Years, or what kind of Proteſtant you were. If we look to your Words and Actions, it is true, they did prove this, that you were mighty violent and zealous in crying out againſt Popery and the Papiſts; but if we look to your Actions, they ſavoured rather to promote the Papiſts ends. For I muſt tell you, the Papiſts are beſt extirpated, and ſuppreſſed by a ſteady Proſecution of the Laws againſt them, not by violent cryings out, and putting the People into fervent Heats and Confuſions, for that is the thing the Papiſts aim at; they have no hopes any other Way to creep into the Kingdom but by Confuſion, and after the Church is deſtroyed, that is under God the beſt Bulwark againſt them. But you that cryed ſo loud againſt the Papiſts, it was proved here, who you called Papiſts. You had the boldneſs to ſay that the King was a Papiſt, the Biſhops were Papiſts, and the the Church of England were Papiſts. If theſe be the Papiſts you cry out againſt, what a kind of Proteſtant you are, I know not, I am ſure you can be no good one. But truly I thought you would have made better Proof of that thing, when you called ſo many Witneſſes to that Purpoſe, and then if we look to your Politicks, what Opinion you had of the King, it was proved by your diſcourſe, and by Witneſſes, that you could have no Exception to their Teſtimony, that you did juſtify the late horrid Rebellion, and the Conſequents of that was the Murder of the beſt King in the World, that you ſhould go to juſtify the Proceedings of that Parliament, and affirm that they did nothing but what they had juſt cauſe to do. I ſay he that will juſtifie ſuch a thing, if there were the ſame Circumſtances, would do the ſame thing again.

Then if we look upon another Part of your defence, as to your Arms, it was objected you went armed to Oxon, and that was made the Evidence of the Overt-Act when you ſaid by Words your Intentions what you would do, that you would make one to ſeize the King, that you did go armed, you did confeſs, I expected you ſhould have ſaid, you only wore thoſe things for your own defence upon the Road as a Gentleman travelling, or went with your Friends to accompany them out of Town, and defend them from Robbery; but you ſaid, you went to guard the Parliament. I did not underſtand what you meant by it. I do not believe the Parliament ſent for any Guard, or intended to have any Guard. I do not believe that any of them in their Hearts thought they needed a Guard; for I believe there was not a Man that had any thing that looked like that, or any thing of that Nature. For we ſaw, that when the King by the Neceſſity of his Affairs, when the two Houſes differed ſo much, was pleaſed to diſmiſs them; they all departed quietly, not a Man was ſeen to be diſturbed; there was no appearance of any ſuch thing, and how it ſhould come into your Head, that were but a private Man to go to guard the Parliament, I much wonder. Suppoſe all Men of your Condition ſhould have gon to have guarded the Parliament, what an Aſſembly had there been? what a buſtle might they have made, and what confuſion might have been on a ſudden? And tho' you ſay you are no Man of Quality, nor likely to be able to do any thing upon the King's Guards or the King's Perſon, yet if all of your Quality had gone upon the ſame deſign that you did, what ill Conſequences might have been of it, we ſee what has been done by Maſſianello a mean Man in another Country, what by Wat Tyler and Jack Straw in this Kingdom, I confeſs I know not what you meant by it, but very ill things might have happened upon it.

So that theſe things when I look upon them, and conſider the complexion of your defence, it makes an eaſie Proof have credit. But I think there was a full Proof in your Caſe, yet I ſay if there had been a great deal leſs Proof, the Jury might with Juſtice have found you Guilty. And becauſe you now declare your ſelf innocent of all you are charged with, I think my ſelf bound to declare here in Vindication of the Country, and in Vindication of the Juſtice of the Court, that it was a Verdict well given, and to the ſatisfaction of the Court, and I did not find my Brothers did diſlike it. This I ſay to you out of Charity, that you may incline your Mind to a ſubmiſſion to the Juſtice that has overtaken you, and that you may enter into Charity with all Men, and prepare your ſelf for another Life.

There is nothing now remaining, but to pronounce the Sentence which the Law provides for ſuch an Offence, which is this, and the Court does award.

That you Stephen Colledge ſhall be carried from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you ſhall be drawn on an Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be hanged up by the Neck, and be cut down alive, your Privy Members ſhall be cut off, and your Bowels taken out and burnt before your Face, your Head ſhall be cut off from your Body, your Body be divided into four Quarters, which are to be at the King's diſpoſe, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Colledge. Amen. My Lord, I would know what time your Lordſhip is pleaſed to appoint for my Preparation.

L. C. J. That will depend upon the King's Pleaſure, we do not uſe in theſe Caſes of High Treaſon to precipitate the Execution, but we will leave ſuch Order with the Sheriff to receive the King's Pleaſure and obey it. He will not do it ſo ſudden but that you ſhall have Notice to prepare your ſelf, but it depends upon the King's Pleaſure, for your Body is to be at his diſpoſe.

Then the Court adjourned.

The OATH.

YOU ſhall diligently Inquire, and true Preſentment make, of all ſuch Matters, Articles, and Things, as ſhall be given you in Charge, as of all other Matters and Things as ſhall come to your own Knowledge, touching this preſent Service; the King's Counſel, your Fellows, and your own, you ſhall keep ſecret; you ſhall preſent no Perſon for Hatred or Malice; neither ſhall you leave any one unpreſented for Fear, Favour, or Affection, for Lucre or Gain, or any hopes thereof, but in all things you ſhall preſent the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, to the beſt of your knowledge.

So help you GOD.

L. C. J. Pemberton. GEntlemen of the Jury, we are all met here in one of the moſt ſolemn Aſſemblies of this Nation; it is upon the execution of Juſtice upon ſuch as ſhall be found Offenders, and guilty of the breach of the King's Laws.

This Commiſſion by which we ſit, and you are ſummoned, doth in its Nature extend to all Offences whatſoever againſt the Laws of the Land, Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Felonies, and all other Crimes and Offences againſt the King and his Government, ſuch as are vulgularly called Pleas of the Crown; they all fall under our Cognizance and your Enquiry in a general manner. But I muſt tell you, there is a particular occaſion for this Commiſſion at this time. His Majeſty having Information of ſome Evil, traiterous Deſigns againſt his Perſon and Government, has thought fit to direct a due Examination of them, and that the Perſons may be brought to condign Puniſhment who ſhall be found Guilty thereof. You muſt not therefore expect any general and formal Charge from me; Truly I came hither this Morning, with an apprehenſion, that you had had your directions given you before by the Recorder, for it is our uſual Way not to come until the Juries are Sworn in this Place, and their directions given them; but ſince I find it otherwiſe, I take it to be my Duty to ſay ſomething to you, but ſhall not go about now to make any ſuch formal Charge, as in Commiſſions of this Nature is wont to be done, nor to give an account of all Offences that fall under your Enquiry of a Grand Inqueſt, Impannelled by vertue of ſuch a Commiſſion at large: nor muſt you expect I ſhould acquaint you with all the Crimes that you may enquire of as ſuch an Inqueſt.

I ſhall content my ſelf ſo far, as on the ſudden I can recollect my Thoughts, to acquaint you with the Nature of thoſe Bills; with the Enquiry whereof, you ſhall at preſent, upon this occaſion, be troubled, and your Duty concerning that Enquiry. I hinted to you at firſt, that they are matters of High-Treaſon, which is a Crime of the greateſt and higheſt Nature of any Crime that can be committed againſt Man; other Crimes, as Felonies, Riots, Treſpaſſes, and Things of that Nature, they may occaſion Diſorders and Troubles in a State or a Kingdom. But, I muſt tell you, Treaſon ſtrikes at the root and life of all; it tends to deſtroy the very Government, both King and Subjects, and the Lives, Intereſt and Liberties of all, and therefore has always been look'd upon as a Crime of the moſt notorious Nature that can be whatſoever, and accordingly Puniſhments have been appointed for it of the higheſt and ſevereſt extremity. There was at Common Law great variety of Opinions concerning Treaſon, and there were many Diſputes about it what ſhould be Treaſon, and what not; and therefore it was thought fit, by the Wiſdom of our Anceſtors, to have a Law to declare Treaſon: and by the Statute of the 25th of Edward the 3d, there was a plain Declaration made of what was Treaſon, and what not: by that Law, for any one to compaſs, imagine, or intend the Death of the King, (for I will give you no more of that Statute, nor concerning the ſenſe thereof, than may be for your Purpoſe now); I ſay, by that Law, to compaſs, imagine, or intend the Death of the King, and to declare it by Overt-Act, or to levy War againſt the King were declared (amongſt other things in that Statute mentioned) to be High-Treaſon: And this hath obtained for Law among us ever ſince; and by that ſtanding Law, nothing is to be accounted Treaſon, but what is therein particularly declared ſo, but upon many emergent Occaſions there hath been ſeveral other Laws, as the caſe hath required now and then, for to declare and bring other particular Crimes within the compaſs of Treaſons: ſo there was a Law made in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, for enacting ſeveral Crimes to be Treaſons, during her Life, which was made upon the occaſion of the inveterate Malice of the Roman Catholicks againſt her and her Government; and ſo there hath been in other Kings Reigns upon other Occaſions.

Amongſt the reſt, it was thought fit by the Parliament aſſembled here, in the thirteenth Year of this preſent King, to make a particular Law for the enacting and declaring ſeveral Crimes to be Treaſons, during this King's Life; they had great Grounds, and too much Occaſion for it, and ſo they expreſs it in the Preamble of that Law. The Wounds which the then late Treaſons had made, that had ſo far obtained in this Kingdom, were then ſtill bleeding, ripe, and ſcarcely cloſed; many traiterous Poſitions, and many ſeditious Principles were ſpread, and had obtained and gained footing among the People of this Kingdom; and the Parliament had Reaſon to believe, that where they had been ſo maliciouſly bent againſt the King and his Family, and had taken off his Father, and maintained ſo long and dangerous a War againſt him, almoſt to the utter Deſtruction and Extirpation of him, and all his good Subjects, and of his, and all our Intereſts, Properties, and Liberties, and had almoſt deſtroy'd a Flouriſhing Kingdom: here they had Reaſon, I ſay, to be careful, to prevent the like Miſchiefs for the Future; therefore, Gentlemen, they did think fit to make a new Law for this Purpoſe: and whereas the Law before was, that it ſhould be Treaſon to compaſs, imagine, or intend the Death of the King, ſo as it were declared by Overt-Act; now they thought it would be dangerous to ſtay till an Overt-Act ſhould declare the Intention; for when they had ſeen ſuch malicious and evil Deſigns againſt the King and ſupreme Authority; and that they had prevailed ſo far, as to Murder one King, and Baniſh another; and had gone a great Way in the Deſtruction of the Government of this Kingdom, abſolutely to root it quite out: they had Reaſon then, as much as they could, to prevent the Deſigns before they ſhould grow full ripe, and vent themſelves in Overt-Acts; therefore it was enacted by that Statute, made in the 13th Year of this King's Reign, "That if any "one ſhould compaſs, imagine, or intend the "Death of the King, or his Deſtruction, or any "bodily harm, that might tend to his Death or "Deſtruction, or any maiming or wounding his "Perſon, any Reſtraint of his Liberty, or any "Impriſonment of him; or if any ſhould deſign "or intend to levy any War againſt him, either "within the Kingdom, or without; or ſhould "deſign, intend, endeavour, or procure any "Foreign Prince to invade theſe his Dominions, "or any other of the King's Dominions, and "ſhould ſignifie or declare this by any Writing, "or by any Preaching or Printing, or by any "adviſed, malicious Speaking, or Words, this "ſhall be High-Treaſon.

Now this hath altered the former Law greatly, eſpecially in two Caſes: Firſt, as to levying of War; the Intention was not Treaſon before, unleſs it had taken Effect, and War had been actually levyed: and then as to the deſigning and compaſſing the King's Death, that was not Treaſon, unleſs it was declared by an Overt-Act: and as to the impriſoning, or reſtraining of the Liberty of the King, they of themſelves alone were not High-Treaſon; but now by this Law theſe are made Treaſon, by this Law, during His Majeſty's Life: and the very deſigning of them, whether they take effect, or not take effect, tho' it be prevented (before any Overt-Act,) by the timely Prudence of the King and his Officers, tho' it ſhould be timely prevented, that there is no hurt done; yet the very deſign, if it be but utter'd and ſpoken, and any ways ſignified by any Diſcourſe; this (Gentlemen) is made Treaſon, by this Act; and this hath wrought very great Alteration in the Caſe of Treaſon now; formerly it was ſaid, and ſaid truly enough, that Words alone would not make Treaſon; but ſince this Act, Gentlemen, Words, if they import any malicicions deſign againſt the King's Life and Government; any traiterous intention in the Party; ſuch Words are Treaſon now within this Act: and this Act was made with great Prudence, and with great Care to take off that undue Liberty that Men had taken to themſelves; in thoſe times of Licentiouſneſs, People had taken to themſelves an undecent, and undue Liberty to vent all their ſeditious and malicious Minds one to another, without any Reſtraint at all: therefore now, Gentlemen, you muſt conſider, that Words, if they ſignifie or purport any traiterous Intention or Deſign in the Party, either againſt the King or His Government; either to reſtrain his Liberty, or impriſon him, or to do Him any bodily Hurt, or any Crime of that Nature; this is Treaſon within this Act of Parliament.

Look ye, Gentlemen, now as to the Indictments that ſhall be brought before you, you are to conſider theſe things: 1. Whether the Matter contained in them, and which you ſhall have in Evidence, be Matter of Treaſon within the former, or this Act of Parliament? And here, if you doubt of it, then you muſt adviſe with us that are commiſſionated by His Majeſty to hear and determine theſe Crimes; and in Matters of Law we ſhall direct you: and you are to enquire if there be two Witneſſes that ſhall teſtifie the Matters in Evidence to you, for without two Witneſſes no Man is to be impeached within theſe Laws; but if there be two Witneſſes that ſhall teſtifie to you Matters to make good the Indictments, then you have ground to find the Indictments. But I muſt tell you as to this Caſe of two Witneſſes, it is not neceſſary that they ſhould be two Witneſſes to the ſame Words, or to Words ſpoken at one time, or in the ſame Place; that is not neceſſary: if one be a Witneſs to Words that import any traiterous Deſign and Intention, ſpoken at one Time, and in one Place; and another teſtifie other ſeditious and traiterous Words, ſpoken at another Time, and in another Place; theſe two are two good Witneſſes within this Statute, and ſo it hath been ſolemnly reſolved by all the Judges of England upon a ſolemn Occaſion.

Look ye, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, That that which is referr'd to you, is to conſider, whether upon what Evidence you ſhall have given unto you, there be any Reaſon or Ground for the King to call theſe Perſons to an Account; if there be probable Ground, it is as much as you are to enquire into: you are not to judge the Perſons, but for the Honour of the King, and the Decency of the Matter; it is not thought fit by the Law, that Perſons ſhould be accuſed and indicted, where there is no colour nor ground for it; where there is no kind of ſuſpicion of a Crime, nor Reaſon to believe, that the thing can be proved, it is not for the King's Honour to call Men to an Account in ſuch Caſes: therefore you are to enquire, whether that that you hear be any Cauſe or Reaſon for the King to put the Party to anſwer it. You do not condemn, nor is there ſuch a ſtrict Enquiry to be made by you, as by others, that are ſworn to try a Fact, or Iſſue: a probable Cauſe, or ſome Ground, that the King hath to call theſe Perſons to anſwer for it, is enough, Gentlemen, for you to find a Bill, 'tis as much as is by Law required. Gentlemen, you muſt conſider this, That as it is a Crime for to condemn innocent Perſons, ſo it is a Crime as great to acquit the Guilty, and that God that requires one of them, requires both; ſo that you muſt be as ſtrict in the one, as you would be in the other. And let me tell you, if any of you ſhall be Refractory, and will not find any Bill, where there is a probable ground for an Accuſation, you do therein undertake to intercept Juſtice, and you thereby make your ſelves Criminals, and Guilty, and the Fault will lie at your Door. You muſt conſider, Gentlemen, you are under a double Obligation here to do Right; you are under the Obligation of Engliſh-men, as we are all Members of one great Body, of which the King is Head; and you are engag'd, as Engliſh-men, to conſider, That Crimes of this Nature ought not to go unpuniſh'd: then you have an Oath of God upon you, you are here ſworn to do according to what the Evidence is. Now therefore, if you have two Witneſſes of Words that may import a treaſonable Deſign or Intention in any of thoſe Parties, againſt whom you ſhall have Indictments offer'd to you, you are bound both by the Law of Nature, as you are Members of this Body; and by the Law of God, as you have taken an Oath upon you, for to find thoſe Bills.

Gentlemen, Compaſſion or Pity is not your Province, nor ours in this Caſe; there is no room for that in Enquiries of this nature, that is reſerv'd to an higher and ſuperior Power, from which ours is deriv'd: Therefore, Gentlemen, I muſt require you to conſider ſuch Evidence as ſhall be given you, and to be impartial according to what you ſhall hear from the Witneſſes, if you have ground, upon what Evidence you ſhall have given to you, to believe, that there is any reaſon or cauſe for the King to call the Perſons named in ſuch Indictments, as ſhall be tender'd to you, to anſwer for what is objected againſt them therein, you are to find thoſe Bills; that is all that I ſhall ſay to you, only pray God to direct you in your Enquiry, that Juſtice may take place.

[Then a Bill of High-Treaſon was offer'd againſt the Earl of Shaftsbury; and Sir Francis Withins moved, That the Evidence might be heard in Court.]

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, You hear it is deſired by the King's Council, (and that we cannot deny) that the Evidence may be publickly given, that it may not be hereafter in the Mouths of any ill-minded Perſons abroad, to ſcatter any Miſtakes or Untruths up and down; or to ſlander the King's Evidence, or to ſay any thing concerning them that is not true: therefore we cannot deny this motion of the King's Council, but deſire that you will take your Places, and hear the Evidence that ſhall be given you.

[The Jury then deſired a Copy of their Oath, which the Court granted, and then they withdrew. After ſome little time they returned, and then the Clerk called them by their Names.]

Foreman. My Lord Chief Juſtice, it is the Opinion of the Jury, that they ought to examine the Witneſſes in private, and it hath been the conſtant Practice of our Anceſtors and Predeceſſors to do it, and they inſiſt upon it as our right to examine in private, becauſe they are bound to keep the King's Secrets, which they cannot do if it be done in Court.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen of the Jury, it may very probably be, that ſome late uſage has brought you into this Error, that it is your Right; but it is not your Right in Truth: For I will tell you, I take the Reaſon of that uſe for Grand Juries to examine the Witneſſes privately and out of Court, to comply with the Conveniencies of the Court, for generally upon ſuch Commiſſions as theſe are, the buſineſs is much; and at Goal-Deliveries there are a great many Perſons to be indicted and tried, and much other Work beſides, of other Natures, to be done: and if at ſuch times we ſhould examine all Buſineſſes publickly in the Court, it would make the buſineſs of theſe Commiſſions of a wonderful great Length and Cumbrance. Therefore the Judges, for the Conveniency of the Matter, have allow'd, that Witneſſes ſhould go to the Jury, and they to examine them; not that there is any Matter of Right in it, for without queſtion originally all Evidences were given in Court; the Jury are Officers and Miniſters of the Court by which they enquire, and Evidence ſure was all given in Court formerly; and the Witneſſes ſtill are always ſworn in Court, and never otherwiſe. And, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, 'tis for your Advantage, as well as for the King's, that it may be ſure, that you comply with your Evidence, that you do nothing clandeſtinely; therefore 'tis for your Advantage that this is done, and the King likewiſe deſires it. Now I muſt tell you, that if the King require it of us, and it is a thing that is in its Nature indifferent, we ought to comply with the King's Deſire, to have it examin'd in Court; you ſhall have all the Liberty that you can have in private; what Queſtion ſoever you will have ask'd, your ſelves ſhall ask it, if you pleaſe, and we will not cramp you in Time, nor any thing of that Nature. Therefore Gentlemen, there can be no kind of Reaſon why this Evidence ſhould

ſhould not be given in Court. What you ſay concerning your keeping your Counſels, that is quite of another Nature, that is, your Debates, and thoſe things, there you ſhall be in private for to conſider of what you hear publickly. But certainly it is the beſt Way, both for the King, and for you, that there ſhould in a Caſe of this Nature, be an open and plain Examination of the Witneſſes, that all the World may ſee what they ſay.

Foreman. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I muſt beg your Lordſhip's Pardon; if I miſtake in any thing, it is contrary to the Sence of what the Jury apprehend. Firſt, They apprehend that the very Words of the Oath doth bind them, it ſays, That they ſhall keep the Council's, and their own Secrets: now, my Lord, there can be no Secret in publick; the very intimation of that doth imply, that the Examination ſhould be ſecret; beſides, my Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon if we miſtake, we do not underſtand any thing of Law.

Mr. Papillon. Your Lordſhip is pleaſed to ſay, that it hath been the common Uſage and Practice; ſometimes, my Lord, we have heard, that that hath been the Law of England, that hath been the Cuſtom of England: If it be the ancient Uſage and Cuſtom of England, that hath never been alter'd from time to time, and hath continued ſo, we deſire your Lordſhip's Opinion upon that, as we would not do any thing that may be prejudicial to the King, ſo we would not do the leaſt that ſhould be prejudicial to the Liberties of the People; if it be the ancient Cuſtom of the Kingdom to examine in private, then there is ſomething, may be very prejudicial to the King in this publick Examination; for ſometimes in examining Witneſſes in private, there come to be diſcover'd ſome Perſons Guilty of Treaſon, and Miſpriſion of Treaſon, that were not known, nor thought on before. Then the Jury ſends down to the Court, and gives them intimation, and theſe Men are preſently ſecur'd; whereas, my Lord, in caſe they be examined in open Court publickly, then preſently there is intimation given, and theſe Men are gone away. Another thing that may be prejudicial to the King, is, that all the Evidences here will be foreknown before they come to the main Trial upon Iſſue by the Petty-Jury; then if there be not a very great deal of Care, theſe Witneſſes may be confronted by raiſing up Witneſſes to prejudice them, as in ſome Caſes it has been: then beſides, the Jury do apprehend that in private, they are more free to examine things in particular for the ſatisfying their own Conſciences, and that without Favour or Affection; and we hope we ſhall do our Duty.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Papillon, it is reaſonable that we ſhould give you our Advice in this Caſe: I muſt tell you, if you had conſider'd of what I had ſaid before, I thought I had obviated, theſe Objections: Firſt, as to that you do ſay that you are bound to conceal your Counſels, and the King's Secrets, that is very true; as to your Counſels, that is, your Debates, you are bound to conceal them: as to the King's Secrets, ſo long as he will have them kept ſecret, you are bound to keep them ſo too, but it doth not deprive the King of the benefit of having it publick, if he have a Deſire for it; you don't break your Oath, if the King will make it publick; you don't make it publick, 'tis the King does it. Then as to that that you do ſay, that you apprehend the common Uſage of the Kingdom to be a Law; that is true, Mr. Papillon, in ſome ſence; a conſtant and uninterrupted Uſage goes for a Law among us; but I thought I had told you before, that both of ancient and later Times there have been Examinations of the Witneſſes in Court in Caſes of this Nature; and we are not without precedents of it every Year, every Term, continually from Time to Time, Evidence is heard in Court by the Grand-Jury; it is as uſual a thing with us, as any thing, if it be deſired, nothing more frequent, or more common: I never heard it deny'd, or ſtood upon by any Grand-Jury, in my Life, till of late here; you may be inſtructed with a thouſand Preſidents, for I am ſure it is a common and ordinary Caſe upon ſuch Occaſions, if deſired to hear the Evidence in Court.

Look ye, Gentlemen, as to that care that you have of the King's Affairs, the King has Reaſon to take it well that you are ſo careful for them; and that you are ſo mindful of his Concerns, he hath a great deal of Reaſon to think well of you for it: and, Gentlemen, conſider this, that His Majeſty's Council have certainly conſidered of this Evidence, before they brought this to a publick Enquiry; or elſe it would be a hard thing if they ſhould come raw, and not know what the Witneſſes can ſay; for tho' you are the Jury to hear the Witneſſes, yet you muſt conſider, that the King's Council have examined whether he hath cauſe to accuſe theſe Perſons, or not; and, Gentlemen, they underſtand very well, that it will be no Prejudice to the King to have the Evidence heard openly in Court; or elſe the King would ne're deſire it.

Foreman. My Lord, the Gentlemen of the Jury deſire that it may be recorded, that we inſiſted upon it as our Right; but if the Court o'er rule, we muſt ſubmit to it.

L. C. J. Here are enough Perſons to take Notice of it; to make Records of ſuch things, is not uſual; it is not our buſineſs here to record every thing, that every Man will deſire to be recorded: we can record nothing but what is in Order to the Proceedings, but Notice enough is taken of it; you need not fear but that there will be Witneſſes enough.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, I muſt ſay ſomething to fortifie what my Lord Chief Juſtice has ſaid: if any of us had been of a different Opinion, we would have ſpoken it; the ſame thing was ſtood upon, and diſcourſed on the laſt Seſſions, and then all the Judges were of this Opinion, and in what all the Judges agree to, you ſhould acquieſce. I muſt tell you from my own Experience; where the King will, he ought to have it kept ſecret: I have not known it done publickly in the orderly Courſe of Buſineſs; but I have often known where it hath been deſir'd by thoſe which proſecute for the King, that Evidence hath been given openly; and I never knew it deny'd: if any of my Brothers think otherwiſe, I deſire they would ſpeak; but, I tell you, as to my Experience, this is the Caſe.

Mr. Sheriff P. I deſire the Witneſſes may be kept out of the Court, and called one by one.

L. C. J. It is a thing certainly, that the King's Council will not be afraid of doing; but Sheriffs do not uſe to move any thing of this Nature in Court,

Court, and therefore 'tis not your Duty, Mr. Sheriff, to meddle with it.

Sheriff P. It was my Duty laſt time, my Lord, and appointed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Rob. Sawyer. You were acquainted 'twas not your Duty laſt time, and you appear againſt the King.

Then the Indictment was read.

London ſſ. 'The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths preſent, that Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, late of the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Soveraign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, his Natural Lord, the Fear of God in his Heart not having, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the Cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing, and with all his Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquility in this Kingdom of England, to diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, to ſtir up and move, and the Government of our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to ſubvert, and him our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, from the Title Honour and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive, and Him our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the 18th Day of March, in the three and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Soveraign Lord, Charles the Second, now King of England, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as afterward, in the Pariſh of St. Mary Le Bow, in the Ward of Cheap, London, traiterouſly compaſſed, imagined and intended the Death and final Deſtruction of our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, and the ancient Government of his Kingdom of England, to change, alter, and wholly to ſubvert, and Him our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, from the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of his Imperial Crown of this Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, to move and levy within this Kingdom of England; and his ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſes, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfill and perfect, he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, as a falſe Traytor, with divers Armed Men, Subjects of our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, then being, maliciouſly, traiterouſly and adviſedly did provide and prepare to be aiding to him the ſaid Earl of Shaftsbury, to fulfill and perfect his Treaſons aforeſaid. And his ſaid wicked Treaſons, traiterous Compaſſes, Imaginations and Purpoſes, the ſooner to fulfill and perfect, he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury as a falſe Traytor, with one John Booth, and other Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, then and there traiterouſly aſſembled, met and conſulted; and the ſame wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſes, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, then and there to the ſaid John Booth, and other Perſons, to the Jury unknown, in the hearing of divers Liege Subjects of our Soveraign Lord the King, then and there preſent, openly, publickly, maliciouſly, traiterouſly and adviſedly did ſay and declare, and to perſwade and induce the ſaid John Booth to be aiding and aſſiſting in his ſaid Treaſons, Compaſſes, Imaginations and Purpoſes, he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, as a falſe Traytor, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traiterouſly, the ſaid 18th Day of March, in the three and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, within the City of London aforeſaid, falſly, adviſedly, ſubtilly, maliciouſly and traiterouſlly ſaid, aſſerted and declared, that in a ſhort Time the Parliament was to ſit at Oxford, and that he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury had inſpected the Elections, and conſidered the Inclinations and Diſpoſitions of the generality of the Members of Parliament elected; and that he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury was ſatisfied that the Parliament would inſiſt upon three Matters, (to wit) The Bill of Excluſion againſt the Duke of York; the Aboliſhing the Act of Parliament of the 35th of Queen Elizabeth, and the paſſing of a New Bill for uniting Proteſtant Diſſenters; with divers other good and wholeſome Bills. To which he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury was certain that the King's Majeſty would refuſe to give his Royal Aſſent; and therefore he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury did expect that there would be a Diviſion between the King's Majeſty and the Parliament; and that many Noble Lords and Worthy Members of the lower Houſe did concur in the ſame Opinion; and they were reſolved to inſiſt upon the paſſing of thoſe Bills: And if the King's Majeſty refuſed, that they (meaning him the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, and the ſaid Noble Lords and Worthy Members) had provided Strength to compel the King's Majeſty to grant thereunto: and that for his Part, he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury had provided ſtout Men to be commanded by Captain Wilkinſon, (meaning one Henry Wilkinſon, one of the Subjects of our ſaid now Soveraign Lord the King); of which he the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury had agreed that the ſaid John Booth ſhould be one.

'And further, the Jurors aforeſaid upon their Oath do ſay, that the aforeſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, his ſaid wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Imaginations, to fulfill, perfect, and bring to effect afterwards; to wit, the ſaid eighteenth Day of March, in the Thirty-third Year of his ſaid now Majeſty's Reign, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, within the City of London aforeſaid, as a falſe Traytor in the preſence and hearing of divers liege People of our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, then and there preſent, openly and publickly, falſly, maliciouſly, adviſedly and traiterouſly ſaid, aſſerted, publiſhed, and with a loud Voice declared, that our ſaid now Lord the King was a Man of no Faith, and that there was no truſt in him; and that our ſaid Lord the King deſerved to be depoſed, as well as Richard the Second, late King of England, deſerved.

'And further, the Jurors aforeſaid upon their Oath do ſay, that the ſaid Anthony Earl of

'Shafts-

'Shaftsbury, his ſaid wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Imaginations aforeſaid, to be fulfilled and 'perfected, and brought to effect the ſaid 18th 'Day of March, in the three and thirtieth Year 'of his ſaid now Majeſty's Reign, in the Pariſh 'and Ward aforeſaid, in the City of London a-'foreſaid, as a falſe Traytor, in the preſence and 'hearing of divers liege Subjects of our ſaid 'Lord the King then and there preſent, openly 'and publickly, falſly, malicioufly, adviſedly, 'and traiterouſly ſaid, aſſerted, publiſhed, and 'with a loud Voice declared, that he the ſaid 'Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury would never deſiſt, 'until he had brought this Kingdom of England 'into a Commonwealth without a King, and 'that the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, and all 'thoſe that him the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shafts-'bury would aſſiſt, (and he knew many that 'would aſſiſt him the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shafts-'bury) would make England a Commonwealth as 'Holland was: and that he the ſaid Anthony Earl 'of Shaftsbury, and other Traytors unknown, 'would live as in Holland, and that he our ſaid 'Lord the King, and all his Family, ſhould be 'rooted out.

'And further, the Jurors aforeſaid do ſay, 'that the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, his ſaid 'wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Imaginations 'aforeſaid, to be fulfilled, perfected, and 'brought to Effect afterwards, the ſaid 18th Day 'of March, in the three and thirtieth Year of his 'ſaid now Majeſty's Reign, in the Pariſh and 'Ward aforeſaid, in the City of London aforeſaid, as a falſe Traytor, in the preſence and 'hearing of divers liege Subjects of our ſaid So-'veraign Lord the King then and there preſent, 'openly, publickly, falſly, malicioufly, adviſed-'ly, and traiterouſly ſaid, aſſerted, publiſhed, 'and with a loud Voice declared, that our now 'Soveraign Lord the King was a Man of an un-'faithful Heart, and not worthy to be truſted, 'and not fit to rule and govern, being falſe, un-'juſt, and cruel to his People; and if he would 'not be governed by his People, that they '(meaning him the ſaid Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, 'and other Traytors to the Jurors unknown) our 'ſaid Soveraign Lord the King would depoſe, 'againſt his Allegiance and Duty, and againſt 'the Peace of our ſaid Soveraign Lord the King, 'his Crown and Dignity, &c. and againſt the 'form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and pro-'vided, &c.

Sir Fr. Withens. Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment againſt the Earl of Shaftsbury; I ſhall not trouble you to open the Indictment, becauſe the Evidence will be ſomewhat long, I ſhall only tell you which Way we ſhall go——

L. C. J. North. I do not know whether you deſire the Witneſſes ſhould be examin'd apart, do you deſire that, Gentlemen?

L. C. J. If you do deſire it, Gentlemen, they ſhall, for Mr. Sheriff hath nothing to do with it; but if you do deſire it, you ſhall have the Witneſſes call'd one at a time, and all the reſt ſhall be put out of the Court.

Jury. My Lord, it is our deſire.

L. C. J. We did deny it to Mr. Sheriff, becauſe we are to keep Men within their Duty. Here it is not his Duty to meddle with any thing of this Nature.

Foreman. My Lord, we deſire we may have a Liſt of their Names, and that they may be put apart, that they may not hear what one another ſay.

Sir Fr. Withens. My Lord, there is one part I would open.

L. C. J. There is no need for it at all — You ſhall have their Names told you as they are call'd.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, we pray we may have a Liſt of their Names.

L. C. J. If you deſire it, you may have it, but it will be no advantage, for you will hear them named, and you may write them down as they come in.

Mr. Godfrey. We deſire a Liſt, for you told us, the King's Council had examin'd them, and knew who they were.

L. C. J. I'll tell you the Court is to have their Names indorſed, for they don't bring Witneſſes in hugger-mugger, and I ſuppoſe they are indorſed here.

L. C. J. North. It is want of Experience that makes you ask this; you are told, they are indorſed here.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, you muſt have the Indictment it ſelf out with you, and all their Names written upon the back of that Indictment; but that you ſhould deſire to have the Names of them in a Roll beforehand, I do not know, if there be any Reaſon that you can aſſign for it.

Foreman. One thing more I have to ſay, that we may ſee the Warrant by which the Earl of Shaftsbury was committed, for there are ſome other Queſtions depend upon it.

L. C. J. That we cannot do, for the Lieutenant of the Tower hath that Warrant, which he keeps for his Indemnity; we cannot demand it from him upon any Terms: Any thing that you do deſire of us, let us know; what is reaſonable, and within our Power, we will grant; and for other deſires of yours, we tell the Reaſon why we cannot grant them.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I will only acquaint your Lordſhip, that the Gentlemen of the Jury do ſeem to be of Opinion, that your Lordſhip gives them leave to examine the Witneſſes; and the Jury, becauſe they would not put the Court to too much trouble, do deſire, that the Witneſſes ſhould come one after another, and make their Information, and then the Jury would withdraw, to conſider what proper Queſtions to ask them, and come down again.

L. C. J. You ſhall do ſo, Gentlemen. Look you, we did at the Requeſt of the laſt Jury uſe the ſame method; after they had heard the Witneſſes what they gave in Evidence, they came and deſired leave to ask them ſome Queſtions, which was granted, and they were all call'd one by one, and they did examine them; you ſhall do ſo, Gentlemen.

Mr. Att. Gen. I was informed this Morning there were ſeveral Queſtions to be askt of ſeveral Witneſſes to direct the Grand-Jury how to demean themſelves.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, the Requeſt is reaſonable enough.

Mr. Harriſon. We deſire they may be examined one by one.

L. C. J. North. I ſuppoſe you don't ſtand upon it for theſe Witneſſes, they are Clerks of the Council, that only prove a Paper which it ſeems was

was found in the Earl of Shaftsbury's Houſe: if you will they may go out and be call'd in again.

Harriſon. We humbly beg it.

Mr. Godfrey. I was Foreman of the Jnry at Fitz-Harris's Tryal, and it was complained he had hard Meaſure from ſome Iriſh Witneſſes, and that it was ſevere that they ſhould be examin'd in Troops: it hath troubled me ſince that I did not put them out and examine them apart.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, you that are Witneſſes for the King, you muſt go all out, and come in as you are called, one by one.

Which done William Blathwait Eſq; was produced, and a Paper delivered in.

Mr. Saunders to Mr. Blathwait. I pray Sir, give an Account how you came by that Paper.

W. Blathwait. This Paper, Gentlemen, was put into my Cuſtody by Mr. Gwyn, Clerk of the Council, who ſeiz'd it among others in my Lord Shaftsbury's Houſe: he gave me the Key of the Room where they were kept, and it hath been altogether in my Cuſtody, except for a ſhort Time that it was delivered to Mr. Secretary Jenkins, by whom it was re-delivered to me. Mr. Gwyn having ſeiz'd Papers at my Lord Shaftsbury's Houſe brought them to the Council-Office, and put them into one of the Rooms, and lock'd the Door, and deliver'd the Key to me. When I was order'd by the Committee of Examinations, I fetch'd up the Trunks and Papers, and brought them into the Council-Chamber, and the Trunks were opened in the Preſence of ſome of the Lords of the Council, and in the Preſence of Mr. Wilſon, who was appointed to attend there on the behalf of my Lord Shaftsbury, and he was always preſent when the Papers were taken out of the Trunks and Bags: this was one Paper, and was taken out upon the 6th of July in the Preſence of Mr. Wilſon, who took particular notice of this Paper, as may appear by his own Hand. The Trunk was ſealed, it was a great Trunk, and it was open'd in the Preſence of Mr. Samuel Wilſon and Mr. Starkey, who were both appointed by my Lord of Shaftsbury.

L. C. J. Was this Paper found in one of thoſe Trunks or Boxes that was deliver'd to you by Mr. Gwyn?

Mr. Blathwait. This Paper was taken out of a Velvet Bag which Mr. Gwyn had put into the great Trunk, which Trunk was ſealed and opened in the Preſence of Mr. Wilſon and Mr. Starkey.

Sir Fr. Withens. Did you find that Paper in the Trunk?

Mr. Blathwait. I took this and others out of the Velvet Bag which was in the great Trunk.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Gwyn to give an account where he found theſe Papers. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear what his Evidence is, would you ask him any thing while he is here?

Then Mr. Gwyn coming in.

L. C. J. Where had you the Trunk you delivered to Mr. Blathwait?

Gwyn. My Lord, on the ſecond of July by a Warrant from the Secretary I was commanded to go to my Lord Shaftsbury's Houſe to ſearch his Papers, I did there meet with a great many Papers, and I took a Note how I had parted them, and into what Parcels I had put the Papers; there were ſeveral ſorts of them in a great Hair Trunk, and there was a Velvet Bag in which I put ſome Papers that were looſe in my Lord's Cloſet above Stairs. My Lord Shaftsbury as ſoon as I came, gave me the Keys, and told me where his Cloſets were, and ſaid he would Seal them up with his own Seal: I ſtaid for it, but he ſent me word by a Gentleman that I might put my own Seal if I pleaſed: I did put my Seal upon the Trunk, but afterwards being ſent another Way, I delivered it to this Gentleman Mr. Blathwait: whether any of the Papers were taken out afterwards I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Mr. Gwyn, that your Evidence may be the better underſtood, tell me, were all the Papers that were in that Velvet Bag in my Lord Shaftsbury's Cloſet?

Mr. Gwyn. In my Lord Shaftsbury's Cloſet above-ſtairs.

L. C. J. This you ſwear; when you delivered it to Mr. Blathwait, all the Papers were in that Bag; was there nothing in that Bag, but what you took in my Lord Shaftsbury's Cloſet?

Mr. Gwyn. Nothing, my Lord.

Look you, Gentlemen, you do obſerve that this Paper was put into the Bag by Mr. Gwyn, and Mr. Blathwait ſwears he found it in the Bag, and delivered it to Mr. Secretary Jenkins; therefore if you pleaſe Mr. Secretary Jenkins you ſhall be ſworn whether that Paper was delivered to you by Mr. Blathwait, becauſe we would clear it as we go, whether that be the Paper was delivered to Mr. Secretary Jenkins by Mr. Blathwait: I pray, Sir, was that the Paper that Mr. Blathwait did deliver into your Hands?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. My Lord, this is the Paper, this Paper was delivered into my Hands by Mr. Blathwait in the Council-Chamber. I cannot ſay that this numerical Paper was taken out of the Velvet Bag; but there were a great many Papers taken out of it, and I having the honour to be at the Examination of the Papers; this was ordered to be put (and was put) into my Hands with nine Papers more.

L. C. J. Was it out of your Hands?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. It was out of my Hands; for upon Munday laſt I took out the nine Papers intruſted with me, and this tenth out of my Desk, and cauſed my Servant to mark them by Numbers. Then I ſealed up theſe Papers and ſent them to Mr. Graham. Mr. Graham brought them back again to me without any alteration whatſoever; then I put this tenth Paper into the Hands of Mr. Blathwait again. All the while it was in my Hands, it was under Lock and Key, and none of my Servants ſaw it, but the time it was numbred; and no manner of Alteration was made in this, or any other of the nine Papers.

L. C. J. Now it appears this was the Paper taken in my Lord Shaftsbury's Cloſet.

Then this Paper was read as followeth

WE the Knights, &c. finding to the grief of our Hearts, the Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, with the Papiſts and their Adherents and Abettors have for ſeveral Years laſt paſt purſued a moſt pernicious and helliſh Plot, to root out the true Proteſtant Religion as a peſtilent Hereſie, to take away the Life of our Gracious King, to ſubvert our Laws and Liberties, and to ſet up Arbitrary Power and Popery.

And it being notorious that they have been highly encouraged by the Countenance and Protection given and pro-procured for them by J. D. of Y. and by their Expectations of his succeeding to the Crown, and that thro' crafty Popish Councils his Designs have so far prevailed, that he hath created many and great Dependents upon him by his bestowing Offices and Performents both in Church and State.

It appearing also to us, that by his Influence Mercenary Forces have been levied and kept on foot for his secret Designs contrary to our Laws; the Officers thereof having been named and appointed by him, to the apparent Hazard of his Majesty's Person, our Religion and Government, if the Danger had not been timely foreseen by several Parliaments, and part of those Forces with great Difficulty, caused by them to be disbanded at the Kingdom's great Expence: And it being evident, that notwithstanding all the continual endeavours of the Parliament to deliver his Majesty from the Councils, and out of the Power of the said D. yet his Interest in the Ministry of State and others have been so prevalent, that Parliaments have been unreasonably prorogued and dissolved when they have been in hot pursuit of the popish Conspiracies, and ill Ministers of State their Assistants.

And that the said D. in order to reduce all into his own Power hath procured the Garisons, the Army and Ammunition, and all the Power of the Seas and Soldiery, and Lands belonging to these three Kingdoms to be put into the Hands of his Party and their Adherents, even in opposition to the Advice and Order of the last Parliament.

And as we considering with heavy Hearts how greatly the Strength, Reputation and Treasure of the Kingdom both at Sea and Land is wasted and consumed, and lost by the intricate expensive management of these wicked destructive Designs; and finding the same Councils after exemplary Justice upon some of the Conspirators, to be still pursued with the utmost deviliſh Malice, and desire of Revenge; whereby his Majesty is in continual Hazard of being murdered to make way for the said D.'s Advancement to the Crown, and the whole Kingdom in such Case is destitute of all Security of their Religion, Laws, Estates and Liberty, sad experience in the Case, Queen Mary having proved the wisest Laws to be of little force to keep out Popery and Tyranny under a Popish Prince.

We have therefore endeavoured in a parliamentary Way by a Bill for the purpose to bar and exclude the said Duke from the Succession to the Crown, and to banish him for ever out of these Kingdoms of England and Ireland. But the first means of the King and Kingdom's Safety being utterly rejected, and we left almost in despair of obtaining any real and effectual Security, and knowing our selves to be intrusted to advise and act for the Preservation of His Majesty and the Kingdom, and being persuaded in our Consciences that the Dangers aforesaid are so eminent and pressing, that there ought to be no delay of the best means that are in our Power to secure the Kingdom against them. We have thought fit to propose to all true Protestants an Union amongst themselves by solemn and sacred Promise of mutual Defence and Assistance in the Preservation of the true Protestant Religion, His Majesty's Person and Royal State, and our Laws, Liberties and Properties, and we hold it our bounden Duty to joyn our selves for the same intent in a Declaration of our United Affections and Resolutions in the Form insuing.

I A. B. Do in the Presence of God solemnly promise vow, and protest to maintain and defend to the utmost of my Power, with my Person and Estate, the true Protestant Religion, against Popery and all popish Superstition, Idolatry, or Innovation, and all those who do or shall endeavour to spread or advance it within this Kingdom.

I will also, as far as in me lies, maintain and defend His Majesty's Royal Person and Estate; as also the Power and Privilege of Parliaments, the lawful Rights and Liberties of the Subject against all Incroachments and Usurpation of Arbitrary Power whatsoever, and endeavour entirely to disband all such mercenary Forces as we have reason to believe were raised to advance it, and are still kept up in and about the City of London, to the great Amazement and Terror of all the good People of the Land.

Moreover J. D. of Y. having publickly professed and owned the popish Religion, and notoriously given Life and Birth to the damnable hellish Plots of the Papists against His Majesty's Person, the protestant Religion, and the Government of this Kingdom; I will never consent that the said J. D. of Y. or any other, who is or hath been a Papist, or any ways adher'd to the Papists in their wicked Designs, be admitted to the Succession of the Crown of England; but by all lawful means and by force of Arms, if need so require, according to my Abilities, will oppose him, and endeavour to subdue, expel, and destroy him, if he come into England, or the Dominions thereof, and seek by force to set up his pretended Title, and all such as shall adhere unto him, or raise any War, Tumult, or Sedition for him, or by his Command, as publick Enemies of our Laws, Religion and Country.

To this end we and every one of us whose Hands are here underwritten, do most willingly bind our selves and every one of us unto the other joyntly and severally, in the Bond of one firm and loyal Society or Association, and do promise and vow before God, that with our joynt and particular Forces we will oppose and pursue unto Destruction all such as upon any Title whatsoever shall oppose the just and righteous Ends of this Association, and maintain protect and defend all such as shall enter into it in the just performance of the true Intent and meaning of it. And lest this just and pious Work should be any Ways obstructed or hindered for want of Discipline and Conduct, or any evil minded Persons under Pretence of raising Forces for the service of this Association, should attempt or commit Disorders; we will follow such Orders as we shall from time to time receive from this present Parliament, whilst it shall be sitting, or the major Part of the Members of both Houses subscribing this Association, when it shall be prorogued or dissolved: and obey such Officers as shall by them be set over us in the several Counties, Cities, and Burroughs, until the next meeting of this or another Parliament; and will then shew the same Obedience and Submission unto it, and those who shall be of it.

Neither will we for any respect of Persons or Causes, or for Fear, or Reward separate our selves from this Association, or fail in the Prosecution thereof during our Lives, upon Pain of being by the rest of us prosecuted, and suppressed as perjur'd Persons, and publick Enemies to God, the King, and our Native Country.

To which Pains and Punishments we do voluntarily submit our selves, and every one of us without benefit of any Colour or Pretence to excuse us.

In Witness of all which Premisses to be inviolably kept, we do this present Writing pu

put our Hands and Seals, and ſhall be moſt ready to accept and admit any others hereafter into this Society and Aſſociation.

Sir Fr. Withens. This Paper is very plauſibly penned in the beginning, and goes a great way ſo, but in the laſt clauſe but one, there they come to perfect levying of War; for they do poſitively ſay, they will obey ſuch Officers as either the Parliament or the major Part of them, or after the Parliament is diſſolved, the major Part of thoſe that ſhall ſubſcribe this Paper ſhall appoint; they will obey all ſuch Officers.

Foreman. Pray what date is this Paper of?

Sir Fr. Withens. It was after the Bill for the Excluſion of the Duke of York, for it ſays that Way failing, they would do it by force.

Foreman. There is no Hand to it at all?

Sir Fr. Withens. No, none at all. One thing I had forgot, that they would joyn to deſtroy the mercenary Forces about London, which is downright levying of War againſt the King and his Guards.

Mr. Sanders. The deſign of it is pretended to oppoſe Popery and arbitrary Power, and deſtroy the Papiſts; but that doth not ſeem ſo much in its ſelf: but when you have heard the Evidence you will hear who were the Papiſts that were to be deſtroyed by this Army.

John Booth.

Jury. He has ſtood in the Face of the Court all this while.

L. C. J. When did Mr. Booth come down?

Jury. He was here before we went up, my Lord, and hath been here ever ſince.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, they tell you he was carried away, and came down but now.

Mr. Booth. No my Lord, I came down but now.

Mr. Shepherd. My Lord, we deſire a Liſt of their Names, that we might know who is here, and who is not.

Mr. Godfrey. This Man hath been here all this while, and all the others may be here, for ought that I know.

Sir Fr. Withens. In the firſt Place give an Account what Diſcourſe you have had with my Lord Shaftsbury.

L. C. J. Speak out that the Jury may hear you.

Mr. Booth. I will ſpeak as loud as I can. In the Month of January, about the middle of January laſt, I was introduced into my Lord Shaftsbury's Acquaintance by one Captain Henry Wilkinſon. I ſay I was introduc'd into my Lord Shaftsbury's Acquaintance by one Captain Henry Wilkinſon. This Captain Wilkinſon is a Yorkſhire Gentleman, he has known me above twenty Years, and he and I have had familiar Converſation a long while; ſo waiting upon my Lord Shaftsbury, our firſt buſineſs that we went about was, Captain Wilkinſon did pretend to receive a Commiſſion from my Lord Shaftsbury, and ſome others of the Lords Proprietors of the Palatinate of Carolina to be their Deputy-Governor; and he told me the Proſpect of that Journey, was like to be very hopeful, and that his Intereſt was good, and that he could procure me a Commiſſion, and ſuch a number of Acres for Quality and Quantity as I did deſire: and he ſaid he did not deſign to go over immediately in his own Perſon, but he would ſend his eldeſt Son, and his youngeſt Son, and if he went, he would return again as occaſion ſhould ſerve. I conſented to him in all this; and we diſcours'd it divers times together, and we went to my Lord Shaftsbury on purpoſe to receive Commiſſions in order to this Purpoſe. The firſt time I went there was the Earl of Craven, Sir Peter Colleton, one Archdell a Quaker; I thought him a Quaker becauſe he kept his Hat on, when the reſt of the Lords ſtood bare in Civility to him. We diſcours'd the thing about Carolina. After this, and before, Captain Wilkinſon and I had ſeveral Diſcourſes about the juncture of Affairs in theſe Times, tho' I knew him to be an old Royaliſt, and one that ſerved his Majeſty and his late Father very much in the Wars; yet being under great Diſappointments of Preferments at Court, and miſſing the Reward he expected from the King, his Heart was turned another Way, and he had repented himſelf of thoſe Services he had done for the King, and was become a Man of another Opinion; and there was ſome Inducements upon me that I was inclin'd to the ſame Opinion: ſo he expreſs'd himſelf to my Lord, and ſo from one thing to another we went on in Diſcourſe, and related the ſeveral Parliaments, and the proroguing them, and the Diſappointments of the People, and the Fear of Popery and arbitrary Power: and this was not done once, nor twice, nor ten times; for I cannot enumerate them, for we kept a Continual Club, and convers'd together familiarly near three quarters of a Year. After this firſt Acquaintance with my Lord Shaftsbury at his Houſe, I did frequently go with Captain Wilkinſon, and between Chriſtmas and March four or five times: and I obſerved this, that when we came to my Lord Shaftsbury's they were cautious in our Acceſſion: In the firſt Place it was to be known by ſome of the Servants, who he was in company with: and in the ſecond Place the Names were ſent up, who they were, that were to ſpeak with him: ſometimes we had an Alehouſe at the Bell in the ſame Street: (I forget the name of the Street) we ſtaid at the Alehouſe till we had a fit Time, Captain Wilkinſon had Acquaintance with his Porter and his Gentleman of his Chamber: and ſo we often diſcours'd. And from the concerns of Carolina we fell to matters more publick concerning the State. I remember he would uſe to inveigh ſharply againſt the Times, and look upon himſelf as not ſo valued, nor ſo reſpected, nor in thoſe Places and Dignities as he expected he ſhould be, and ſeem'd to be diſcontented, and he did fear that Popery would be introduced, and Arbitrary Power: and when Parliament-men were to be elected, there came every Week News, bringing particulars of ſuch Boroughs and Counties as had made particular Elections for Members for Parliament; whether Knights, Citizens, or Burgeſſes: and he would often conſider that Parliament that was to ſit at Oxford, what they were as to their Inclinations and Diſpoſitions: and he ſaid, they would inſiſt upon the ſame things the other Parliaments before had done. Particularly he ſaid the Parliament would never grant the King any Aſſiſtance of Money, nor ſatisfie him in thoſe things that he deſired, unleſs he gave the People firſt ſatisfaction in thoſe things that they inſiſted on before, and he believed would inſiſt upon on after; and particularly the Bill of excluding the Duke of York from the Crown: another was the aboliſhing the Statute of the 35th of Elizabeth: and the third was giving his Royal Aſſent for the Paſſing a new Bill whereby all Diſſenting Proteſtants, Nonconformiſts, or what you will term them, ſhould be freed from thoſe Penalties and Eccleſiaſtick Puniſhments that they are ſubject to by the preſent Eſtabliſh'd Law: and he ſaid, if theſe and ſome other wholeſome Laws and Bills were paſt by the Royal Aſſent of the King, he believed that when the People had received this Security and Satisfaction, that they would be very willing to grant the King ſuch accommodations of Money by Way of Aſſeſſment, or ſo, as his neceſſary Occaſions ſhould alſo require; but without this he believed, there would be a breach between the King and the Parliament, and that they had order'd the Parliament ſhould meet at Oxford, and not at this Metropolis at London, where they might go on without fear of being over-awed: that this was an Intention to awe the Parliament. But he ſaid, himſelf and divers Noble Lords, and Members of the Houſe of Commons had conſidered themſelves and their own Safety, and that they judg'd it dangerous to go to Oxford, where they were ſure the Guards, the Retinue of the Court, and the Aſſiſtance of the Scholars (which uſually incline to the Crown) might ſo over-awe the Parliament, that they might not ſo freely proceed in a Way for the Publick Good as they intended; and therefore he and others had conſidered with themſelves, that it were fit for them to have Guards and ſend them thither; and to this Purpoſe he had eſtabliſh'd a Matter of fifty Men Perſons of Quality, that he believed would have Men along with them; and he intruſted Captain Henry Wilkinſon with the Command of theſe Men, and they were to come to Oxford at ſuch a time, and if there were any breach between the King and the Parliament, or any Violence offer'd to any of theſe Members by the Guards, or Retinue of the Court, that then theſe Men with others that other Lords had provided, ſhould repel his Force, by greater Force, and ſhould purge the Guards of all the Papiſts and Tories, and ſuch as were againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and the eſtabliſh'd Laws of the Land; and likewiſe theſe Men ſhould be ready to aſſiſt himſelf, and thoſe other Perſons in his Confederacy, to purge from the King thoſe Evil Counſellors which were about him: particularly there were named, the Earl of Worceſter, my Lord Clarendon, my Lord Hallifax, my Lord Feverſham, and Mr. Hide, now Lord Viſcount Hide: and theſe Perſons were look'd upon to be dangerous, and gave the King evil Advice, and made him continue ſo very deaf to what the Parliament urg'd him to; and therefore they ſaid they would not only purge the Guards, and repel that Force by a greater Force, but alſo take thoſe Lords by Violence from the King, and bring the King to London, to the chief Metropolitan City, where thoſe things ſhould be eſtabliſh'd, which they deſign'd for their ſafety in theſe two reſpects, for the preſerving the Proteſtant Religion, and likewiſe for the keeping and defending us ſafe from Arbitrary Power and Government. Upon this Captain Wilkinſon did deſire me that I would be one of thoſe under his Command: this I did conſent to. And he requeſted me further, that I would provide for my ſelf Horſe and Arms; and likewiſe Arms for my Man, and he would provide me a Horſe for my Man. I did accordingly provide Arms for my ſelf, and a good Stone-Horſe for my ſelf, and Arms for my Man before the Parliament did ſit at Oxford. I think the 23d of March, I do not punctually remember the Day, and when the Parliament was ſet, we enquir'd and heard how things went on, and found that it was as my Lord Shaftsbury had predicted, that the Parliament did inſiſt upon thoſe very things that he told they would do, but never believ'd or imagin'd they would be ſo ſoon diſſolv'd. Upon Thurſday before the Parliament was diſſolv'd, Captain Wilkinſon told me he expected that very Week to have a Summons to go up to Oxford with thoſe Men that were liſted with him; but then Saturday's News came of the Diſſolution of the Parliament, and therefore it took no further Effect. The whole matter, the main Deſign was this, That my Lord Shaftsbury ſhould have ſo many Men to attend him there for the Security of his Perſon, and likewiſe to repel the Force of the King's Guards, or any other Perſons that followed the King; and alſo to remove from him thoſe five Lords, and bring the King back to London, to eſtabliſh thoſe Laws that I have mention'd.

Sir Fr. Withins. Pray what time did you diſcover this?

Mr. Booth. About ſix Weeks ago.

Sir Fr. Withins. Had you any Diſcourſe with the Earl of Shaftsbury after Captain Wilkinſon ſpoke with you, or before the ſitting of the Parliament.

Mr. Booth. I ſaid before that the firſt motion of theſe fifty Men that were to be my Lord Shaftsbury's Guard came from Captain Wilkinſon; but after this when I went with Captain Wilkinſon to my Lord Shaftsbury, the ſame thing was diſcourſed there. The laſt time I was with my Lord Shaftsbury was about a Week before he went to Oxford, about ten Days before the Parliament ſate, or a Week, and then I heard the ſame Diſcourſe from my Lord Shaftsbury's own Mouth.

Sir Fr. Withins. Had you any other Diſcourſe with my Lord Shaftsbury?

Mr. Booth. I ſay I made three or four Viſits between Chriſtmas and March, and we had diſcourſe every time particularly about the King's Perſon, and if the King did refuſe theſe motions, that then theſe Men were to be taken from him, and he repell'd with a greater force, and be brought to it by force.

Sir Fr. Withins. Did you ever make any Solicitation to any to make this Diſcovery?

Mr. Booth. Thus far I did, and I will tell you the whole matter in that point; there was one Walter Banes an Acquaintance of mine, and I found that he had at Wilkinſon's requeſt engaged himſelf in ſome buſineſs that one Brownrig an Attorney in Yorkſhire had writ to him about, concerning ſome Men that were to ſwear againſt my Lord Shaftsbury. I asked Mr. Banes what Men theſe were, he ſaid, he thought they were Iriſh-men. I ſaid, I don't know what Converſation in that Nature my Lord Shaftsbury might have with Iriſh-men, for I know none of them; but I am ſatisfied that he had Converſation tending to theſe ends that you ſpeak of with ſome Engliſh-men, and that I know. This Mr. Banes did take particular Notice of, and he was very frequently upon me to tell him what the matter was, and I gave him ſome intimation of it. Truly 'twas very much upon my Spirit, and I could not tell whether I was able to carry it thro' or not, or had better to let it alone as it was in ſilence: but diſcourſing ſtill more with him, and at the reſult of that Diſcourſe we had by degrees, I did give him ſome intimation of it. And after that upon ſecond Thoughts I took a Reſolution to diſcover it: and when I did diſcover it, I do here in the Preſence of God declare, that no Mortal did know any thing of what I had to ſay, in reference to the King; nor did I make any more applications in the World, but took Pen, Ink, and Paper, and writ it down, and ſealed it under a Cover and ſent it to the Council.

Sir Fr. Withins. Gentlemen of the Jury, would you ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Papillon. The Jury told your Lordſhip before, that after all had been examin'd they would conſider what Queſtions.

L. C. J. Where would you have theſe Witneſſes that have been examined to ſtand?

Mr. Papillon. We leave to the Sheriffs to appoint a Place for them.

L. C. J. To keep them apart its utterly impoſſible, for we muſt have as many Rooms then as there are Witneſſes.

Jury. Let one Man keep with them.

L. C. J. Empty that Place where they were the laſt time, and let them ſtand there.

Edward Turbervile.

Sir Fr. Withins. Mr. Turbervile, have you had any Diſcourſe with my Lord Shaftsbury?

Turbervile. Yes, ſeveral times. In February laſt, I am not poſitive in the time, but about the beginning of the Month, I waited upon my Lord Shaftsbury, about ſome Moneys. I waited upon him to have his Advice how I might come by 't, and to gain my Lord Shaftsbury's Letter in my behalf to the Preſident of the Council to ſtand my Friend; and he ſaid, there was little good to be had from the King, as long as his Guards were about him; for were it not for his Guards, we would quickly go down to Whitehal and obtain what Terms we thought fit. Said I, my Lord, I ſuppoſe his Guards can't defend him from the whole Kingdom. His Lordſhip ſaid that the Rabble were all of that ſide, eſpecially the People about Wapping, and Alderſgate-ſtreet; and the Rich Men of the City would Vote for Elections; but they could not expect they ſhould ſtand by them in Caſe there ſhould be any Diſturbance, for they valued their Riches more than their Cauſe. And at Oxford I heard my Lord ſay again, he wonder'd the People of England ſhould ſtickle ſo much about Religion, and that if he were to chooſe a Religion, he would have one that ſhould comply with what was apt to carry on their Cauſe.

Mr. Sanders. Had you any other Diſcourſe with him at any other time?

Mr. Turbervile. I told you all that is material that I can ſay to it.

John Smith.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I only beg a word or two from your Lordſhip, of ſome Reflections caſt upon me.

L. C. J. Go to your Evidence.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, this is ſomething to my Evidence.

L. C. J. You may take another time for that.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, it hath been reported about in Coffee-Houſes and Taverns, that I ſhould ſwear there was a general Deſign againſt his Majeſty; and that I ſwore it before the King and Secretary of State; and that I alſo ſwore it at the Tryal of Mr. Colledge and Mr. Rowſe: I take it upon my Oath I never ſwore any ſuch thing, neither can I ſwear there was a general Deſign by the City, or the Parliament againſt the King.

L. C. J. Speak what Diſcourſe you have had with my Lord Shaftsbury.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I ſuppoſe it is paſt all doubt, that I have been very often with my Lord Shaftsbury; and I have often in his Diſcourſe obſerved that he ſpake very irreverently and ſlightly of the King; ſometimes ſaying he was a Weak Man, and ſometimes ſaying he was an Inconſtant Man; a Man of no firm or ſettled Reſolution; and a Man that was eaſily led by the Noſe, as his Father was before him, by a Popiſh Queen, which was the Ruine of his Father: this was both in publick and in private. I have alſo obſerved ſometimes in his diſcourſe, ſomething that he mention'd of the Earl of Eſſex; and that the King ſhould declare, that the Earl of Shaftsbury was not ſatisfied to be an ill Man himſelf, but got over the Earl of Eſſex too: this the Earl of Shaftsbury declar'd publickly in his own Houſe. Another Story was of the Rebellion of Scotland, that the King ſhould ſay that the Earl of Shaftsbury was the chief Promoter of that Rebellion; and when this was told my Lord Shaftsbury, that he ſhould ſend Word back again to the King, "I "am glad (ſays he) that the King ſees not his "own Danger, nor what he runs himſelf into: "and pray tell him, that, if I were to raiſe a "Rebellion I could raiſe anothergueſs Rebellion "than the Rebellion was in Scotland. But now, as to the particular Points I am to charge him with, I remember, my Lord, that my Lord Shaftsbury ſent for me one time, and that by one Manly; ſometimes they call him Major Manly, ſometimes Captain Manly; and this Man found me at Mr. Bethel's Club in Newgate-ſtreet at the Queen's Arms; and there he told me my Lord Shaftsbury would ſpeak with me that Night. I immediately left the Club, and went to my Lord Shaftsbury's: and I was introduc'd into the Dining Room, where there were two Gentlemen in Diſcourſe with my Lord: and as ſoon as he ſaw me, he askt me how I did: I told him I was very well, and came in obedience to his Lordſhip's Command to wait upon him; for Major Manly told me your Lordſhip had a mind to ſpeak with me: he ſaid he had. Soon afterward, theſe two Gentlemen went away. Upon this my Lord turns about, Mr. Smith, ſaid he, Mr. Hetherington was with me this Morning, and told me he was afraid that the Iriſh Witneſſes would go over to the Court Party, and retract what they had ſaid formerly. My Lord, ſays I, I know no Perſon can better and with more eaſe, hinder that than your Lordſhip, by procuring ſome ſmall Allowance for them; for they complain much of Poverty. Says he, Maſter Hetherington has the charge of them, and hath a ſpecial care of them, and I believe they don't want. My Lord, ſays I, I know nothing of that, he knows what Proviſion he hath made for them. This is the thing, ſaid my Lord, that I would have you do, they ſtand in great awe of you, and you muſt perſuade them from going nigh that Rogue Fitz-Gerrald, that great Villain, that is pamper'd up, and maintain'd by the King and the Court Party, to ſtifle the Plot in Ireland. My Lord, ſays I, do you think the King would be at ſuch vaſt Charges for to bring over Witneſſes, and at laſt maintain Men to ſtifle this Plot, for that is the Way to ſtifle the Plot in England too, as well as that. Says he, what is this frequent Diſſolutions and Prorogations of Parliaments for, but to ſtifle the Plot here, and to hinder the Lords in the Tower to come to a Tryal? This is a ſtrange thing, my Lord, ſaid I, when he gave Dr. Oates, Mr. Bedlow and Mr. Dugdale ſuch large Allowances to proſecute this Plot. Says, my Lord, that is nothing, that may hold for a Year or two, he may take it off when he will, but the chief means are put by, whereby we might find out the depth of this Plot; and if Mr. Dugdale and Dr. Oates be knock'd on the Head, then where is this Plot? then there will come an Act of Oblivion for them, and all things will be well as they were before. My Lord, ſaid I, this is very ſtrange to me. I can give you inſtance of it, ſays he, when I was lately in the Tower, I told ſome I ſaw Popery coming in, and that it was hard to prevent it. I am ſorry to hear it, ſaid I, but what would you have me do with theſe Iriſh Witneſſes? Says he, perſuade them not to go near White-hall, nor this Fitz-Gerald. And, ſaid he, one thing more, I would have you mind, Mr. Smith, that if the King were not as well ſatisfied with the coming in of Popery as ever the D. of York was, do you think the D. of York would be ſo much concern'd in the bringing in of Popery as he is? I am ſorry for it, my Lord if it be ſo. After this I parted with my Lord Shaftsbury, with full Inſtructions from him to thoſe Iriſh Witneſſes. I met Mr. Hetherington the next Morning, and I told him that I was with my Lord Shaftsbury: ſays he, I know your buſineſs and would have you meet us at the Sun-Tavern in the Afternoon. My Lord, I went according to the time appointed, and met him at the Sun-Tavern between ſix, or ſeven, or eight of the Clock, as near as I can remember. When I came to them I began to open thoſe great and horrid Crimes that I heard Mr. Fitz-Gerald accuſed of, that he was a Man came to diſcover a Plot, and diſowned it here, and retracted all he had ſaid. I told them what a Crime this was. In ſhort, my Lord they promiſed never to go near the Man. I parted that Night and came to my Lodging, and the next Morning Mr. Hetherington and one Mr. Bernard Dennis came to my Lodging and told me, that this Bernard Dennis, was ready to give in Information againſt Fitz-Gerald, that he had tamper'd with him to forſwear all he had ſworn before. I went preſently with Mr. Hetherington and Mr. Dennis to my Lord Mayor, who was then Sir Patience Ward; after we had told the buſineſs to Sir Patience Ward, Sir Patience ask'd this Dennis if there were any other Perſons preſent. Yes, ſays he, there was. Says Sir Patience, you are upon your Oath, if you know not the Nature of an Oath, I will tell you. The Information was drawn up; the Copy of this Information I carry'd to my Lord Shaftsbury and ſhew'd it him, he read it, and was very well pleaſed with it, and ſaid, Mr. Smith, don't you ſee the Villany of that Man and that factious Party, and that the King runs the ſame Steps as his Father did before him, how can any thing of this Nature be done without the King and the Court pamper'd him up? My Lord, ſaid I, I think now the thing is clear. Ay, ſays he, theſe are the very ſame Steps that his Father followed when he was led by his Popiſh Queen, and the Poor Man doth not ſee his Danger. I parted from my Lord, and came and gave an account of this very Diſcourſe to the Club in Newgate-ſtreet, and they were glad of it, and I told what my Lord Shaftsbury ſaid, that the King would never be quiet till he came to his Father's End, he follow'd the ſame Steps. Another thing that I have obſerv'd particularly before the Parliament went to Oxford, I went to ſee him, and we fell into ſome Diſcourſe, and my Lord ſaid there was great Preparations made, and a great many gather'd together upon the Road between London and Oxford. My Lord, ſaid I, what is the meaning of that? Any body may ſee, ſays he, that is only to terrifie the Parliament to comply with the King's Deſire, which I am ſure the Parliament never will, for we are as reſolute now as ever; and more reſolute, for we ſee clearly what the King aims at, and that is to bring in Popery. Which I told ſeveral Years ago, and when I was laſt in the Tower; but, ſays he, we have this Advantage of him, if he offer any Violence to us, (for we expect it,) that we have the Nation for us, and we may lawfully oppoſe him, and he will meet with a very ſtrong oppoſition; for all that come out of the Country, ſhall be well Hors'd and well Arm'd, and ſo we ſhall be all, and here is the City which now has a Queſtion in Debate among them, whether they ſhall bear the Charge of their own Members or no, but they are willing to do it, and ſend ſo many Men to wait on them, and if we oppoſe the King, as we may do, for it hath been done in former Times, the whole Nation is to ſtand by us, and as I ſaid when I was in the Tower, I would die, before I would ever bring in Popery or any thing of that Nature.

and

Jury. Repeat that again.

Smith. He ſaid, that the King, if he offer'd any Violence at Oxford to the Parliament, he would meet with a ſtrong Oppoſition, and that the Gentlemen that came out of the Country were well provided with Horſe, Arms, and Men, to oppoſe him, and that they might lawfully do it if the King offered any Violence to them whilſt they ſat, and that the Nation ſtood by them, and that they did repreſent the Nation, and that for his Part he and all his Friends would do it to the utmoſt of their Power, and, as Old as he was, he would be one that would oppoſe it to his Power. My Lord, ſaid I, we can expect nothing but Confuſion from this Parliament, in this Nature, for then we ſhall be involved in another Civil-War, nothing elſe can put an end to our Miſeries, or make this Nation a ſettled Nation, but a Civil-War. Then, my Lord, ſaid I, by this means we ſhall make an end of Monarchy, or elſe inſlave the Nation to Popery for ever. No doubt of one, ſays he, but we are ſure of one, for the Nation is of our ſide, and the City you know how they are, and where ever they ſtrike, I am ſure the Nation will, and this I'll ſtand and die by. This is the ſubſtance of what I have to ſay againſt my Lord Shaftsbury, and upon the Oath I have taken, I am ſure I have not added a Word. One Word more I have to ſay, 'tis reported I have been hired and ſuborn'd, I do admire why this City of London, where there are as worthy Men, and as great Lovers of the King and Government as any in the World, ſhould ſay any ſuch thing; I was never ſuborn'd by them, nor never took a Farthing of their Money, nor never took a Farthing of the King in my Life.

L. C. J. Who ſuppoſes it?

Mr. Smith. 'Tis in Print, my Lord, 'twas in the Book that came out laſt Night, it is ſuppos'd, my Lord, for it is in print.

L. C. J. I had reaſon to expect that there was no ſuch Objection.

Brian Haines.

Mr. Sanders. Give your knowledge of what Diſcourſe you have heard concerning my Lord Shaftsbury.

Mr. Haines. Sir, I have heard him villifie the King very often, and he told me about the Narrative that I made about Sir Edmond-bury Godfrey's Death, Mr. Ivey and I went to him one Day and he ſpoke to me of it, and I deſired him not to expoſe my Perſon to the King's Anger, for I was ſure he would never grant a Pardon to any Man that impeached the Earl of Danby. Says he, do not fear, if he doth not grant you a Pardon, he makes himſelf the Author of the Plot; and, ſays he, the Earl of Eſſex, my Lord Maxfield and I, we do all reſolve if you put it in Writing, we will go to the King, and beg a Pardon of his Majeſty for you, and if he doth not grant it, we will raiſe the whole Kingdom againſt him; for, ſays he, he muſt not expect to live peaceably in his Throne, if he doth not grant it. For he makes himſelf Author of the Plot.

My Lord, ſaid I, he hath diſſolved ſo many Parliaments for the ſake of the Earl of Danby, and prorogued ſo many Parliaments, therefore he will never grant me this Pardon. Says he, do no fear, 'tis the beſt Pretence we can have in the World, and if you will but put in Writing, and let me read it, that I may give my Opinion of it, the work is done; and if he doth not do it, we are prepar'd to raiſe Arms againſt him. I was with him another time after I made this Narrative, and he told me the two Mr. Godfreys were with the King at Windſor, and begged a Pardon of his Majeſty for me, but the King would not grant it, but if he be an honeſt Man, let him lie at my Mercy, let him come in and declare what he knows. Said I, I would not have your Lordſhip expoſe my Cauſe in theſe Days. This is the beſt time for it in the World, ſays he, if he doth not do it, he can't expect to be long King of England. Pray my Lord, ſaid I, what ſhall I do in the mean time? I will go beyond Sea, ſaid I. No, ſays he, don't leave the Kingdom, he dares as well be hang'd as meddle with you. I deſir'd him a ſecond time not to expoſe me to the King's Fury, and I prayed him to help me to a little Money to go beyond Sea, for I was ſure I could not be ſafe in England. Says he, Have a care of your ſelf; but, ſays he, he dares as well be hang'd as meddle with you. Then I was in cloſe Conference with him one Day, and I gave him ſo exact an account of all Tranſactions from King Charles the Firſt's Reign, the commencement or coming to the Crown, to this very Day, that he was mightily ſatisfied, finding by me that I was a Traveller, he was mightily pleaſed, and free with me. Pray, my Lord, what Model do you take, or intend to do? Says he, Do you not think but there are Families in England that have as great Pretences to the Crown as the King? Says he, there is the Duke of Bucks, in the Right of his Mother, ſhe was deſcended from Edward, one of the Edwards, and in her Right he claims the Barony of Roſs, he hath as great a Right to the Crown of England, as ever any Stewart of them all.

Jury. Speak that again.

Mr. Haines. I was in Conference with my Lord Shaftsbury one Day, and I gave him an exact Account of all Tranſactions, and I asked what they did intend to do with the Government, if they pull'd the King down. Says he, do you think there are no Families in England, that have as much Pretence to the Crown as any of the Stewarts? I know none my Lord. Says he, there is the Duke of Bucks that is deſcended of the Family of the Plantagenets; he named ſome of the Edwards, and in her Right he ſhould have the Barony of Roſs, and in her Right he has as good a Title to the Crown of England as ever any Stewart had.

John Macnamarra ſworn.

Sir Fr. Withins. Pray give an Account to the Jury of what Diſcourſe you have had with my Lord Shaftsbury.

John Macnamarra. My Lord, I was with my Lord Shaftsbury a little before he went to Oxford, before the Parliament ſat there, and my Lord told me at that time, that he would take care, together with thoſe that were with him at Oxford, for the Witneſſes that were concerned in the Popiſh Plot.

Mr. Harriſon. Speak out pray, Sir.

John Macnamarra. My Lord told me he would take care, with thoſe that were with him, for the Witneſſes that were concern'd in the Popiſh Plot; after my Lord went to Oxford, I writ him a Letter, giving his Lordſhip to underſtand, that whereas his Lordſhip was pleaſed to promiſe, that he would take care of the Witneſſes, that he would be pleaſed to take care of me, as well as the reſt of the Witneſſes; after my Lord came home from Oxford, I went to him, to ſee what was done. His Lordſhip was pleaſed to expreſs himſelf and ſay, that the King was Popiſhly affected and did adhere to Popery, and that he took the ſame Methods that his Father before him took, which brought his Father's Head to the Block, and we will alſo bring his thither; and told me alſo, that he told ſome Perſons of Quality that this would fall out five Years before; at the ſame time my Lord told me, that there was a Collection of Money made, and that the meeting was at the Sun Tavern, and that there came a Tory Lord in to hinder their Proceedings, but ſays he, we do remove to Ironmonger-Lane, and ſays he, you ſhall hear further in a Fortnight. I came to my Lord a Fortnight afterwards, and his Lordſhip was pleaſed to tell me, that there was Proviſion made for the Witneſſes, and that it was in the Hand of one Mr. Rowſe that was Servant to Sir Thomas Player; there was one Mr. Ivey, and I think my Brother was by too, when his Lordſhip ſpake theſe Words; he ſaid that the King was a Faithleſs-man, that there was no Credit to be given to him, and that the Dutcheſs of Mazarine was his Cabinet Council, who was the worſt of Woman-kind. This is all that I have to ſay, my Lord.

Sir

Sir Fr. Withins. Do you remember nothing at any other Time?

John Macnamarra. No.

Sir Fr. Withins. Did you hear any thing about depoſing the King?

John Macnamarra. Yes, he did at the ſame time ſay, the King deſerved to be depoſed as much as ever King Richard the Second did.

Dennis Macnamarra.

Mr. Sanders. Tell theſe Gentlemen whether you have had any Diſcourſe with the Earl of Shaftsbury.

Dennis Macnamarra. He ſaid, my Lord, that the King was a Man that ought not to be believed, and there was no belief in him, and that he ought to be depoſed as well as King Richard the Second, and that the Dutcheſs of Mazarine was one of his Cabinet Council, and that he did nothing but by her Advice.

Sir Francis Withins. Begin again.

L. C. J. Raiſe your Voice a little, for the Jury don't hear you.

Dennis Macnamarra. That the King is a Man that ought not to be believed, that there was no belief in him, and that he ought to be depoſed as well as King Richard the Second, and that the Dutcheſs of Mazarine was his Cabinet Council, and that he did nothing but by her conſent.

L. C. J. Who was with you at that time?

Dennis Macnamarra. There was Mr. Ivey and my Brother at his own Houſe.

L. C. J. When was this?

Dennis Macnamarra. 'Twas at the latter end of March or the beginning of April.

Sir Francis Withins. You ſay Mr. Ivey was by at the ſame time?

Dennis Macnamarra. Yes.

Sir Francis Withins. Call Mr. Ivey.

Jury. What place was it in?

D. Macnamarra. In his own Houſe.

Edward Ivey ſworn.

Mr. Ivey. My Lord, ſoon after the Parliament was diſſolv'd at Oxford, I was at my Lord Shaftſbury's Houſe, where he was ſpeaking againſt the King, and ſaid, that he was an unjuſt Man, and unfit to Reign, and that he was a Papiſt in his Heart, and would introduce Popery.

Jury. Say that again.

Mr. Ivey. I tell you I was at my Lord Shaftſbury's Houſe, where he was then ſpeaking againſt the King, ſaying, that he was altogether unjuſt, and not fit to Reign, and he wonder'd he did not take example by his Father before him, and did really believe that he was a Papiſt in his Heart, and intended to iutroduce Popery. I was ſometimes after with him and I told him one Haines had told me he had ſomething to diſcover about the Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey and ſeveral other things, and my Lord deſired to ſee him, and I brought Mr. Haines to his Houſe, and he deſired him that what he had to ſay he would put in Writing, and he ſhould have a Pardon, and that if the King did deny it, as he dares not deny it, but if he does, we will riſe upon him and force him?

Sir Fr. Withins. Had you any other Diſcourſe, at other times?

Mr. Ivey. Yes, I had other Diſcourſe but not to this Purpoſe.

Sir Fr. Withens. Was you frequently with him?

Mr. Ivey. I was frequently with him; he deſired at the time I was with him to bid Colledge to come to him, and I went and came again to Haines with Inſtructions how to proceed, and I took his examination of him, and carry'd it to my Lord, and he deſired it might be explain'd what he meant by the Tall Black-man, and, ſays he, if he does mean the King, he muſt explain himſelf, and ſpeak of the King, or the Duke of York, or the reſt, and if he does, we will take care of him as long as he lives, but unleſs he does, we will do nothing for him: and I was with him with my Lord Shaftsbury, and my Lord Shaftsbury did exclaim againſt the King.

Sir Fr. Withins. What Words did he ſpeak?

Mr. Ivey. He ſaid he was altogether an unjuſt Man and not fit to reign, and that he believed he was a Papiſt in his Heart, and deſign'd to introduce Popery, and therefore they deſign'd to depoſe him, and ſet up another in his ſtead?

Sir Fr. Withens. Do you remember any Diſcourſe of Richard the Second, at that time?

Mr. Ivey. No, Sir, I do not remember any thing of it.

Bernard Dennis ſworn.

Sir Francis Withins. Pray tell the Jury what Diſcourſe you had with the Earl of Shaftsbury at any time, and what it was.

B. Dennis. My Lord, I came upon a deſign to make clear the Plot in general, as far as I have travell'd, as in Ireland, France, Spain, Maryland, Virginia and England, and upon that account I was brought before a Juſtice of the Peace in Weſtminſter, November laſt, this time Twelvemonth, and examin'd before Juſtice Walcup, a Juſtice of the Peace, and from thence to the Committee of the Houſe of Commons, of whom Colonel Birch (I believe he is here) was Chairman, and gave in my Evidence, and being called upon at the Trial of the Earl of Stafford, I was commended, as I ſuppoſe, to the Earl of Shaftsbury, and upon the Account he ſent me word of it, by William Hetherington, who was then very intimate with the Earl of Shaftsbury, to my knowledge; and William Hetherington came to me ſeveral times, and he preciſely was my Maintainer at that time, that is, to find me whatever I wanted, and provide me my Lodging, and carry me to ſome place where Accommodation might be more better for me. Upon this account one time the E. of Shaftsbury ſent to me deſiring that I would wait upon him at his own Houſe. I came to him, and there in the Gallery of his own Houſe, walking veryſlowly, he told me what I gave in of the Plot in general was very good and ſufficient, but as to the Queen and the D. of York, that I ſhould ſpeak more home and poſitive againſt them; at leaſt, that I might be a corroboration to others in what they ſwore againſt them. This was all at that preſent time, that the Earl of Shaftsbury ſpake to me, and he deſired me to go home to his Lodgings. With that I went home, and within a Month, it may be, or thereabouts, he ſent for me again, by the ſame William Hetherington, and William Hetherington told me, that the Earl of Shaftsbury would ſpeak with me. So I came and waited upon his Lordſhip at his own Houſe, and ſays he, Mr. Dennis I underſtand that you are a Clergy-man. Yes, my Lord, ſaid I. And, ſays he, I would adviſe you to take a black Gown, and I will prefer you to a Benefice, till ſuch time as this buſineſs is over; and, ſays he, at the end of this buſineſs I will not fail to prefer you to a better, and in the mean time I would adviſe you to take a black Gown; and this was a little, as I remember, after the Parliament was diſſolv'd at Oxford; and he ſent a Gentleman out of his own Houſe along with me, to a Doctor of Divinity living hard by Lincolns-Inn Fields, Dr. Burnet by Name, as I remember, and the Gentleman acquainted the Doctor what I was, and about what Occaſion I came there; ſo the Doctor indeed diſcourſed with me very familiarly, and rend'red Thanks to the Earl for me into his Converſation rather then another's. What Diſcourſe we had then was nothing to the matter, it was about matters of Conſcience, and Religion. But Mr. Colledge that was the Joyner here in Town, and executed afterwards, being familiar with me brought me to one Mr. Ferguſon a Miniſter, as I ſuppoſe of the Presbyterian Form, for he goes in their Garb as near as I can tell, and Mr. Ferguſon at our firſt meeting was in Richard's Coffee-Houſe, in an upper Room one pair of Stairs, and in ſome Company; and Colledge going to him brought him aſide, and ſpake to him concerning me, and he came to me apart, and diſcours'd with me: from whence he brought me to a Bookſeller's Shop, and bought for me the Articles of the Church of England, and in all theſe Diſcourſes there was a hand, as Colledge told me, of the Earl of Shaftsbury, who did procure him, and ſent to Dr. Burnet to bring me that way. I do not deny neither, that I had an inclination before I left Ireland, and when I was in Spain, and when I was in France, for to become a Proteſtant, according to the Laws and Rules of the Church of England. The force of what I have to ſay is this, the Earl of Shaftsbury one Day after all theſe things were paſt, and after the Parliament were diſſolved at Oxford, diſcourſing with me in his own Houſe, Major Manley being in the ſame Room then, who lives beyond Tower-hill, he asked me what was the preſent Occaſion I came to him there, and it was pretty early in the Morning, and the Earl had a Barber to trim him in his Room. I told him my Occaſion was then, that I was ſomething low in Money, that I did a little want Money at that time, and did not know to whom to ſpeak for any thing but his Lordſhip, and ſaid I came to tell you ſo. Well, ſaid he, Mr. Dennis I have appointed Mr. Rouſe, John Rouſe whom you know, for to give you and maintain you in Money; go to him eſpecially once a Week, and he will give you Money. And, ſaid he, Mr. Dennis what is the number of your Name in the Country as near as you can tell, how many are you? My Lord, ſaid I, to tell you exactly what number they be of, I cannot at preſent, but within a little time, I may tell you. I believe really there may be upon the matter 3 or 400 able Men of my Name, in the County where I was born. Says the Earl of Shaftsbury, Mr. Dennis, I would very willingly have you to adviſe thoſe of your Name, and thoſe of your Friends for to be in a readineſs, when ever Occaſion ſhall ſerve, and to ſtand by, if Occaſion ſhould be, for to aſſiſt the Commonwealth of England; for we do really intend to have England under a Commonwealth and no Crown; and, ſays he, we intend to live as we ſee Holland does, that is, to have a Commonwealth, and to have no Supream Head, particular Man, ſays he, or King, nor owe Obedience to a Crown; and, ſays he, we will extirpate the King, and all his Family as near as we can; and Mr. Dennis, ſays he, I do admire that your Nation ſhould be ſuch Fools as they are, for it is very certain that King James, Queen Elizabeth, King Charles the Firſt, ſays he, and the King that now is, does wrong you to very Deſtruction; and, ſays he, if you had been under a Commonwealth, the Commonwealth would take more pity of your Nation, and the Gentry of your Nation, then any do of them now, in this Time wherein the King Governs, and upon this I do count the Iriſh Fools. This is all that I can ſay.

at

L. C. J. The King's Council declare they will call no more Witneſſes, for they think they have called enough already, and there are ſeveral of them that do ſwear Words that are treaſonable in themſelves, if you do deſire to ask any of the Witneſſes any thing, you ſhall have them all call'd one by one.

Foreman. My Lord, we will walk up again, and conſider what Queſtions to ask, and come again preſently.

Mr. Papillon. It ſeems they will call no more Witneſſes than theſe.

L. C. J. Not againſt the Earl of Shaftsbury, being you are charg'd only with that.

Mr. Papillon. It is ſo, my Lord, but we pray we may be ſatisfied upon the Statute the Indictment is grounded, becauſe we may hear it read before we go up, becauſe your Lordſhip ſpeaks of two different Statutes, the 25th of Edward, and you mention the Statute of the 13th of this King; your Lordſhip in your Diſcourſe to the Jury mentioned them both, we pray your Lordſhip to acquaint us upon what Statute it is grounded, whether upon both or one of them.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, this is grounded upon the Statute of this King, tho' there is enough to find an Indictment of Treaſon upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third. That which is Treaſon within the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, is Treaſon within this Statute, ſo this is the more copious Statute; for as I told you before, this Statute has enlarged that of Edward the Third in a great many Particulars; and therefore, look ye, Gentlemen, always conſider this, when one Statute contains the Matter of another, and inlarges it, the Indictment is always upon the laſt Statute, that being the more copious Statute: but you are to conſider both.

L. C. J. North. The Indictment is Contra formam Statut'. and it being Contra formam Statut'. it may be underſtood, Statutorum or Statuti, ſo that all Statutes that may be the Foundation of this Indictment you may go upon.

Jury. We deſire to know whether any of theſe Witneſſes ſtand indicted or no.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, don't talk of this, but conſider with your ſelves, an Examination of Proofs concerning the Credibility of the Witneſſes is not properly before you at this time; for I muſt tell you, and inform you as to that, you are not to examine properly here concerning the Credibility of the Witneſſes, that is not to be proved or controverted here before you, that is Matter upon a Trial by the Petty Jury, for there the King will be heard for to defend the Credit of his Witneſſes, if there be any thing that can be objected againſt them; it is proper for the Priſoner to do that, you are only to ſee whe-whether the Statute be ſatisfied, in having Matter that is Treaſonable, and having it witneſſed by two Men, by two Witneſſes, who are intended prima facie Credible, unleſs you of your own knowledge know the contrary; for otherwiſe, you muſt conſider what a Diſadvantage this would be in all ſuch Caſes, if the Credibility of the Witneſſes ſhould be examined before the Grand Jury, where the King is not preſent, nor in a Poſſibility of defending the Credit of his Witneſſes; the Priſoner or the Party indicted is not here; that is a proper Objection when he comes upon his Trial; for all Men are intended credible, till there are Objections againſt them, and till their Credits come to be examined on one ſide and the other.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, if your Lordſhip thinks good, I will beg this, I deſire your Lordſhip's Pardon, whether your Lordſhip doth not think that we are within the compaſs of our own Underſtanding and Conſciences to give our Judgment?

L. C. J. Your own Underſtandings and Conſciences, yes; but look ye, Gentlemen———

Mr. Papillon. If we are not left to conſider the Credibility of the Witneſſes: we cannot ſatisfie our Conſciences.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, you are to go according to the Evidence of the Witneſſes; you are to conſider of the Caſe according to the things alledged and proved, unleſs you know any thing your ſelves: but if any of you know any thing of your own knowledge, that you ought to take into Conſideration, no doubt of it.

Jury. Very well, my Lord.

L. C. J. The Grand Jury are to hear nothing, but the Evidence againſt the Priſoner; therefore for you to enter into Proofs, or expect any here, concerning the Credit of the Witneſſes, it is impoſſible for you to do Juſtice at that rate.

The Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourn'd till three a Clock.

L. C. J. Let the Witneſſes be brought in one by one.

Foreman. We will firſt ask a Queſtion of Mr. Gwyn.

Mr. Gwyn.

Foreman. Who put up the Papers?

Mr. Gwyn. I put up the Papers my ſelf.

Foreman. Who went in with you?

Mr. Gwyn. None but my Lord's Servants, I think, were there: but I put up the Papers my ſelf.

Foreman. Pray, Sir, whoſe Hand writing is that Paper of?

Mr. Gwyn. Indeed, Sir, I can't tell.

Foreman. How did it come into my Lord Shaftsbury's Cloſet?

Mr. Gwyn. My Lord, this is a ſtrange Queſtion. Indeed, Sir, I can't tell; all the Papers that I found in that Cloſet I put into that Bag.

L. C. J. To ſatisfie the Jury, was the Paper in the Cloſet before you came there?

Mr. Gwyn. My Lord, it was certainly there, for there I found it. I don't know the Particular Paper, but all the Papers in that Bag were there.

L. C. J. From whom had you the Key?

Mr. Gwyn. From my Lord Shaftsbury.

Foreman. Don't you know, Sir, there was a Diſcourſe in the Parliament of an Aſſociation?

Mr. Gwyn. Sir, I was not of the laſt Parliament. Sir, I know nothing of it.

Foreman. You have not heard then, that there was ſuch a thing in Parliament concerning an Aſſociation?

Mr. Gwyn. I have heard of an Aſſociation talked of.

Foreman. Mr. Secretary, I would ask you ſome Queſtions: if you did not know of a Debate in Parliament of an Aſſociation?

Mr. Secretary. I was not preſent at the Debate; but there was a Talk in Town of an Aſſociation.

Foreman. Did not you hear of it in Parliament?

Mr. Secretary. Indeed there was an Anſwer to a Meſſage from the Houſe of Commons that had ſome thing in it that did ſtrongly imply an Aſſociation; but this particular Aſſociation I do not remember to have heard propos'd.

Foreman. Don't you remember in the Houſe of Commons, Sir, it was read upon Occaſion of that Bill?

Mr. Secretary. I heard ſuch a thing ſpoke of; but at the reading of it I was not preſent, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Foreman. What Date, Sir, was the Warrant for my Lord Shaftsbury's Commitment?

Mr. Secretary. I refer my ſelf to the Warrant, for that I don't know the Date.

L. C. J. Mr. Secretary, you muſt ſpeak about the time that it was.

Mr. Secretary. Sir, I was the Man that had the honour to ſign that Warrant by which the Serjeant at Arms did apprehend my Lord Shaftsbury, but what Day of the Month I do not remember; and therefore I refer my ſelf, if you pleaſe, to the Warrant, and to the Serjeant at Arms.

Foreman. What Month was it?

Mr. Secretary. Sir.

Foreman. About what Month?

Mr. Secretary. July.

Foreman. The beginning of July?

Mr. Secretary. Sir, I do not remember the Day preciſely; for I did not foreſee that Queſtion would be asked me; but I refer my ſelf to the Warrant, and that is beyond all doubt.

Foreman. I ſuppoſe all theſe Witneſſes that are examin'd, were examin'd before the Committee.

Mr. Secretary. Sir, They were examin'd, and I was preſent at the Examination.

Foreman. All of them?

Mr. Secretary. I don't know whether all of them; but I am ſure I was at the Examination of ſeveral of them.

Foreman. How many, Sir?

Mr. Secretary. I can't tell truly how many.

Foreman. Call Mr. Booth.

Officer. He is not here, the Tipſtaff has him ſomewhere.

Foreman. Is that Witneſs a Priſoner?

L. C. J. Booth is a Priſoner.

Foreman. Then call Mr. Turbervile.

Mr. Papillon. Is Mr. Turbervile there?

Officer. Here is Mr. Booth come now.

Mr. Godfrey. Put Turbervile out again.

Foreman. Mr. Booth, you told me of a Diſcourſe that paſt between the Lord Shaftsbury and your ſelf, we deſire to know where it was, and when.

Mr. Booth. It was in Thanet-Houſe, Sir, where he lived, about a Week or Ten Days before the Parliament ſate at Oxford.

Fore-

Foreman. The preciſe time.

Mr. Booth. I cannot be more preciſe.

Foreman. Who introduced you?

Mr. Booth. I think one Mr. Wilſon led me into the Chamber.

Foreman. Who was preſent when the Diſcouſe was?

Mr. Booth. None but He and I, Sir.

L. C. J. If we have theſe Noiſes, we will have every one of you put out of Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. Richardſon, Richardſon, Pray turn them all out; they are brought in on purpoſe.

Mr. Booth. It was not the firſt, ſecond, nor third time that I had waited upon the Lord of Shaftsbury.

Foreman. In what Room was it that my Lord ſpake thoſe Words to you?

Mr. Booth. It was in the Room he uſually ſets in, on the left Hand as we came out of the long Gallery, I think we paſs'd thro' a Room before it, wainſcotted about, as I remember, and hung. I have been in that Room with him four or five times, I am ſure.

Foreman. After this Diſcourſe with you, how long was it before you ſpake of it to any body elſe?

Mr. Booth. Truly I think I did not publiſh this Diſcourſe that my Lord and I had, from the time it was, till within this ſeven or eight Weeks.

Foreman. You were never examined before then as a Witneſs?

Mr. Booth. No, Sir, I never was, nor no body will pretend it, I ſuppoſe.

Foreman. To whom, Sir, did you give your firſt Information?

Mr. Booth. Sir, I ſent my firſt Information in Writing to the Lords in the Council.

Foreman. By whoſe Hand?

Mr. Booth. By the Hand of Walter Banes.

Foreman. You had ſeveral Diſcourſes with him; had you eaſie Admiſſion, or was it with Difficulty you came into his Company?

Mr. Booth. I was admitted by the influence of Captain Wilkinſon at firſt, and ever after went with him, and had eaſie admittance and familiarity with him.

Foreman. Was he with you every time?

Mr. Booth. No, not every time; he was not this time with me.

Foreman. Did he talk to this purpoſe every time?

Mr. Booth. Something to this purpoſe he did talk every time, but not ſo fully; for I was firſt acquainted with this Buſineſs of Oxfoad by Captain Wilkinſon, and I had a great deſire to underſtand it from my Lord's own Mouth, becauſe I would be ſatisfied in my Lord's Intereſt as well as his Conduct.

Foreman. Pray, Sir, what Education have you had?

Mr. Booth. I have had the Education of a Gentleman, an Academical Education.

Foreman. Were you ever in Orders?

Mr. Booth. Yes.

Foreman. Do you own your ſelf to be in Orders ſtill?

Mr. Booth. How do you mean to be in Orders? I tell you I was in Orders; but I am not now beneficed.

Foreman. Do you officiate as a Miniſter?

Mr. Booth. No.

Foreman. Were you ever an Attorney's Clerk?

Mr. Booth. Never.

Foreman. Or a Juſtice's Clerk?

Mr. Booth. Never; nor to no Mortal.

Foreman. Were you ever indicted for any Felony?

Mr. Booth. No.

L. C. J. That is a Queſtion not to be asked by any Jury-man of any Witneſs whatſoever: no Man is bound to diſcover any thing of that Nature that is Criminal, concerning himſelf.

Foreman. If it be pardoned, my Lord, he may.

L. C. J. Pardoned, or not pardoned, he is not bound to accuſe himſelf, nor to fix a Scandal on himſelf.

Mr. Booth. No, my Lord, Nemo tenetur ſeipſum prodere.

L. C. J. Sir, we muſt not ſuffer ſuch Queſtions; I will tell you the Reaſon: it is proper for a Priſoner that ſtands upon his Juſtification to object it, but then the Priſoner muſt prove it: it lies upon him to prove it.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Booth, you told us of fifty Men that were liſted under Captain Wilkinſon, do you know any more of them?

Mr. Booth. I never directly converſed with any other.

Mr. Papillon. Did you know any more of them?

Mr. Booth. No, not directly I did not, but only by Captain Wilkinſon's Information.

Mr. Papillon. How many Stories was that Room where you talked with my Lord?

Mr. Boooh. One Pair of Stairs, as I remember.

Mr. Godfrey. Was it the right Hand as you came in?

Mr. Booth. I think ſo.

Mr. Godfrey. Was it the right Hand or the left?

Mr. Booth. I went into the long Gallery firſt, and ſtayed there about a quarter, or half an Hour; and I remember very well I looked upon ſome Maps that were there, to divert my ſelf a while; and when I was called in, went out of the Gallery on the left hand, and went thro' another Room before I came into my Lord's Room.

Foreman. Did you never hear my Lord ſpeak Treaſon in any Houſe but his own?

Mr. Booth. I never had occaſion to hear this Diſcourſe from my Lord, but in his own Houſe; I never waited upon him in any other Houſe.

Foreman. Was you never deſired to be a Witneſs againſt my Lord Shaftsbury?

Mr. Booth. Not till I intimated ſomething of it.

Foreman. Who was that to?

Mr. Booth. That was to Mr. Banes; I told you before ſo.

Foreman. And what then?

Mr. Booth. When he told me of this Buſineſs with the Yorkſhire Attorney Brownrig, I did ſay again, I did not know what my Lord had done, as to any thing of Iriſhmen, but I was ſure there was ſomething as to Engliſhmen, as to that purpoſe.

Foreman. Did he propoſe any Reward, or any thing of that Nature?

Mr. Booth. Not a Farthing; for I think he had no Commiſſion to do it.

Foreman. Are you acquainted with one Callaghan and Downing, two Iriſhmen?

Mr. Booth. No.

Mr. Godfrey. Were you never in their Company?

Mr. Booth.

Mr. Booth. Not that I know of.

Mr. Godfrey. Did you ever hear their Names?

Mr. Booth. I don't know that I have.

Foreman. Were you in their Company lately?

Mr. Booth. Not as I know of. I do not remember either their Names, or their Perſons, nor do I know them from other Men.

Foreman. Do you know one Mr. Shelden?

Mr. Booth. No.

Foreman. Do you know one Mr. Marriot?

Mr. Booth. No, Sir: I have heard of one Marriot that did belong to my Lord Duke of Norfolk.

Foreman. When were you in his Company?

Mr. Booth. Never that I know of.

Foreman. Has no body diſcourſed you from him?

Mr. Booth. No, no body.

Foreman. Did you never hear of any Witneſſes he ſent to his Tenants?

Mr. Booth. I have heard from Banes about Brownrigg, about Iriſh Witneſſes.

Mr. Godfrey. Did you never hear of any Iriſh Witneſſes ſent down by Mr. Marriot to the Iſle of Ely?

L. C. J. We gave you all the liberty in the World, hoping you would ask pertinent Queſtions, but theſe are Trifles. I did not expect that any wiſe Men would have asked theſe Queſtions. Mr. Godfrey, was it to the purpoſe whether Mr. Marriot ſent any Iriſh Witneſſes to his Tenant, or no? What is that to this buſineſs?

Foreman. My Lord, I have it under the Hand of the Clerk of the Council.

Mr. Booth. Pray, Sir, Did any inform you that I had any Correſpondence with this Man?

L. C. J. Nay, Sir, you muſt ask no Queſtions.

Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Booth, do you go under no other Name but Booth?

Mr. Booth. No, nor never did in my life.

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I cannot go in ſafety here for the Tumult.

L. C. J. Let the Officers ſecure him: Mr. Sheriff, look to him, that the Man be ſecure and ſafe; I will require him at your Hands elſe.

Mr. Sheriff Pilkington. What ſhould I do?

L. C. J. Send your Officers to protect him, as becomes you, that he may be ſecured from the Rabble here.

Mr. Turbervile.

Foreman. Mr. Turbervile, when you had this Diſcourſe with my Lord Shaftsbury, who was preſent with you?

Mr. Turbervile. One of his Servants; truly I cannot tell his Name.

Foreman. No body elſe?

Mr. Turbervile. I know the Name of none of his Servants, but Mr. Sheppard, I cannot remember any body elſe.

Foreman. Did he carry you up to my Lord?

Mr. Turbervile. It was he, I think, told me I might go in: I was in the Dining-Room.

Foreman. What time was this?

Mr. Turbervile. In the Morning.

Foreman. What time was it when you had this Diſcourſe with my Lord Shaftsbury?

Mr. Turbervile. It was in February.

Foreman. What time in February?

Mr. Turbervile. About the beginning; I cannot tell exactly to a Day.

Foreman. How long was this before you communicated this to any body?

Mr. Turbervile. It was about the fourth of July.

Foreman. Then you concealed it from February to July: Who did you communicate it to firſt of all?

Mr. Turbervile. The firſt Depoſition I gave was to Mr. Secretary.

Foreman. Which Secretary?

Mr. Turbervile. Secretary Jenkins.

Foreman. Pray, what Room was it you had this Diſcourſe in?

Mr. Turbervile. Sir, it was the Room at the upper end of the Dining-Room; I think they call it the Dining-Room; at the upper end of the Room, and turns on the left Hand where he lay.

Foreman. Did you meet with no body about the beginning of July, after my Lord's Commitment, and tell them when you were challenged, and told you were to be a Witneſs againſt him, as you were alive you knew no ſuch thing?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, this is not to be allowed: This is private Inſtructions which the Jury are not to take.

Foreman. No, Sir, it is not private Inſtructions. Did you not ſpeak ſuch Words to William Herbert?

L. C. J. Have you had any Information concerning this to Mr. Herbert.

Foreman. My Lord, I have a long time ago. My Lord, ſuch a Perſon did tell me ſo and ſo, and ſet down the Day; and he then ſaid he was very angry with him for it.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, what Diſcourſe you take up at random in every Coffee-houſe? Is that fit to be brought in when Treaſon is in queſtion againſt the King's Life? Are theſe Coffee-houſe Diſcourſes, do you think, ground enough for you to cavel at Perſons, becauſe you have heard this Diſcourſe in a Coffee-houſe?

Foreman. My Lord, I never was in a Coffee-Houſe in my life with Mr. Herbert; but he declared this to me ſome Months ago.

L. C. J. And you think this is ground enough for you againſt him?

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, we only ask this Queſtion, whether he hath not contradicted this, or ſaiid the contaary to any body elſe?

Mr. Turbervile. I do not remember that ever I ſpake one word to Mr. Herbert in my life; and I can give you one reaſon: For I was diſcarded by all People of my Lord's Intereſt at that time; and if I had given under my Hand that I had known nothing againſt him, I believe I might have been in their favour as much as before.

Mr. Papillon. Were not you one that Petitioned to the Common-Council in London?

Mr. Turbervile. I did, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. And did not you declare then that you were tempted to witneſs againſt your Conſcience?

Mr. Turbervile. I believe I never read the Petition: I was drawn by the Order of Mr. Colledge, by a Man that lives about Guild-hall; by a Scrivener about Guild-hall; and I ſigned that Petition, but never read it, nor knew what was in it.

L. C. J. Mr. Richardſon, any you Officers, watch by thoſe Men that make a noiſe, and bring me in one to make an Example.

Mr. Turbervile. My Lord, I go in Danger of my Life, for the People threaten to ſtone me to Death, and I cannot go ſafe to my Lodging.

Mr. Papillon. What was your Deſign in ſigning that Petition? what did you look for?

Mr. Turbervile. The Deſign was that the City ſhould take care of us.

Mr. Papillon. Were you in a poor Condition?

Mr. Turbervile. Truly I was not very poor, tho' I was not over full of Money.

Mr. Papillon. It is a ſtrange thing that you ſhould petition for Relief, if you were not in want.

Mr. Turbervile. We were told by ſome Members of the Houſe of Commons, that there was a Vote in the Houſe of Commons ready to paſs, that the City ſhould advance Money for the Support of the Witneſſes, and that we would Petition that they would anſwer the Deſign of the Parliament.

Mr. Papillon. What Members were they?

Mr. Turbervile. It was a Member of the Houſe of Commons that told me ſo, I will aſſure you, two of them.

Mr. Papillon. Did never any body move you, or deſire you to be a Witneſs in this Caſe againſt my Lord Shaftsbury?

Mr. Turbervile. No body in my Life. When I came to ſpeak the Truth of what I knew, I did it voluntarily.

Mr. Papillon. You did it voluntarily?

Mr. Turbervile. I did, I will aſſure you.

Mr. Papillon. Do you know any thing more than what you have ſaid here?

Mr. Turbervile. No not one Tittle.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Turbervile, I deſire to be ſatisfied in one thing, whether my Lord Shaftsbury was committed before or after your Information?

Mr. Turbervile. Truly, Sir, I cannot tell poſitively, as to that Point; but I believe it was before; I cannot tell.

Mr. Papillon. Did you hear my Lord ſpeak theſe Words in any other Room or Place?

Mr. Turbervile. No, indeed, I did not.

Mr. Papillon. It was about the fourth of July, you ſay, your Depoſitions were taken?

Mr. Turbervile. About that time, I ſuppoſe the fourth of July—— I hope your Lordſhip will take care that we be not knock'd on the Head.

L. C. J. That we give in Charge to Mr. Sheriff; and ſee you do take care of the King's Witneſſes at your Peril. It is a Reflection, not only upon the Government of the City to ſuffer theſe Diſorders, but upon the whole Kingdom: therefore, Mr. Sheriff, look the Witneſſes come by no Hurt.

Mr. John Smith.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Smith, the Jury ask you a Queſtion, whether or no you did not uſe to go by the Name of Barry?

Mr. Smith. Sir, what Names I have gone by is not pertinent to this Purpoſe; I tell you I have gone by ſeveral Names, as all Popiſh Prieſts do.

Mr. Papillon. Did you never go by the Name of Barry?

Mr. Smith. It may be I might; I have gone by ſeveral Names, as all Popiſh Prieſts do.

L. C. J. Did you ever go by the Name of Barry?

Mr. Smith. I did, my Lord; it is uſual for Popiſh Prieſts ſo to do.

Mr. Papillon. What Religion are you of, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. I am a Proteſtant, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. How long have you been a Proteſtant?

Mr. Smith. Many Years.

Mr. Papillon. When were you firſt converted?

Mr. Smith. Firſt converted?

Mr. Papillon. Ay, to the Proteſtant Religion: you ſay you have been one many Years?

Mr. Smith. I have been a Proteſtant, and was perverted to the Popiſh Religion, and afterwards became a Proteſtant again.

L. C. J. Bring in one of thoſe Men that make the Noiſe. Cannot you bring in one of them?

Mr. Papillon. When did you receive the Sacrament?

Mr. Smith. I believe not above three Months ago, as the Rector of Bow-Church will inform you: I have it under the Church-wardens Hands in other Places in London.

Mr. Papillon. Have you been deſired to be a Witneſs, or did you do it voluntarily?

Mr. Smith. Never deſired, I declare it; I did it voluntarily my ſelf.

Mr. Papillon. When did you give in your Evidence firſt?

Mr. Smith. Truly I cannot exactly tell when I gave it in; I did not keep an Account of it.

Mr. Papillon. What Month?

Mr. Smith. I cannot tell.

Mr. Papillon. Was it before my Lord was committed, or after?

Mr. Smith. I believe it might be a little after. Whether it was before or after, I cannot exactly tell.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give your Information?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, they commanded the People to ſtone us to death.

L. C. J. Who did?

Mr. Smith. Several Perſons, and when we were at the Tavern, Dr. Oates's Man came out and gave the Rabble a Bottle of Wine, and bid them knock us down.

L. C. J. Do you know what the Man's Name is?

Dr. Oates. I know nothing of it, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is your Man's Name?

Dr. Oates. I keep half a dozen Men, my Lord.

L. C. J. I hope you keep no Men to affront the King's Witneſſes.

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, it is a Miſtake, I know nothing of it, we went thither to refreſh our ſelves.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Smith, who did you give your Information to?

Mr. Smith. What Information?

Mr. Papillon. The firſt Information.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, am I to anſwer to theſe Queſtions?

L. C. J. Ay, anſwer them, tell them.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, the Information, I gave in to Secretary Jenkins, but I gave notice long before of what I intended to do to other Perſons.

Mr. Papillon. When did you hear theſe Words, ſpeak to the time exactly?

Mr. Smith. Which Words do you ask?

Mr. Papillon. Thoſe you mentioned even now.

Mr. Smith. Sir, if you pleaſe, I know you take all in ſhort Hand, if you ask me what Words, I will tell you, for if I do not expreſs my ſelf ſelf in the ſame Words as before, you will take hold of me.

L. C. J. I will tell you this, this may be an ill Queſtion, for he told you, he had diſcourſed my Lord Shaftsbury at a great many Times, and that at ſometimes he ſaid theſe Words, at other Times other Words, and for you to catch him upon a Queſtion, it doth not ſhew a fair Inclination.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, under your Lordſhip's Favour, we only deſire to diſcover the Truth, we are not for catches.

L. C. J. Ask him then which of the Words you would have him declare the time of, and he will tell you.

Mr. Papillon. Let him ſpeak his own Words, it was about the Time when Hetherington went thither.

Mr. Smith. Truly I will anſwer that as punctually as I can, the Month or Day I cannot well tell, but the Perſon that came for me was Major Manly; and he came to Bethel's Club, what time that was, I cannot ſay, but if you pleaſe to inform your ſelves of thoſe Gentlemen that I name, I believe they will tell you Mr. Bethel was there preſent, and knew very well I went to my Lord Shaftsbury that Night, and returned to the Club again.

Mr. Godfrey. Was it in the Evening or the Morning?

Mr. Smith. Mr. Godfrey, Clubs are uſually at Night I ſuppoſe, you know that was.

Mr. Papillon. Where did you ſee my Lord Shaftsbury?

Mr. Smith. It was in his Dining Room.

Mr. Papillon. Did you hear theſe Words in any other Place, or at any other time, or any treaſonable Words againſt the King?

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, he told you of ſeveral other Words at ſeveral other Times.

Mr. Papillon. But he ſaid all at his Houſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, but at ſeveral Times.

Mr. Smith. I know Mr. Attorny, what the Gentlemen would be at very well.

L. C. J. Anſwer them whether you did hear him ſpeak any Words that you conceive treaſonable at any other Time?

Mr. Smith. I did not indeed.

Mr. Papillon. In another Place?

Mr. Smith. I do ſay I did not.

Mr. Papillon. Did you petition to the Common-Council?

Mr. Smith. No, Sir, I never did.

Mr. Papillon. Are you an Engliſh-man or an Iriſh-man?

Mr. Smith. That's no matter, no more than if I were a French-man or a Dutch-man.

L. C. J. Give them an Account whether you are an Engliſh-man or an Iriſh-man.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon for that, if I were an Iriſh-man, whether thereupon my Evidence would be prejudiced.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Smith, I do hope the Gentlemen of the Jury have more diſcretion among them all, than to think that an Iriſh-man is not a good Witneſs, I hope they are not ſuch Perſons.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, if you pleaſe whilſt I was in the City amongſt them, I never petitioned to the City, I never had a Farthing from them, nor ever ſpake to any for it, I never had any Occaſion for it, but if I had, it is probable I have enough in England, and other Places, without being beholden to your Common-Council.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Jury. No, no.

Mr. Papillon. Is Mr. Smith gone? I would ask him one Word, we would fain know what allowance you have, or what you receive, if you have any alllowance, from any body?

Mr. Smith. From whom?

Mr. Papillon. Nay, I know not from whom: I ask whether you have any from any body?

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, is that a Queſtion that is pertinent? I wonder you will go to ſuch Queſtions: we allowed you to ask Queſtions your ſelves, becauſe we look upon you as Men of Reaſon.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, I do not know but it may be a proper Queſtion to ask him if he have any allowance from any Man upon this Account.

L. C. J. Upon what Account?

Mr. Papillon. Upon this Account, if he ſays he has none 'tis an Anſwer.

L. C. J. Do you intend your Queſtion, whether he is bribed to give Evidence, if you mean ſo, ſpeak plain.

Mr. Papillon. We ask if he have any allowance?

Mr. Smith. You don't ask me how the 6 or 700 l. was made up.

L. C. J. You that are upon your Oaths ſhould have a care what you do.

Bryan Haynes.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Haynes, when did you give in your Information upon this Matter?

Mr. Haynes. Againſt the Earl of Shaftsbury, Sir?

Mr. Papillon. Ay.

Mr. Haynes. The Day that I was taken by the Meſſenger.

Mr. Papillon. That was before my Lord was committed, was it not?

Mr. Haynes. Yes, Sir, it was before my Lord was committed.

Mr. Papillon. Did you ever make any other Information to a Juſtice of the Peace?

Mr. Haynes. Not of my Lord of Shaftsbury.

Mr. Papillon. Nor touching this Matter?

Mr. Haynes. No, not any Information upon Oath, I may have diſcourſed with a Juſtice of the Peace.

Mr. Papillon. Did not you give in an Information of a Deſign againſt the Earl of Shaftsbury?

Mr. Haynes. To none but to Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Papillon. You underſtand the Queſtion, whether you did give no Information of a Deſign againſt my Lord Shaftsbury to ſome Juſtice of the Peace?

Mr. Haynes. No no, to none but Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

L. C. J. You do not obſerve his Queſtion, did you ever give to any Juſtice any Information of a Deſign againſt my Lord Shaftsbury.

Mr. Haynes. Yes, my Lord, I did, to Sir George Treby, I made Affidavit before him.

Mr. Papillon. When was that?

Mr. Haynes. I think it was in March laſt.

Mr. Papillon. What was that Deſign againſt my Lord Shaftsbury?

Mr. Haynes. The Deſign was what Mr. Fitz-Gerald told me, he told me he gave under his Hand to the King, that the Earl of Shaftsbury did reſolve to ſet the Crown upon his own Head, or otherwiſe to turn the Kingdom into a Commonwealth.

Mr. Papillon. Fitz-Gerald told you this, and ſo you made Affidavit of it?

Mr. Haynes. Yes, before Sir George Treby.

Mr. Papillon. What time?

Mr. Haynes. It was before the Parliament met at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. So you ſay the words were; when were the words ſpoken that you mentioned?

Mr. Haynes. The words againſt my Lord?

Mr. Papillon. Ay.

Mr. Haynes. He ſpake them to me a little before I made Affidavit; I cannot tell poſitively the time.

Mr. Papillon. That was before his Commitment.

Mr. Haynes. Yes, yes, my Lord was committed in June laſt, this Affidavit was made in March laſt, before the Recorder of London.

L. C. J. North. When you ask him about the Information of the Deſign againſt my Lord Shaftsbury, he ſays that was in March laſt; and when you ask him about the Evidence he gives now, that was the ſame Day he was apprehended by the Meſſenger.

Mr. Papillon. About June you ſay it was, that you ſay you gave in the Information againſt my Lord Shaftsbury.

Mr. Haynes. The Information I made againſt the Lord Shaftsbury was in June laſt, the 28th as I take it, of June laſt.

Mr. Papillon. Where was it you had this Diſcourſe?

Mr. Haynes. I had ſeveral Conferences with my Lord.

Mr. Papillon. Did he every time ſay the ſame?

Mr. Haynes. The laſt time I ſpake with him was in Ironmonger-Lane, for Mr. Whitaker told me he would ſpeak with me, and he would fain have me explain my ſelf, what I did mean by the Tall Man I mentioned in the Narrative; and I went to the Houſe, and they told me he was there, and I ſent up a Note, and he deſired me to come up; but I ſent word I did not care to come up, becauſe I would not be known; and ſo he ſent me word to meet him after Dinner; and when I came, my Name is Haynes, my Lord, ſaid I, and I led his Lordſhip by the Hand and went in there. I had, I believe, a whole Hour's Diſcourſe with him; and pray, my Lord, ſaid I, among other Queſtions, what Religion is the King of? Truly, ſays he, Mr. Haynes, he hath no more Religion than an Horſe; for, faith he, they ſay, Sir, he was inclined to Popery when he came firſt to England, ſays he, he had a tincture of Popery, and was much inclined that way, but ſince he was degenerated from all the Principles of Chriſtianity, for he is juſt like a perfect Beaſt.

Mr. Papillon. This you ſay was in Ironmonger-Lane.

Mr. Haynes. Ay, Sir, at a Paſtry-Cook's Shop.

Mr. Papillon. What time was it?

Mr. Haynes. After Dinner in the Afternoon.

Mr. Papillon. In June, or when?

Mr. Haynes. I cannot tell what time poſitively, it was about the time of the Trial of Fitz-Harris.

Mr. Papillon. Was it the ſame time he ſpake about the Duke of Buckingham?

Mr. Haynes. No, no.

Mr. Papillon. When was that?

Mr. Haynes. That was when I was with him at his own Houſe, and deſired him not to expoſe me.

Mr. Papillon. What time?

Mr. Haynes. I cannot tell, Sir, for I never thought I ſhould be called to an account for it, and I cannot keep an Almanack in my Head; and I deſired them not to expoſe me to the King's Fury, for I heard the King was diſpleaſed with me. No, ſays he, you are miſtaken, this is the beſt opportunity we can have, and if he will not give you a Pardon, we will raiſe the whole Kingdom againſt him in Arms; and then he makes himſelf the Maſter and Author of the Plot, and conſequently he muſt expect to be ruined, unleſs he grant you a Pardon.

Mr. Papillon. Did you ever hear any other words than what you have now teſtified?

Mr. Haynes. Yes, Sir, for I diſcourſed with him in Ironmonger-Lane a great while, and told him, that our only and beſt way to have our Ends of the King, was to raiſe a Rebellion in Ireland, and that I had Relations and Friends, and could get diſcontented Perſons enough, and his Lordſhip would do the work here.

Mr. Papillon. What, did you propound a Rebellion in Ireland?

Mr. Haynes. I offered to go beyond Sea, and that now was the beſt time to raiſe a Rebellion in Ireland; and he ſaid that was not the beſt way, for they had other means to take, and ſo the Diſcourſe was waved.

Mr. Papillon. And is that all?

Mr. Haynes. That is all I remember now.

Mr. Papillon. Do you know of any other Place or Time?

Mr. Haynes. I was with him at his Houſe.

Mr. Papillon. Were you ever a Witneſs for my Lady Windham, or againſt her?

Mr. Haynes. No, Sir, but ſhe arreſted me, becauſe I ſaid I lay with her.

John Macnamarra.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Macnamarra, when was it you had this Diſcourſe with my Lord Shaftsbury, what is the time, as near as you remember?

Mr. Macnamarra. In March and April laſt, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Twice then do you ſpeak of?

Mr. Macnam. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Which is that that was in April?

Mr. Macnam. That was the laſt, the laſt Diſcourſe was in April.

Mr. Papillon. To what purpoſe was that?

Mr. Macnam. My Lord ſaid that the King deſerved to be depoſed as much as King Richard the Second did.

Mr. Papillon. In April you ſay.

Mr. Macnam. In April.

Mr. Papillon. When did you give Information of this?

Mr. Macnam. I cannot exactly tell, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Repeat what you ſaid.

Mr. Macnam. That the King deſerved to be depoſed as much as King Richard the 2d, and that he took the Dutcheſs of Mazarine's Advice in every particular, which was the worſt of Womankind.

Mr. Papillon. What time in April was this?

Mr. Macnam. It was in the beginning of April.

Mr. Papillon. Where?

Mr. Macnam. In his own Houſe.

Mr. Papillon. Who was preſent?

Mr.

Mr. Macnam. There was Mr. Ivey by.

Mr. Papillon. When did you make Information of this?

Mr. Macnam. I cannot tell, it was a good while ago.

Mr. Papillon. Was it before his Commitment?

Mr. Macnam. Yes, Sir, it was.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give Information?

Mr. Macnam. To the Secretary of State, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Which of them?

Mr. Macnam. Mr. Secretary Jenkins, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Did not you petition the Common-Council, Sir, for Relief?

Mr. Macnam. Yes, Sir, I ſigned a Petition that was drawn up, but I did not ſee it till it was brought to me to ſign.

Mr. Papillon. Did you read it?

Mr. Mac. No, I never read it neither.

Mr. Papillon. Nor don't know what is in it?

Mr. Mac. No, nor don't know the Contents of it.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, in that Petition they ſay, they were tempted to ſwear againſt their Conſciences, and that ſome of the Witneſſes had made Shipwrack of their Conſciences; we ask them now, and they ſay, they do not know what was in the Petition: if we ſhould ask them who tempted them, and who thoſe Witneſſes were, that made Shipwrack of their Conſciences, it would ſignifie nothing; for ſince they do not know what was in the Petition, it is in vain to ask them any more.

Mr. Mac. For my Part, my Lord, I never ſaw it till it was brought to me to be ſigned, and do not know the Contents of it; but I heard Mr. Colledge that was executed at Oxford, was concerned in promoting the Petition, by my Lord Shaftsbury's Advice.

Dennis Macnamarra.

Mr. Papillon. Dennis Macnamarra, tell us how you were introduced. to my Lord Shaftsbury, when you had this Diſcourſe?

D. Mac. By my Brother, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. What, he that was here laſt?

D. Mac. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. He introduced you?

D. Mac. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. When was it?

D. Mac. It was in March laſt, the latter end of March, or beginning of April.

Mr. Papillon. Cannot you tell which of the Months?

D. Mac. No, I cannot be poſitive in it.

Mr. Papillon. Who was by?

D. Mac. There was Mr. Ivey.

Mr. Papillon. No body but Mr. Ivey?

D. Mac. No body but Mr. Ivey and my Brother.

Mr. Papillon. Where was it?

D. Mac. It was in his own Dining Room.

Mr. Papillon. Were none of his Servants in the Room?

D Mac. Not that I know of.

Mr. Papillon. Are you ſure none of his Servants were there?

D. Mac. Not that I know of.

Mr. Papil. Did you hear any thing elſe, at any other Time?

D. Mac. No.

Mr. Papil. Nor in any other Place?

D. Mac. No.

Mr. Papillon. When did you give in this Information?

D. Mac. I gave it in a good while ago, Sir, I cannot be poſitive.

Mr. Papillon. Was it before my Lord was committed?

D. Mac. Yes, a great while.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give it?

D. Mac. I gave it to the Secretary of State.

Jury. Cannot you remember how long it was before?

D. Mac. No, I cannot at the preſent.

Mr. Papillon. Which of the Secretaries?

D. Macn. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, I only propoſe, whether we may not ask whether he have not a Pardon, for it would be a ſatisfaction to us, for ſome reaſon.

L. C. J. North. Look you here, Gentlemen, when the Priſoner makes Exceptions to the Witneſſes, then it is proper, but here are no Exceptions to the Witneſſes.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, we make no Exceptious, but we muſt ſaisfy our Conſciences, my Lord, that we muſt do, and that is very much, as we find the credibility of the Witneſſes.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, what do you mean that he ſhould have a Pardon for?

Mr. Papillon. For Crimes.

L. C. J. North. You muſt not ask him to accuſe himſelf.

Mr. Papillon. If he hath a Pardon he is in ſtatu quo; ſuppoſe, my Lord, ſome of them have been guilty of Poyſoning, ſome of Felony, ſome of robbing on the Highway, we do but ask them if they be pardoned?

L. C. J. North. A Man muſt not be impeached, but where he may anſwer for it.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, if you do not give us leave, we muſt forbear then.

L. C. J. North. I do not think it proper to ask.

Edward Ivey.

Mr. Papillon. The Diſcourſe that you had with my Lord Shaftsbury, when was it, at what time?

Mr. Ivey. It was a little after the ſitting of the Parliament at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. Was it more times than one?

Mr. Ivey. Yes, Sir, ſeveral times.

Mr. Papillon. All the ſame Diſcourſe?

Mr. Ivey. No, not the ſame Diſcourſe.

Mr. Papillon. The words that you ſpoke of, when was that?

Mr. Ivey. That was after the ſitting of the Parliament at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. About what time was it?

Mr. Ivey. It was about the latter end of March or beginning of April.

Mr. Papillon. When did you make Information of this?

Mr. Ivey. I cannot be poſitive in that neither.

Mr. Papillon. Before my Lord's Commitment, or after?

Mr. Ivey. A while before.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give it?

Mr, Ivey. To the Secretary of State.

Foreman. Who was preſent when my Lord Shafteſbury ſpake thoſe words?

Mr. Ivey. Both the Macnamarra's, as I remember.

Foreman. Who elſe?

Mr. Ivey.

Mr. Ivey. Truly, I do not remember any elſe privy to our Diſcourſe, neither am I certain, that both the Macnamarra's were there, one of them was there I am ſure of it.

Foreman. What was the Reaſon you concealed this Information ſo long, had you no Inducement to make it at that time, how came you to do it then and not before? What was the Reaſon, you ſay it was the latter end of April and May, my Lord was not committed for a good while after, here was two Months time?

Mr. Ivey. I am not certain how long a time it was before, but I made it as ſoon as I could.

Foreman. I ask you, whether you know any thing either of Words, or treaſonable Actions, or any thing of my Lord Shaftsbury, ſpoken or acted at any other Time or Place.

Mr. Ivey. No, I have declared what I know, as to the Particulars.

Bernard Dennis.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Dennis, in the Morning you told me ſomething about the Diſcourſe you had with my Lord of Shaftsbury, tell me when it was?

Mr. Dennis. It was in April, four or five Days after the Parliament was diſſolved at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. In the beginning?

Mr. Dennis. In March, after the Parliament was diſſolved at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. It was in March, and where?

Mr. Dennis. In his own Houſe, here in this Town, four or five Days after the Parliament was diſſolved at Oxford, immediately after he came home, I do not think he was at Home three Days before.

Mr. Papillon. Who was preſent with you then?

Mr. Dennis. There was in the Room Mr. Sheppard his Gentleman.

Mr. Papillon. Who elſe?

Mr. Dennis. Some of his Servants, his Pages I ſuppoſe, but whether they did hear this or no, I cannot tell.

Mr. Papillon. Did my Lord whiſper it, or ſpeak out?

Mr. Dennis. My Lord is not a Man of an high Voice, but of mediocrite Voice.

Mr. Papillon. Did he whiſper it in your Ear.

Mr. Dennis. No, I was juſt by him.

Mr. Papillon. Who was in the Room beſides?

Mr. Dennis. No body, only his Servants.

Mr. Papillon. When did you make this Information?

Mr. Dennis. I made it in the Month of June.

Mr. Papillon. In the Month of June?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Before my Lord was committed or after?

Mr. Dennis. Before.

Mr. Papillon. Who did you make it to?

Mr. Dennis. I made my Information to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Papillon. Which of them?

Mr. Dennis. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Papillon. Why did you conceal it ſo long?

Mr. Dennis. Becauſe I was in the City ſo long.

Mr. Papillon. Did you ever go about to muſter your 400 Men you had in Ireland, I ask you whether you did or no?

Mr. Dennis. Upon my Word I did adviſe ſome of them to be ready.

Mr. Papillon. And did you provide them with Arms?

Mr. Dennis. Not I Sir, I was not able to do it.

Mr. Papillon. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Dennis. I am a Proteſtant.

Mr. Papillon. How long have you been a Proteſtant?

Mr. Dennis. I have been a Proteſtant ſince Febr. laſt. And this I muſt confeſs, that when I was in Spain and France, my Reſolution was to be a Proteſtant.

Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Dennis, pray who was in the Room when you were there?

Mr. Dennis. The Earl of Shaftsbury, Sir.

Mr. Godfrey. Who elſe?

Mr. Dennis. Mr. Sheppard.

Mr. Godfrey. Who elſe?

Mr. Dennis. I cannot name them.

L. C. J. Mr. Godfrey, when another Man asks a Queſtion, you ſhould conſider what is ſaid, and not ask the ſame Queſtion over and over again.

Mr. Papillon. In what Place in his Houſe?

Mr. Dennis. In his own Chamber, in the great Chamber, I do not know whether you call it the Hall or the Parlour.

Mr. Papillon. Was it above Stairs.

Mr. Dennis. Yes, it was above Stairs, my Lord does not uſe to ſpeak with any below Stairs.

Mr. Papillou. Is this all that you know, have you heard my Lord ſay any treaſonable Words in any other Place, or at any other Time?

Mr. Dennis. In the long Gallery, in his own Houſe, at another Time?

Mr. Papillon. Why did not you ſay ſo before?

Mr. Dennis. I did ſay ſo before, in the long Gallery he told me he would have a Common-wealth in England, and extirpate the Crown of England and the King of England.

Mr. Papillon. Is that all, ſpeak all your Knowledge?

Mr. Dennis. He ſaid we ſhould all Iriſh-men conform our ſelves to a Common-wealth, and by that we ſhould get our Eſtates again.

Mr. Papillon. I ask you if this is all you have to ſay?

L. C. J. Do you remember any more?

Mr. Papillon. More than you ſaid in the Morning?

Mr. Dennis. He ſaid he would extirpate the King, and make England a Common-wealth, and that we were Fools and ſilly Folks that did not comply our ſelves to their factious Party, and that we ſhould get our Eſtates, and that he would get me a black Gown and a Benefice, in the mean Time; and when all things were done he would prefer me to a better, and not only my ſelf but all that were of my Name, and would ſtick to me.

Mr. Papillon. Is this all?

Mr. Dennis. This is all.

Mt. Papillon. Then you have nothing more.

Mr. Dennis. I never ſpake to him but in his own Houſe.

Mr. Papillon. All your Kindred are Papiſts, are not they?

Mr. Dennis. No, Sir, I cannot ſay ſo, but moſt of them are.

L. C. J. North. Who can ſay that, that Queſtion no body can anſwer.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, now you have asked theſe Queſtions, you had beſt go and conſider what Evidence is delivered, and weigh well all thoſe things that have been ſaid to you, and you muſt conſider your Duty, you are

are to enquire here, whether it be fitting for the King to call my Lord Shaftsbury to queſtion upon this Account of treaſonable Words.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, we deſire before we go, that either the Law may be read, or we may have the Statute-book up with us.

L. C. J. The Statute-book was never denyed, but you ſhall have the Law read here: Firſt the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, and then this laſt Statute.

L. C. J. North. I would ſay one thing, becauſe I obſerve that ſome of you asked the Queſtion, whether the Parliament did not debate about an Aſſociation: whether it related to that Paper or no, I am not certain, I hope you will conſider that Paper well, for my Part I muſt needs ſay for my ſelf, I heard of it, but I never heard it read before, and never heard the Contents of it; but it ſeems to me to ſhow what thoſe Officers were to do, for the ends of this Aſſociation, and one of thoſe ends as I remember (Gentlemen, I refer you to the Paper, and hope you will conſider it, you are Men of Underſtanding) I thought that one of thoſe ends was to deſtroy the mercenary Forces in and about the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and that the Government was to be by the major Part of the Members of Parliament in the ſitting of Parliament, not with the King, but the major Part of the Members of Parliement. Gentlemen, I may miſtake, for I profeſs I ſpeak only out of Memory; but it ſeems to me to be of great Conſequence, and there is great Matter to be preſumed upon it, it being found under Lock and Key in his Study: but I ſuppoſe my Lord Shaftſbury may give an Account of it, but there is great Preſumption upon it, it doth not import to be an Aſſociation by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Att. Gen. When the Parliament was prorogued or diſſolved, then the major Part of the Members in each County engage themſelves to follow their Command and obey their Order.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, I hope you will conſider your Oaths, and give all things their due weight.

L. C. J. Will you have the Statute read?

Jury. We will read it above.

The Jury withdrew to conſider the Evidence, and returned the Bill Ignoramus, upon which the People fell a hollowing and ſhouting.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, let it be recorded this hollowing and hooping in a Court of Juſtice.

THIS Day the Earl of Argyle having fitſt openly declared his Senſe, as you have it hereafter ſet down in his Explication, took the Teſt as a Privy-Counſellor; and after he was called to, and had taken his Place, the Councils Explication having been read and debated, was put to the Vote, and paſſed, the Earl not voting thereto.

Edenburgh, the 3*d Day of* November, 1681.

The Privy-Councils Explanation of the Teſt.

FOraſmuch as ſome have entertained Jealouſies and Prejudices againſt the Oath and Teſt appointed to be taken by all Perſons in publick Truſt, Civil, Eccleſiaſtical, or Military, in this Kingdom, by the Sixth Act of His Majeſty's Third Parliament; as if thereby they were to ſwear to every Propoſition, or Clauſe of the Confeſſion of Faith therein mentioned; or that invaſion were made by it upon the intrinſick ſpiritual Power of the Church, or Power of the Keys, or as if the preſent Epiſcopal Government of this National Church, by Law eſtabliſhed, were thereby expoſed to the hazard of alteration or ſubverſion: All which are far from the Intention or Deſign of the Parliament's impoſing this Oath, and from the genuine ſenſe and meaning thereof: Therefore His Royal Highneſs, His Majeſty's High Commiſſioner, and Lords of the Privy-Council, do allow, authorize, and impower the Archbiſhops and Biſhops to adminiſter this Oath and Teſt to the Miniſters, in their reſpective Dioceſſes, in this expreſs ſenſe: (1). That tho' the Confeſſion of Faith, ratified in Parliament 1567, was was framed in the Infancy of Reformation, and deſerves its due Praiſe, yet by the Teſt we do not ſwear to every Propoſition, or Clauſe therein contained, but only to the true Proteſtant Religion, founded on the Word of God, contained in that Confeſſion as it is oppoſed to Popery and Fanaticiſm. (2.) That by the Teſt, or any Clauſe therein contained, no Invaſion or Encroachment is made or intended upon the intrinſick ſpirisual Power of the Church, or Power of the Keys as it was exerciſed by the Apoſtles, and the moſt pure and primitive Church in the firſt three Centuries after Chriſt, and which is ſtill reſerved intirely to the Church. (3.) That the Oath and Teſt is without any Prejudice to the Epiſcopal Government of this National Church, which is declared by the firſt Act of the ſecond Seſſion of His Majeſty's firſt Parliament, to be moſt agreeable to the Word of God, and moſt ſuitable to Monarchy, and which upon all occaſions His Majeſty hath declared he will inviolably and unalterably preſerve. And appoint the Archbiſhops and Biſhops to require the Miniſters in their reſpective Dioceſſes, with their firſt Conveniency, to obey the Law in ſwearing, and ſubſcribing the foreſaid Oath and Teſt with certification, that the Refuſers ſhall be eſteemed Perſons diſaffected to the Proteſtant Religion, and to his Majeſty's Government; and that the Puniſhment appointed by the foreſaid ſixth Act of His Majeſty's third Parliament ſhall be impartially, and without delay inflicted upon them. By me.

This Day the Earl of Argyle being about to take the Teſt, as a Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, and having upon Command produced a Paper bearing the Senſe in which he took the Teſt, the preceeding Day, and in which he would take the ſame, as a Commiſſioner of the Treaſury; upon Conſideration thereof, it was reſolved, that he cannot ſit in Council, not having taken the Teſt, in the ſenſe and meaning of the Act of Parliament, and therefore was removed.

The Earl of Argyle's Explication of the Teſt when he took it.

I Have conſidered the Teſt, and I am very deſirous to give Obedience as far as I can. I'm confident the Parliament never intended to impoſe contradictory Oaths: therefore I think no Man can explain it but for himſelf. Accordingly I take it, as far as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion. And I do declare, that I mean not to bind up my ſelf in my Station, and in a lawful Way, to wiſh and endeavour any Alteration I think to the Advantage of Church or State, nor repugnant to the Proteſtant Religion and my Loyalty. And this I underſtand as a Part of my Oath.

But the Earl finding, as hath been narrated, this his Explication, tho' accepted, and approven by His Highneſs and Council, the Day before, to be this Day carped and offended at, and Advantages thereupon ſought and deſigned againſt him, did immediately draw up the following Explanation of his Explication, and for his own Vindication did firſt communicate it to ſome Privatlie, and thereafter intended to have offered it at his Tryal for clearing of his Defences.

The Explanation of his Explication

I Have delayed hitherto to take the Oath appointed by the Parliament to be taken, betwixt and the firſt of Januar next: but now being required, near two Months ſooner, to take it, this Day peremptourly, or to refuſe. I have conſidered the Teſt, and have ſeen ſeveral Objections moved againſt it, eſpecially by many of the Orthodox Clergy, notwithſtanding whereof, I have endeavoured to ſatisfie my ſelf with a juſt Explanation, which I here offer, that I may both ſatisfie my Conſcience, and obey Your Highneſs, and Your Lordſhip's Commands in taking the Teſt, tho' the Act of Parliament do not ſimply command the thing, but only under a Certification, which I could eaſily ſubmit to, if it were with Your Highneſs Favour, and might be without Offence, but I love not to be ſingular, and I am very deſirous to give Obedience in this and every thing as far as I can, and that which clears me is, that I am confident whatever any Man may think, or ſay, to the Prejudice of this Oath; the Parliament never intended to impoſe contradictory Oaths; and becauſe their ſenſe, (they being the Framers and Impoſers) is the true ſenſe, and that this Teſt injoined is of no private Interpretation, nor are the King's Statutes to be interpreted but as they bear, and to the Intent they are made, therefore I think no Man, that is, no private Perſon, can explain it for another, to amuſe or trouble him with (it may be) miſtaken Gloſſes. But every Man, as he is to take it, ſo is to explain it for himſelf and to endeavour to underſtand it, (notwithſtanding all theſe Exceptions) in the Parliaments, which is its true, and genuine ſenſe. I take it therefore notwithſtanding any Scruple made by any, as far as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion, which is wholly in the Parliament's ſenſe, and their true meaning; which [being preſent] I am ſure, was owned by all to be the ſecuring of the Proteſtant Religion, founded on the Word of God, and contained in the Confeſſion of Faith recorded J. 6 p. 1. c. 4. And not out of Scruple as if any thing in the Teſt did import the contrary, but to clear my ſelf from all Cavils; as if thereby I were bouud up further then the true meaning of the Oath. I do declare that by that Part of the Teſt, that there lies no Obligation on me, &c. I mean not to bind up my ſelf, in my Station, and in a lawful Way, ſtill diſclaiming all unlawful Endeavours, to wiſh, and endeavour any alteration I think, according to my Conſcience, to the Advantage of Church, or State, not repugnant to the Proteſtant Religion, and my Loyalty and by my Loyalty, I underſtand no other thing then the Words plainly bear, to wit the Duty and Allegiance of all Loyal Subjects and this Explanation I underſtand as a Part not of the Teſt, or Act of Parliament, but as a qualifying Part of my Oath that I am to ſwear, and with it I am willing to take the Teſt, if Your Royal Highneſs, and Your Lordſhips allow me, or otherwiſe in ſubmiſſion to Your Highneſs, and the Councils Pleaſure, I am content to be held as a Refuſer at preſent.

The

The Councils Letter to His Majeſty, concerning their having committed the Earl of Argyle.

May it pleaſe your ſacred Majeſty,

THE laſt Parliament having made ſo many and ſo advantagious Acts, for ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, the Imperial Crown of this Kingdom, and your Majeſty's ſacred Perſon (whom God Almighty long preſerve) and having, for the laſt, and as the beſt Way for ſecuring all theſe, appointed a Teſt to be taken by all who ſhould be entruſted with the Government; which bears expreſly, that the ſame ſhould be taken in the plain and genuine ſenſe and meaning of the Words; We were very careful, not to ſuffer any to take the ſaid Oath or Teſt, with their own Gloſſes or Explications: but the Earl of Argyle having after ſome delays, come to Council, to take the ſaid Oath, as a Privy-Councellor, ſpoke ſome things which were not then heard, nor adverted to, and when his Lordſhip at his next offering to take it in Council, as one of the Commiſſioners of your Majeſty's Treaſury, was commanded to take it ſimply, he refuſed to do ſo, but gave in a Paper, ſhewing the only ſenſe in which he would take it, which Paper we all conſidered, as that which had in it groſs and ſcandalous Reflections upon that excellent Act of Parliament, making it to contain things contradictory and inconſiſtent, and thereby depraving your Majeſty's Laws, miſrepreſenting your Parliament, and teaching your Subjects to evacuate and diſappoint all Laws, and Securities that can be enacted for the preſervation of the Government; ſuitable to which his Lordſhip declares in that Paper, That he means not to bind up himſelf from making any alterations he ſhall think fit for the advantage of Church or State; and which Paper he deſires may be looked upon as a part of his Oath, as if he were the Legiſlator, and able to add a part to the Act of Parliament. Upon ſerious peruſal of which Paper we found our ſelves obliged to ſend the ſaid Earl to the Caſtle of Edenburgh, and to tranſmit the Paper to your Majeſty, being expreſly obliged to both theſe by your Majeſties expreſs Laws. And we have commanded your Majeſty's Advocate to raiſe a purſuit againſt the ſaid Earl, for being Author, and having given in the ſaid Paper: And for the further proſecution of all relating to this Affair, we expect your Majeſty's Commands, which ſhall be moſt humbly and faithfully obeyed by

The King's Anſwer to the Council's Letter.

C. R.

MOſt dear, &c. having in one of your Letters directed unto us, of the 8th Inſtant, received a Particular Account of the Earl of Argyle's refuſing to take the Teſt ſimply, and of your Proceedings againſt him, upon the Occaſion of his giving in a Paper, ſhewing the only ſenſe in which he will take it, which had in it groſs and ſcandalous Reflections upon that excellent late Act of our Parliament there, by which the ſaid Teſt was enjoyned to be taken: we have now thought fit to let you know, that as we do hereby approve theſe your Proceedings, particularly your ſending the ſaid Earl to our Caſtle of Edenburgh; and your commanding our Advocate to raiſe a Purſuit againſt him, for being Author of, and having given in the ſaid Paper; ſo we do alſo authorize you to do all things that may concern the further Proſecution of all relating to this Affair. Nevertheleſs, it is our expreſs Will and Pleaſure, that before any Sentence ſhall be pronounced againſt him, at the Concluſion of the Proceſs, you ſend us a particular Account of what he ſhall be found guilty of, to the end that, after our being fully informed thereof, we may ſignifie our further Pleaſure in this Matter. For doing whereof, &c.

But as notwithſtanding the Councils demanding by their Letter His Majeſty's Allowance for proſecuting the Earl, they before any Return cauſed His Majeſty's Advocate exhibit an Indictment againſt him, upon the Points of ſlandering and depraving, as hath been already remarked, ſo after having received his Majeſties Anſwer, the deſign grows, and they thought fit to order a new Indictment containing beſide the former Points, the Crimes of Treaſon and Perjury, which accordingly was exhibit, and is here ſubjoyned, the difference betwixt the two Indictments being only in the Particulars above-noted.

The Copy of the Indictment againſt the Earl of Argyle.

Archibald Earl of Argyle,

YOU are indicted and accuſed, that albeit by the common Law of all well-govern'd Nations, and by the municipal Law and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom; and particularly, by the 21ſt, and by the 43d Act, Par. 2 James 1. and by the 83d Act, Par. 6. James 5. and the 134th Act, Par. 8. James 6. and the 205th Act, Par. 14. James 6. All Leaſing-makers, and tellers of them, are puniſhable with tinſel of Life and Goods; like as by the 107th Act, Par. 7. James 1. it is ſtatuted, that no Man interpret the King's Statutes otherwiſe than the Statute bears, and to the Intent and Effect that they were made for, and as the Makers of them underſtood; and whoſo does in the contrary to be puniſhed at the King's Will: And by the 10th Act, Par. 10. James 6. it is ſtatuted that None of his Majeſty's Subjects preſume or take upon him publickly to declare, or privately to ſpeak or write any Purpoſe of Reproach or Slander of His Majeſty's Per-ſon, Eſtate or Government, or to deprave his Laws, or Acts of Parliament, or miſtconſtrue his Proceedings, whereby any miſtaking may be moved betwixt his Highneſs, his Nobility, and loving Subjects, in time coming, under Pain of Death; certifying them that does in the contrary, they ſhall be reputed as ſeditious and wicked Inſtruments, Enemies to his Highneſs, and to the Common-wealth of this Realm, and the ſaid Pain of Death ſhall be executed againſt them with all Rigour, to the Example of others: and by the ſecond Act, Seſ. 2. Par. 1 Char. 2. it is ſtatuted, that whoſoever ſhall by writing, libelling, remonſtrating, expreſs, publiſh, or declare any Words or Sentences, to ſtir up the People to the diſlike of His Majeſty's Prerogative and Supremacy, in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtick, or of the Government of the Church by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, as it is now ſettled by Law, is under the Pain of being declared incapable to exerciſe any Office Civil, Eccleſiaſtick, or Military, within this Kingdom, in any Time coming. Like as by the fundamental Laws of this Nation, by the 130th Act, Par. 8. James 6. it is declared, that none of His Majeſty's Subjects preſume, to impugn the the Dignity or Authority of the Three Eſtates, or to procure Innovation or Diminution of their Power and Authority, under the Pain of Treaſon. And that it is much more Treaſon in any of His Majeſty's Subjects, to preſume to alter Laws already made, or to make new Laws, or to add any Part to any Law by their own Authority, that being to aſſume the legiſlative Power to themſelves, with His Majeſty's higheſt, and moſt incommunicable Prerogative. Yet true it is, that albeit His Sacred Majeſty did not only beſtow on you the ſaid Archibald Earl of Argyle thoſe vaſt Lands, Juriſdictions and Superiorities juſtly forfaulted to His Majeſty by the Crimes of your deceaſed Father; preferring your Family to thoſe who had ſerved His Majeſty againſt it, in the late Rebellion, but alſo pardoned and remitted to you the Crimes of leaſing making and miſconſtruing His Majeſty's and his Parliaments Proceedings againſt the very Laws above-written, whereof you were found guilty, and condemned to die therefore, by the High Court of Parliament, the 25. of Auguſt, 1662. And raiſed you to the Title and Dignity of an Earl, and being a Member of all His Majeſty's Judicatures. Notwithſtanding of all theſe, and many other Favours, you the ſaid Archibald Earl of Argyle, being put by the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council to take the Teſt, appointed by the Act of the laſt Parliament to be taken by all Perſons in publick Truſt, you, inſtead of taking the ſaid Teſt, and ſwearing the ſame in the plain genuine ſenſe and meaning of the Words, without any Equivocation, mental Reſervation, or Evaſion whatſoever, you did declare againſt, and deſame the ſaid Act; and having, to the end you might corrupt others by your pernicious Senſe, drawn the ſame in a Libel, of which Libel you diſperſed and gave abroad Copies, whereby ill Impreſſions were given of the King and Parliaments Proceedings at a time eſpecially when His Majeſty's Subjects were expecting what Submiſſion ſhould be given to the ſaid Teſt; and being deſired the next Day to take the ſame, as one of the Commiſſioners of His Majeſty's Treaſury, you did give in to the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, and owned twice, in plain Judgment before them, the ſaid defamatory Libel againſt the ſaid Teſt and Act of Parliament; declaring, that you had conſidered the ſaid Teſt, and was deſirous to give Obedience as far as you could: whereby you clearly inſinuated, that you was not able to give full Obedience: in the ſecond Article of which Libel you declare, that you were confident the Parliament never intended to impoſe contradictory Oaths; thereby to abuſe the People with a belief, that the Parliament had been ſo impious as really and actually to have impoſed contradictory Oaths; and ſo ridiculous, as to have made an Act of Parliament (which ſhould be moſt deliberate of all humane Actions) quite contrary to their own Intentions: after which you ſubſumed, contrary to the Nature of all Oaths, and to the Acts of Parliament above-cited that every Man muſt explain it for himſelf, and take it in his own ſenſe; by which not only that excellent Law, and the Oath therein ſpecified, which is intended to be a Fence to the Government both of Church and State, but all other Oaths and Laws ſhall be rendred altogether uſeleſs to the Government. If every Man take the Oaths impoſed by Law in his own Senſe, then the Oath impoſed is to no Purpoſe: for the Legiſlator cannot be ſure that the Oath impoſed by him will bind the Takers according to the Deſign and Intent for which he appointed it: and the Legiſlative Power is taken from the Impoſers, and ſettled in the Taker of the Oath: and ſo he is allowed to be the Legiſlator, which is not only an open and violent depraving of His Majeſty's Laws and Acts of Parliament, but is likewiſe a ſettling of the Legiſlative Power on private Subjects, who are to take ſuch Oaths. In the third Article of that Paper you declare, that you take the Teſt in ſo far only as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion; by which you maliciouſly intimate to the People, that the ſaid Oath is inconſiſtent with it ſelf and with the Proteſtant Religion, which is not only a down-right depraving of the ſaid Act of Parliament, but is likewiſe a miſconſtruing of His Majeſty's and the Parliaments Proceedings, and miſrepreſenting them to the People in the higheſt Degree, and in the tendereſt Points they can be concerned; and implying, that the King and the Parliament have done things inconſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, for ſecuring of which that Teſt was particuiarly intended. In the Fourth Article you do expreſly declare, that you mean not by taking the ſaid Teſt, to bind up your ſelf from wiſhing and endeavouring any Alteration in a lawful Way that you ſhall think fit, for advancing of Church and State; whereby alſo it was deſigned by the ſaid Act of Parliament and Oath, that no Man ſhould make any Alteration in the Government of Church and State, as it is now eſtabliſhed, and that it is the Duty of all good Subjects, in humble and quiet Manner, to obey the preſent Government: yet you not only declare your ſelf, but by your Example you invite others to think themſelves looſed from that Obligation; and that it is free for them to make any Alteration in either, as they ſhall think fit, concluding your whole Paper with theſe Words (and this I underſtand as a Part of my Oath); which is a treaſonable Invaſion upon the Royal Legſlative Power as if it were lawful for you to make to your ſelf an Act of Parliament; ſince he who can make any Part of an Act may make the whole, the Power and Authority rity in both being the ſame. Of the which Crimes above-mentioned you the ſaid Archibald Earl of Argyle are Actor, Art and Part; which being found by the Aſſize, you ought to be puniſhed with the Pains of Death, Forfaulture and Eſcheat of Lands and Goods, to the Terror of others to commit the like hereafter.

An Abſtract of the ſeveral Acts of Parliament upon which the Indictment againſt the Earl of Argyle was grounded.

Concerning Raiſers of Rumors betwixt the King and his People, Chap. 20. 1 Statutes of K. Robert I.

IT is defended and forbidden, That no Man be a Conſpirator or Inventer of Narrations or Rumors, by the which occaſion of Diſcord may ariſe betwixt the King and his People. And if any ſuch Man ſhall be found, and attainted thereof, incontinent he ſhall be taken and put in Priſon, and there ſhall be ſurely keeped up, ay, and while the King declare his Will anent him.

Act 43. of Par. 2. King James I. March 11. 1424. Leaſing-makers forfault Life and Goods.

Item, It is ordained by the King and whole Parliament, That all Leaſing-makers, and tellers of them, which may engender Diſcord betwixt the King and his People, where-ever they may be gotten, ſhall be challenged by them that Power has, and tyne Life and Goods to the King.

Act 83. Par. 6. James V. Dec. 10. 1540. Of Leaſing-makers.

Item, Touching the Article of Leaſing-makers to the King's Grace, of his Barons, Great-men and Leidges, and for puniſhment to be put to them therefore, the King's Grace, with advice of his Three Eſtates, ratifies and approves the Acts and Statutes made thereupon before, and ordains the ſame to be put in execution in all Points; and alſo ſtatutes and ordains, That if any manner of Perſon makes any evil Information of His Highneſs to his Barons and Leidges, that they ſhall be puniſhed in ſuch manner, and by the ſame Puniſhment as they that make Leaſings to his Grace of his Lords, Barons, and Leidges.

Act 134. Par. 8. James VI. May 22. 1584. Anent Slanderers of the King, his Progenitors, Eſtate and Realm.

FOraſmuch as it is underſtood to our Sovereign Lord, and his Three Eſtates aſſembled in this preſent Parliament, what great harm and inconveniency has fallen in this Realm, chiefly ſince the beginning of the Civil Troubles occurred in the time of His Highneſs minority, through the wicked and licentious, publick and private Speeches, and untrue Calumnies of divers of his Subjects, to the diſdain, contempt, and reproach of His Majeſty, his Council and Proceedings, and to the diſhonour and prejudice of His Highneſs, his Parents, Progenitors and Eſtate, ſtirring up His Highneſs's Subjects thereby to miſliking, ſedition, unquietneſs, and to caſt off their due Obedience to His Majeſty, to their evident peril, tinſil and deſtruction; His Highneſs continuing always in love and clemency toward all his good Subjects, and moſt willing to ſeek the ſafety and preſervation of them all, which wilfully, needleſly, and upon plain Malice, after His Highneſs's Mercy and Pardon oft-times afore granted, has procured themſelves, by their treaſonable Deeds, to be cut off, as corrupt Members of this Commonwealth. Therefore it is ſtatute and ordained by our Sovereign Lord, and his Three Eſtates in this preſent Parliament, that none of his Subjects, of whatſoever Function, Degree, or Quality, in time coming, ſhall preſume, or take upon hand, privately or publickly, in Sermons, Declamations, and familiar Conferences, to utter any falſe, ſlanderous, or untrue Speeches, to the diſdain, reproach and contempt of His Majeſty, his Council and Proceedings, or to the diſhonour, hurt, or prejudice of His Highneſs, his Parents and Progenitors, or to meddle in the Affairs of His Highneſs, and his Eſtate preſent, by-gone, and in time coming, under the Pains contained in the Acts of Parliament anent makers and tellers of Leaſings, certifying them that ſhall be tryed, contraveners thereof, or that hear ſuch ſlanderous Speeches, and reports not the ſame with diligence, the ſaid Pain ſhall be executed againſt them with all rigour, in example of others.

Act 205. Par. 14. King James VI. June 8. 1594. anent Leaſing-makers, and Authors of Slanders.

OUr Sovereign Lord, with advice of his Eſtates in this preſent Parliament, ratifies, approves, and for His Highneſs and Succeſſors, perpetually confirms the Act made by his Noble Progenitors, King James the Firſt, of worthy Memory, againſt Leaſing-makers, the Act made by King James the Second, entituled, Againſt Leaſing-makers, and tellers of them; the Act made by King James the Fifth, entituled, Of Leaſing-makers; and the Act made by His Highneſs's ſelf, with advice of his Eſtates in Parliament, upon the 22 Day of May, 1584. entituled, For the puniſhment of the Authors of Slanders and untrue Calumnies againſt the King's Majeſty, his Council and Proceedings, to the diſhonour and prejudice of His Highneſs, his Parents, Progenitors, Crown and Eſtate? as alſo the Act made in His Highneſs's Parliament holden at Linlithgow upon the 10 of December, 1585. entituled, Againſt the Authors of ſlanderous Speeches or Writs; and ſtatutes and ordains all the ſaid Acts to be publiſhed of new, and to be put in execution in time coming, with this addition, That whoever hears the ſaid Leaſings, Calumnies, or ſlanderous Speeches or Writs to be made, and apprehends not the Authors thereof, if it lies in his Power, and reveals not the ſame to His Highneſs, or one of his Privy-Council, or to the Sheriff, Steward, or Bailiff of the Shire, Stewards in Regality or Royalty, or to the Provoſt, or any of the Bailiffs within Burgh, by whom the ſame may come to the knowledge of His Highneſs, or his ſaid Privy-Council, where through the ſaid Leaſing-makers, and Authors of ſlanderous Speeches may be called, tried, and puniſhed according to the ſaid Acts: The hearer, and not apprehender, [if it lie in his Power] and concealer, and not revealer of the ſaid Leaſing-makers, and Authors of the ſaid ſlanderous Speeches or Writs, ſhall incur the like Pain and Puniſhment as the Principal Offender.

Act 107. Par. 7. King James I. March 1. 1427.
That none interpret the King's Statutes wrongouſly.

ITem, The King, by deliverance of Council, by manner of Statute, forbids, That no Man interpret his Statutes otherwiſe than the Statutes bear, and to the intent and effect that they were made for, and as the Maker of them underſtood: and whoſo does in the contrary, ſhall be puniſhed at the King's Will.

Act 10. Par. 10. King James VI. Dec. 10. 1585.
Authors of ſlanderous Speeches or Writs ſhould be puniſhed to the Death.

IT is ſtatuted and ordained by our Sovereign Lord and Three Eſtates, That all His Highneſs's Subjects content themſelves in quietneſs and dutiful obedience to His Highneſs and his Authority; and that none of them preſume, or take upon hand publickly to declaim, or privately to ſpeak or write any purpoſe of Reproach or Slander of His Majeſty's Perſon, Eſtate, or Government; or to deprave his Laws and Acts of Parliament, or miſconſtrue his Proceedings, whereby any miſliking may be moved betwixt His Highneſs and his Nobility, and loving Subjects in time coming, under the pain of Death; certifying them that do in the contrary, they ſhall be reputed as ſeditious and wicked Inſtruments, enemies to His Highneſs and the Commonwealth of this Realm: and the ſaid pain of Death ſhall be executed upon them with all rigour, in example of others.

Act for preſervation of His Majeſty's Perſon, Authority and Government, May 1662.

——— And further it is by His Majeſty and Eſtates of Parliament declared, ſtatuted and enacted, That if any Perſon or Perſons ſhall, by Writing, Printing, Praying, Preaching, Libelling, Remonſtrating, or by any malicious or adviſed Speaking, expreſs, publiſh, or declare any Words or Sentences, to ſtir up the People to the hatred or diſlike of His Majeſty's Royal Prerogative and Supremacy, in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, or of the Government of the Church by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, as it is now ſettled by Law ——— That every ſuch Perſon or Perſons ſo offending, and being Legally Convicted thereof, are hereby declared incapable to enjoy or exerciſe any Place or Employment, Civil, Eccleſiaſtick, or Military, within this Church and Kingdom, and ſhall be liable to ſuch further Pains as are due by the Law in ſuch Caſes.

Act 130. Par. 8. James VI. May 22. 1584. Anent the Authority of the Three Eſtates of Parliament.

THe King's Majeſty conſidering the Honour and the Authority of his Supreme Court of Parliament, continued paſt all Memory of Man, unto their Days, as conſtitute upon the free Votes of the Three Eſtates of this ancient Kingdom, by whom the ſame, under God, has ever been upholden, rebellious and traiterous Subjects puniſhed, the good and faithful preſerved and maintained, and the Laws and Acts of Parliament (by which all Men are governed) made and eſtabliſhed. And finding the Power, Dignity, and Authority of the ſaid Court of Parliament, of late Years, called in ſome doubt, at leaſt, ſome curiouſly travelling to have introduced ſome Innovation thereanent; His Majeſty's firm Will and Mind always being, as it is yet, That the Honour, Authority, and Dignity of his ſaid Three Eſtates ſhall ſtand and continue in their own Integrity, according to the ancient and laudable Cuſtom by-gone, without any alteration or diminution: Therefore it is ſtatuted and ordained by our ſaid Soveraign Lord, and his ſaid Three Eſtates in this preſent Parliament, That none of his Leidges or Subjects preſume, or take upon hand to impugn the Dignity and Authority of the ſaid Three Eſtates, or to ſeek or procure the innovation or diminution of the Power and Authority of the ſame Three Eſtates, or any of them, in time coming, under the pain of Treaſon.

The Earl of Argyle's ſecond Petition for Council to be allowed him.

To His Royal Highneſs, His Majeſty's High Commiſſioner, and to the Right Honourable the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council.

The Humble Petition of Archibald Earl of Argyle,

Sheweth,

THat your Petitioner having given in a former Petition, humbly repreſenting, that he being criminally indicted before the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſtitiary, at the Inſtance of His Majeſty's Advocate, for Crimes of an high Nature: and therefore deſiring that your Royal Highneſs, and Lordſhips, would give ſpecial Warrant to Sir George Lockhart, to conſult and plead for him: Whereupon your Royal Highneſs and Lordſhips, did allow the Petitioner to make uſe of ſuch Advocates as he ſhould think fit to call. Accordingly your Petitioner having deſired Sir George Lockhart to conſult and plead for him, he hath as yet refuſed your Petitioner. And by the 11. Parliament of King James the VI. Cap. 38. As it is the undeniable Priviledge of all Subjects, accuſed for any Crimes, to have Liberty to provide themſelves of Advocates, to defend their Lives, Honour, and Lands, againſt whatſoever Accuſation; ſo the ſame Priviledge is not only by Parliament 11. King James the VI. Cap. 90. farther aſſerted and confirmed, but alſo it is declared, that in caſe the Advocates refuſe, the Judges are to compel them, leſt the Party accuſed ſhould be prejudged: and this being an Affair of great Importance to your Petitioner, and Sir George Lockhart having been not only ſtill his ordinary Advocate, but alſo by his conſtant converſe with him is beſt known to your Petitioner's Principles; and of whoſe eminent Abilities and Fidelity your Petitioner (as many others have) hath had ſpecial Proof all along in his Concerns, and hath ſuch ſingular Confidence in him that he is moſt neceſſary to your Petitioner at this Occaſion.

May it therefore pleaſe Your Royal Highneſs and Lordſhips to interpoſe your Authority, by giving a ſpecial Order and Warrant to the ſaid Sir George Lockhart, to conſult and plead for him in the ſaid criminal Proceſs, conform to the Tenor of the ſaid Acts of Parliament, and conſtant known Practice in the like Caſes, which was never refuſed to any Subject of the meaneſt Quality, even to the greateſt Criminals. And Your Royal Highneſs's, and Lordſhip's Anſwer is humbly craved.

The Earl of Argyle's Letter of Attorney, conſtituting Alexander Dunbar his Procurator, for requiring Sir George Lockhart to plead for him.

WE Archibald Earl of Argyle do hereby ſubſtitute, conſtitute and ordain Alexander Dunbar, our Servitor, to be our Procurator, to paſs and require Sir George Lockhart Advocate to conſult, and plead for us in the Criminal Proceſs intended againſt us, at the Inſtance of His Majeſty's Advocate; and to compear with us, before the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſtitiary, upon the 12th of December next, conform to an Act of Council, dated the 22d of November inſtant, allowing any Lawyers that we ſhould employ, to conſult and plead for us in the ſaid Proceſs, and to another Act of Council of the 24th of Novemb. inſtant, relative to the former, and conform to the Acts of Parliament. In Witueſs whereof, we have ſubſcribed theſe Preſents, at Edenburgh-Caſtle, Nov. 26. 1681. before theſe Witneſſes, Duncan Campbell Servitor to James Glen Stationer in Edenburgh, and John Thom, Merchant in the ſaid Burgh.

An Inſtrument whereby the Earl of Argyle required Sir George Lockhart to appear and plead for him.

Apud Edenburgum vigeſimo ſexto die Menſis Novembris, Anno Domini milleſimo ſexcenteſimo octuageſimo primo, & Anno Regni Car. 2. Regis trigeſimo tertio.

THe which Day, in Preſence of me notary Publick, and Witneſſes under-ſubſcribed, compeared perſonally Alexander Dunbar, Servitor to a Noble Earl, Archibald Earl of Argyle, as Procurator, and in Name of the ſaid Earl, conform to a Procuration ſubſcribed by the ſaid Earl at the Caſtle of Edenburgh, upon the twenty firſt Day of November, 1681. making and conſtituting the ſaid Alexander Dunbar his Procurator, to the Effect under-written; and paſt to the perſonal Preſence of Sir George Lockhart Advocate, in his own Lodging in Edenburgh, having and holding in his Hands an Act of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, of the Date of the 22d of November, 1681. inſtant, proceeding upon a Petition given in by the ſaid Earl of Argyle, to the ſaid Lords, ſhewing, that he being criminally indicted before the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſtitiary, at the Inſtance of His Majeſty's Advocate, for Crimes of an high Nature, and whereas in that Caſe no Advocates would readily plead for the ſaid Earl, unleſs they had his Royal Highneſs's and their Lordſhips ſpecial Licence and Warrant to that Effect, which is uſual in the like Caſes: and by the ſaid Petition humbly ſupplicated, that His Highneſs, and the Council would give ſpecial Order and Command to the ſaid Sir George Lockhart, the ſaid Earl's ordinary Advocate, to conſult and plead for him in the foreſaid Criminal Proceſs, without incurring any Hazard upon that Account. His Royal Highneſs, and Lords of the ſaid Privy-Council, did refuſe the Deſire of the ſaid Petition but allowed any Lawyers the Petitioner ſhould employ, to conſult and plead for him in the Proceſs of Treaſon, and other Crimes to be purſued againſt him, at the Inſtance of His Majeſty's Advocate. And alſo the ſaid Alexander Dunbar having and holding in his Hands another Act of the ſaid Lords of Privy-Council, of the 24th of the ſaid Month, relative to, and narrating the foreſaid firſt Act, and proceeding upon another Supplication given in by the ſaid Earl, to the ſaid Lords, craving, that his Royal Highneſs, and the ſaid Lords, would interpoſe their Authority, by giving a poſitive and ſpecial Order and Warrant to the ſaid Sir George Lockhart, to conſult and plead with him in the foreſaid criminal Proceſs, conform to the tenor of the Acts of Parliament mentioned and particularized in the ſaid Petition, and frequent and known Practice in the like Caſes, which was never refuſed to any Subjects of the meaneſt Quality. His Royal Highneſs, and Lords of Privy-Council, having conſidered the foreſaid Petition, did by the ſaid Act adhere to their former Order, allowing Advocates to appear for the ſaid Earl in the Proceſs foreſaid, as the ſaid Acts bear; and produced the ſaid Acts Procuratory foreſaid to the ſaid Sir George Lockhart, who took the ſame in his Hands, and read them over ſucceſſive; and after reading thereof, the ſaid Alexander Dunbar Procurator, and in name and behalf foreſaid, ſolemnly required the ſaid Sir George Lockhart, as the ſaid Noble Earl's ordinary Advocate, and as a Lawyer and Advocate, upon the ſaid Earl's reaſonable Expence, to conſult and adviſe the ſaid Earl's ſaid Proceſs at any Time and Place the ſaid Sir George ſhould appoint to meet thereupon, conform to the foreſaid two Acts of Council, and Acts of Parliament therein mentioned, appointing Advocates to conſult in ſuch Matters: which the ſaid Sir George Lockhart altogether refuſed: whereupon the ſaid Alexander Dunbar, as Procurator, and in Name foreſaid, asked and took the Inſtruments, one or more, in the Hands of me Notary Publick under-ſubſcribed. And theſe things were done within the ſaid Sir George Lockhart's Lodging, on the South ſide of the Street of Edenburgh, in the Lane-Mercat, within the Dining Room of the ſaid Lodging, betwixt four and five Hours in the Afternoon, Day, Month, Year, Place, and of His Majeſty's Reign, reſpective foreſaid, before Robert Dickſone, and John Leſly, Servitors to John Campbell, Writer to His Majeſty's Signet, and Dowgall Mac. Aleſter, Meſſenger in Edenburgh, with divers others, called and required to the Premiſſes.

to

John Leſly,

Wedneſday the 12. of December, the Day of compearance aſſigned to the Earl, being now come, he was brought by a Guard of Soldiers from the Caſtle to the Place appointed for the Trial, and the Juſtice Court being met and fenced, the Earl, now Marquiſs of Queensbury, then Juſtice General, the Lords Nairn, Collingtoun, Forret, Newtoun and Hirkhouſe, the Lords of Juſtitiary ſitting in Judgment, and the other formalities alſo performed, the Indictment above ſet down was read, and the Earl ſpoke as follows.

The Earl of Argyle's Speech to the Lord Juſtice General, and the Lords of the Juſtitiary, after he had been arraigned, and his Indictment read.

My Lord Juſtice General, &c.

I Look upon it as the undeniable Priviledge of the meaneſt Subject to explain his own Words in the moſt benigh Senſe: and even when Perſons are under an ill Character, the Miſconſtruction of Words in themſelves not ill, I can only reach a Preſumption or Aggravation but not any more.

But it is ſtrange to alledge, as well as, I hope, impoſſible, to make any that know me believe, that I could intend any thing but what was honeſt and honourable, ſuitable to the Principles of my Religion and Loyalty, tho' I did not explain my ſelf at all.

My Lord, I pray you be not offended that I take up a little of your time, to tell you, I have from my Youth made it my buſineſs to ſerve His Majeſty faithfully, and have conſtantly, to my Power, appeared in his Service; eſpecially in all times of Difficulty, and have never joyned, nor complyed with any Intereſt or Party, contrary to His Majeſty's Authority, and have all along ſerved him in his own way, without a Frown from His Majeſty theſe Thirty Years.

As ſoon as I paſſed the Schools and Colleges, I went to travel to France and Italy, and was abroad 1647, 1648, and till the end of 1649.

My firſt appearance in the World was to ſerve His Majeſty as Colonel of his Foot-Guards. And tho' at that time all the Commiſſions were given by the then Parliament, yet I would not ſerve without a Commiſſion from His Majeſty, which I have ſtill the Honour to have by me.

After the Misfortune of Worceſter, I continued in Arms for His Majeſty's Service, when Scotland was over-run with the Uſurpers, and was alone with ſome of my Friends in Arms in the Year 1652. and did then keep up ſome Appearance of Oppoſition to them: and General Major Dean coming to Argyleſhire, and planting ſeveral Gariſons he no ſooner went away but we fell upon the Gariſons he had left, and in one Day took two of them, and cut off a conſiderable Part of a third, and carried away in all about three hundred Priſoners: and in the end of that Year, I ſent Captain Shaw to His Majeſty, with my humble Opinion, how the War might be carried on; who returned to me with Inſtructions and Orders which I have yet lying by me.

After which, I joyned with thoſe His Majeſty did commiſſionate, and ſtood out till the laſt, that the Earl of Middleton, His Majeſty's Lieutenant General, gave me Orders to capitulate, which I did without any other Engagements to the Rebels but allowing Perſons to give bale for my living peaceable: and did at my capitulating relieve ſeveral Priſoners by exchange, whereof my Lord Granard, out of the Caſtle of Edenburgh, was one.

It is notarly known, that I was forefaulted by the Uſurpers, who were ſo jealous of me that, contrary to their Faith, within eight Months after my Capitulation, upon Pretence I keep'd Horſes

Horſes above the value, they ſeized on me, and keeped me in one Priſon after another, till His Majeſty's happy Reſtauration, and this only becauſe I would not engage not to ſerve His Majeſty, tho' there was no Oath required.

I do with all Gratitude acknowledge His Majeſty's Goodneſs, Bounty and Royal Favours to me, when I was purſued before the Parliament in the Year 1662. His Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed not to ſend me here in any opprobious Way, but upon a bare verbal Paroll. Upon which I came down poſt, and preſented my ſelf a Fortnight before the Day. Notwithſtanding whereof I was immediately clapt up in the Caſtle, but having ſatisfied His Majeſty, at that time, of my entire Loyalty, I did not offer to plead by Advocates. And His Majeſty was not only pleaſed to pardon my Life, and to reſtore me to a Title and Fortune, but to put me in truſt in his Service, in the moſt eminent Judicatories of this Kingdom, and to heap Favours upon me, far beyond what ever I did or can deſerve: tho' I hope His Majeſty hath always found me faithful and thankful, and ready to beſtow all I have, or can have, for his Service. And I hope never hath had nor ever ſhall have Ground to repent any Favour he hath done me. And if I were now really guilty of the Crimes libelled, I ſhould think my ſelf a great Villain.

The next Occaſion I had to ſhew my particular Zeal to His Majeſty's Service was in Anno 1666. when the Inſurrection was made that was repreſt at Pentland-Hills. At the very firſt, the Intercourſe betwixt this Place and me was ſtopt, ſo that I had neither Intelligence nor Orders from the Council, nor from the General; but upon a Letter from the now Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, telling me there was a Rebellion like to be in the three Kingdoms, and bidding me beware of Ireland and Kintyre, I brought together about two thouſand Men: I ſeized all the Gentlemen in Kintyre that had not taken the Declaration, tho' I found them peaceable. And I ſent a Gentleman to General Dalziel, to receive his Orders, who came to him juſt as they were going to the Action at Pentland, and was with him in it; and I kept my Men together till his Return. And when I met with conſiderable Trouble from my Neighbours, rebelliouſly in Arms, and had Commiſſions both on publick, and private Accounts, have I not carried dutifully to His Majeſty, and done what was commanded with a juſt Moderation, which I can prove under the Hands of my Enemies, and by many infallible Demonſtrations?

Pardon me a few Words: did I not in this preſent Parliament ſhew my readineſs to ſerve His Majeſty and the Royal Family, in aſſerting vigorouſly the lineal legal Succeſſion of the Crown, and had a Care to have it expreſt in the Commiſſions of the Shires and Burghs I had Intereſt in? Was I not for offering proper Supplies to His Majeſty and his Succeſſor? And did I not concur to bind the Landlords for their Tenants, altho' I was mainly concerned? And have I not always kept my Tenants in Obedience to His Majeſty?

I ſay all this, not to arrogate any thing for doing what was my Honour and Duty to his Majeſty; but if after all this, upon no other Ground but Words that were ſpoken in abſolute Innocence, and without the leaſt Deſign, except for clearing my own Conſcience, and that are not capable of the ill Senſe wreſted from them by the Libel, I ſhould be further troubled, what Aſſurance can any of the greateſt Quality, Truſt, or Innocence, have that they are ſecure? eſpecially conſidering, that ſo many Scruples have been ſtarted, as all know, not only by many of the Orthodox Clergy, but by whole Presbyteries, Synods, and ſome Biſhops, which were thought ſo conſiderable, that an eminent Biſhop took the Pains to write a Treatiſe, that was read over in Council, and allowed to be printed, and a Copy given to me, which contains all the Expreſſions I am charged for, and many more that may be ſtretched to a worſe Senſe.

Have I not ſhewed my Zeal to all the ends of the Teſt? How then can it be imagined that I have any ſiniſter Deſign in any thing that I have ſaid? If I had done any thing contrary to it all the Courſe of my Life, which I hope ſhall not be found, yet one Act might pretend to be excuſed by a Habit. But nothing being queſtioned but the Senſe of Words miſconſtrued to the greateſt Height, and ſtretched to imaginary Inſinuations, quite contrary to my Scope and Deſign, and ſo far contrary, not only to my Senſe, but my Principles, Intereſt, and Duty, that I hope my Lord Advocate will think he hath gone too far on in this Proceſs, and ſay plainly what he knows to be Truth by his Acquaintance with me, both in publick and private; viz. That I am neither Papiſt nor Fanatick, but truly loyal in my Principles and Practices.

The hearing of this Libel would trouble me beyond moſt of the Sufferings of my Life if my Innocence did not ſupport me, and the Hopes of being vindicated of this and other Calumnies before this publick and noble Auditory.

I leave my Defences to theſe Gentlemen that plead for me, they know my Innocence, and how groundleſs that Libel is.

I ſhall only ſay, as my Life hath moſt of it been ſpent in ſerving and ſuffering for His Majeſty, ſo whatever be the Event of this Proceſs, I reſolve, while I breathe, to be loyal and faithful to His Majeſty. And whether I live publickly or in Obſcurity, my Head, my Heart nor my Hand, ſhall never be wanting where I can be uſeful to His Majeſty's Service. And while I live, and when I die, I ſhall pray, that God Almighty would bleſs His Majeſty with a long, happy, and proſperous Reign; and that the lineal legal Succeſſors of the Crown may continue Monarchs of all His Majeſty's Dominions, and be Defenders of the true Primitive, Chriſtian, Apoſtolick, Catholick, Proteſtant Religion, while Sun and Moon endure.

God ſave the King.

The King's own Letter to this Nobleman when he was Lord Lorn.

Cologne, Dec. 20. 1654.

My Lord Lorn,

'I Am very glad to hear from Middleton, what 'affection and zeal you ſhow to my Service, 'how conſtantly you adhere to him in all his 'Diſtreſſes, and what good Service you have per-'formed upon the Rebels. I aſſure you, you 'ſhall find me very juſt, and kind to you in re-

'warding

'warding what you have done and ſuffered for me; and I hope you will have more Credit and Power with thoſe of your Kindred, and Dependants upon your Family, to engage them with you for me, than any body elſe can have to ſeduce them againſt me; and I ſhall look upon all thoſe who ſhall refuſe to follow you as unworthy of any Protection hereafter from me, which you will let them know. This honeſt Bearer, M—— will inform you of my Condition and Purpoſes, to whom you will give Credit; and he will tell you, that I am very much,

Your very affectionate Friend,

C. R.

General Middleton's Order to the Earl of Argyle, who was then Lord Lorn, for capitulating with the Engliſh, wherein he largely expreſſeth his Worth and Loyalty.

John Middleton, Lieutenant General, next and immediate under His Majeſty, and Commander in chief of all the Forces raiſed, and to be raiſed, within the King of Scotland.

SEeing the Lord Lorn hath given ſo ſingular Proofs of clear and perfect Loyalty to the King's Majeſty, and of pure and conſtant Affection to the good of His Majeſty's Affairs, as never hitherto to have any Ways complyed with the Enemy, and to have been principally Inſtrumental in the enlivening of this late War, and one of the chief and firſt movers in it; and hath readily, chearfully, and gallantly engaged, and reſolutely and conſtantly continued active in it, notwithſtanding the many powerful Diſſwaſions, Diſcouragements, and Oppoſitions he hath met withal from divers Hands, and hath in the carrying on of the Service ſhown ſuch ſignal Fidelity, Integrity, Generoſity, Prudence, Courage, and Conduct, and ſuch high Vertue, Induſtry, and Ability, as are ſuitable to the Dignity of his Noble Family, and the Truſt His Majeſty repoſed in him; and hath not only ſtood out againſt all Temptations and Enticements, but hath moſt nobly croſſed and repreſſed Deſigns and Attempts of deſerting the Service, and perſiſted loyally and firmly in it to the very laſt, thro' exceſſive Toil and many Difficulties, miſregarding all perſonal Inconveniences, and chuſing the Loſs of Friends, Fortune, and all private Concernments, and to endure the utmoſt Extremities rather than to ſwerve in the leaſt from his Duty, or taint his Reputation with the meaneſt Shadow of Diſloyalty and Diſhonour. I do therefore hereby teſtify and declare, that I am perfectly ſatisfied with his whole Deportments, in relation to the Enemy, and this late War; and do highly approve them, as being not only above all I can expreſs of their Worth, but almoſt beyond all Parallel. And I do withal hereby both allow, and moſt earneſtly deſire, and wiſh him, to loſe no Time in taking ſuch Courſe for his Safety and Preſervation by Treaty and Agreement, or Capitulation, as he ſhall judge moſt fit and expedient for the good of his Perſon, Family, and Eſtate, ſince inevitable and invincible Neceſſity hath forced us to lay aſide this War. And I can now no other Way expreſs my Reſpects to him, nor contribute my Endeavour to do him Honour and Service. In Teſtimony whereof I have ſigned and ſealed theſe Preſents at Dunveagave, the laſt Day of March, 1655.

John Middleton.

Another Letter from the Earl of Middleton, to the ſame Purpoſe.

Paris, April 17. 1655.

My Noble Lord,

I Am hopeful, that the Bearer of this Letter will be found one who has been a moſt faithful Servant to your Lordſhip, and my kind Friend, and a Sharer in my Troubles. Indeed I have been ſtrengthned by him to ſupport and overcome many Difficulties. He will acquaint you with what hath paſt, which truly was ſtrange to both of us, but your own Re-encounters will leſſen them. My Lord, I ſhall be faithful in giving you that Character which your Worth and Merit may juſtly challenge. I profeſs it is, next to the Ruine of the Service, one of my chiefeſt Regrets that I could not poſſibly wait upon you before my going from Scotland, that I might have ſettled a Way of Correſpondence with you, and that your Lordſhip might have underſtood me better than yet you do; I ſhould have been plain in every thing, and indeed have made your Lordſhip my Confeſſor: and I am hopeful the Bearer will ſay ſomewhat for me, and I doubt not but your Lordſhip will truſt him. If it ſhall pleaſe God to bring me ſafe from beyond Sea, your Lordſhip ſhall hear from me by a ſure Hand. Sir Ro. M. will tell you a Way of correſponding. So that I ſhall ſay no more at preſent, but that I am, without Poſſibility of change,

My Noble Lord,
Your Lordſhip's moſt Faithful, and moſt Humble Servant,

John Middleton.

A Letter from the Earl of Glencairn, teſtifying his eſteem for this Noble Perſon, and the ſenſe he had of his Loyalty to the King, when few had the Courage to own him.

My Lord,

LEſt it may be my misfortune, in all theſe great Revolutions, to be miſrepreſented to your Lordſhip, as a Perſon unworthy of your favourable Opinion (an Artifice very frequent in theſe Times) I did take occaſion to call for a Friend and Servant of yours, the Laird of Spanie, on whoſe Diſcretion I did adventure to lay forth my Heart's deſire, to obviate in the Bud any of theſe Miſunderſtandings. Your Lordſhip's true Worth and Zeal to your Country's Happineſs being ſo well known to me, and confirmed by our late Suffering-Acquaintance: And now finding how much it may conduce to theſe great Ends, we all wiſh that a perfect Unity may be amongſt all good and honeſt-hearted Scotchmen, tho' there be few more inſignificant than my ſelf: yet my Zeal for thoſe Ends obliges me to ſay, that if your Lordſhip's Health and Affairs could have permitted you to have been at Edinburgh in theſe late late Times, you would have ſeen a great Inclination and Deſire, amongſt all here, of a perfect Unity, and of a mutual reſpect to your Perſon, as of chief eminence and worth. And I here ſhall ſet it under my Hand, to witneſs againſt all my Informers, that none did with more Paſſion, nor ſhall with more continued Zeal, witneſs themſelves to be true Honourers of you, than he who deſires infinitely to be eſteemed,

My Lord,
Your moſt humble Servant,

GLENCAIRN.

What I cannot well write, I hope this diſcreet Gentleman will tell you, in my Name: And I ſhall only beg leave to ſay, that I am your moſt Noble Lady's Humble Servant.

After the reading of which Order and Letters, which yet the Court refuſed to record, the Earl's Advocate, or Council, Sir George Lockhart ſaid in his Defence as follows.

Sir George Lockhart's Argument and Plea for the Earl of Argyle.

SIR George Lockhart, for the Earl of Argyle, alledgeth, That the Libel is not Relevant, and whereupon he ought to be put to the knowledge of an Inqueſt. For,

It is alledged in the general, That all Criminal Libels, whereupon any Perſons Life, Eſtate and Reputation, can be drawn in queſtion, ſhould be founded upon clear, poſitive and expreſs Acts of Parliament, and the matter of Fact, which is libelled to be the Contravention of thoſe Laws, ſhould be plain, clear, and direct Contraventions of the ſame, and not argued by Way of Implications and Inferences. Whereas in this Caſe, neither the Acts of Parliament, founded upon, and libelled, can be in the leaſt the Foundation of this Libel: nor is the Explication which is pretended to be made by the Pannel, at the time of the taking of his Oath (if conſidered,) any Contravention of thoſe Laws; which being premiſed, and the Pannel denying the Libel, as to the whole Articles and Points therein contained, it is alledged in ſpecial:

That the Libel, in ſo far as it is founded upon the 21*ſt Chap. Stat.* 1. Robert 1. and upon 83*d Act, Par.* 6. James 5. the 43*d Act, Par.* 2. James 1. and upon the 83d Act, Par. 10. James 5. and upon 84th Act, Par. 8. James 6. and upon the 10th Act, Par 10. James 6. and upon the 2d Act, Par. 1. Seſ. 2. of His Sacred Majeſty; and inferring thereupon, that the Pannel, by the pretended Explication given in by him to the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, as the Senſe of the Oath he had taken, doth commit the Crime of Leaſing-making, and depraving His Majeſty's Laws: the Inference and Subſumption is moſt unwarrantable, and the Pannel, tho' any ſuch thing were acknowledged or proved, can never be found guilty of contravening theſe Acts of Parliament. In reſpect it is evident, upon Peruſal and Conſideration of theſe Acts of Parliament, that they only concern the Caſe of Leaſing-making tending to Sedition, and to beget Diſcord betwixt His Majeſty and His Subjects, and the Diſlike of His Majeſty's Government, and the Reproach of the ſame. And the ſaid Laws and Acts of Parliament were never underſtood or libelled upon, in any other Senſe. And all the former Acts of Parliament, which relate to the Crime of Leaſing-making in general Terms, and under the Qualification foreſaid, as tending to beget Diſcord betwixt His Majeſty and his Subjects, are explained and fully declared, as to what is the true meaning and import thereof, by the 134*th Act, Par.* 8. James 6. which relates to the ſame Crime of Leaſing-making, and which is expreſly deſcribed in theſe Terms, to be wicked and licentious, publick and private Speeches, and untrue Calumnies to the Diſdain and Contempt of His Majeſty's Council and Proceedings, and to the Diſhonour and Prejudice of His Highneſs and his Eſtate, ſtirring up his Highneſs's Subjects to Miſliking, and Sedition, and Unquietneſs which being the true Senſe and Import of the Acts of Parliament made againſt Leaſing-makers, there is nothing can be inferred from the Pannel's alledged Explication, which can be wreſted or conſtrued to be a Contravention of theſe Laws: in reſpect, Firſt, It is known by the whole tenor of his Life, and graciouſly acknowledged by His Sacred Majeſty, by a Letter under His Royal Hand, that the Pannel did ever moſt zealouſly, vigouroufly, and faithfully promote and carry on His Majeſty's Service and Intereſt, even in the worſt and moſt difficult Times: which is alſo acknowledged by a Paſs under the Earl of Middleton's Hand, who had then a ſpecial Commiſſion from His Majeſty, for carrying on His Majeſty's Service in this Kingdom, as Lieutenant General under His Majeſty; and by a Letter under the Earl's Hand, of the date, both which do contain high Expreſſions of the Pannel's Loyalty, and of the great Services he had performed for His Majeſty's Intereſt. And His Majeſty, as being conſcious thereof, and perfectly knowing the Pannel's Loyalty, and his Zeal, and Faithfulneſs for his Service, did think fit to entruſt the Pannel in Offices and Capacities of the greateſt Truſt of the Kingdom. And it is a juſt and rational Preſumption, which all Law Makes and Infers, that the Words and Expreſſions of Perſons, who by the Tenor and Courſe of their Lives have expreſſed their Duty and Loyalty to His Majeſty's Intereſt, are ever to be interpreted, and underſtood in meliorem partem. And by Way of Implication and Inference, to conclude and infer Crimes from the ſame, which the Uſer of ſuch Words and Expreſſions never mean'd nor deſigned, is both unreaſonable and unjuſt.

2. As the foreſaid Acts of Parliament made againſt Leaſing-makers, and depravers of His Majeſty's Laws, only proceed in the Terms foreſaid, where the Words and Speeches are plain, tending to beget Diſcord between the King and his Subjects, and to the reproach and diſlike of his Government, and when the ſame are ſpoke and vented in a ſubdolous, pernicious, and frandulent manner: So they never were, nor can be underſtood to proceed in the Caſe of a Perſon offering in the preſence of a publick Judicature (whereof he had the Honour to be a Member) his ſincere and plain meaning and apprehenſion of what he conceived to be the true ſenſe of the Act of Parliament impoſing and enjoining the Teſt: There being nothing more oppoſite to the Act of Parliament made againſt Leaſing-making, and venting and ſpreading abroad the ſame upon Seditious Deſigns, than the foreſaid plain and open declaration of his ſenſe and apprehenſion, what was the meaning of the ſaid Act of Parliament. And it is of no import to infer any Crime, and much leſs of any of the Crimes libelled, albeit the Pannel had erred and miſtaken in his apprehenſion of the Act of Parliament. And it were a ſtrange extention of the Act of Parliament made againſt Leaſing-makers, requiring the Qualifications foreſaid, and the Acts againſt depraving His Majeſty's Laws, to make the Pannel, or any other Perſon guilty upon the Miſtakes and Miſapprehenſions of the Senſe of the Laws, wherein Men may miſtake and differ very much, and even eminent Lawyers and Judges. So that the Acts of Parliament againſt Leaſing-making, and depraving His Majeſty's Laws, can only be underſtood in the expreſs Terms and Qualifications foreſaid. Like as it neither is libelled, nor can be proven, that the Pannel, before he was called and required by the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council to take the Oath, did ever, by Word or Practice, uſe any reproachful Speeches of the ſaid Act of Parliament, or of His Majeſty's Government: but being required to take the Oath, he did humbly, with all Submiſſion, declare what he apprehended to be the Senſe of the Act of Parliament, enjoyning the Teſt, and in what Senſe he had Freedom to take the ſame.

3. The Act of Parliament enjoining the Teſt does not enjoin the ſame to be taken by all Perſons whatſoever, but only preſcribes it as a Qualification without which Perſons could not aſſume or continue to act in publick Truſt: which being an Oath to be taken by ſo ſolemn an Invocation of the Name of Almighty God, it is not only allowable by the Laws and Cuſtoms of all Nations, and the Opinion of all Divines, and Caſuiſts, Popiſh or Proteſtant, but alſo commended, that where a Party has any Scrupuloſity, or Unclearneſs in his Conſcience, as to the Matter of the Oath, that he ſhould exhibit and declare the ſenſe and meaning in which he is willing and able to take the Oath. And it is not at all material, whether the Scruples of a Man's Conſcience, in the Matter of an Oath, be in themſelves juſt or groundleſs, it being a certain maxim, both in Law and Divinity, that Conſcientia etiam erronea ligat: and therefore tho' the Pannel had thought fit, for the clearing and exoneration of his own Conſcience, in a Matter of the higheſt Concern as to his Peace and Repoſe, to have expreſt and declared the expreſs ſenſe in which he could take the Oath, whether the ſaid ſenſe was conſiſtent with the Act of Parliament, or not, yet it does not in the leaſt import any Matter of Reproach or Reflection upon the Juſtice or Prudence of the Parliament in impoſing the ſaid Oath: but alenarly does evince the Weakneſs and Scrupuloſity of a Man's Conſcience, who neither did, nor ought to have taken the Oath but with an Explanation that would have ſaved his Conſcience to his Apprehenſion. Otherwiſe he had groſly ſinned before God, even tho' it was Conſcientia errans. And this is allowed and preſcribed by all Proteſtant Divines, as indiſpenſibly neceſſary, and was never thought to import any Crime, and is alſo commended even by Popiſh Caſuiſts themſelves, who tho' they allow, in ſome Caſes, of mental Reſervations and Equivocations, yet the expreſs Declaration of the ſenſe of the Party is allowed and commended, as much more ingenuous: and tutius Remedium Conſcientiæ ne illaqueetur, as appears by Bellarmine de Juramento, and upon the ſame Title de Interpretatione Juramenti; and Leſſius, that famous Caſuiſt, de Juſtitia & Jure, Dubitatione 8, 9. utrum ſi quis ſalvo animo aliquid Juramento promittat obligetur, & quale peccatum hoc ſit. And which is the general Opinion of all Caſuiſts, and all Divines, as may appear by Ameſius, in his Treatiſe de Conſcientia, Sanderſon de Juramento, Prælectione ſecunda. And ſuch an expreſs Declaration of the ſenſe and meaning of any Party, when required to take an Oath, for no other end but for the clearing and exoneration of his own Conſcience, was never in the Opinion of any Lawyer, or any Divine, conſtrued to be the Crime of Leaſing-making, or of defamatory Libels, or depraving of publick Laws, or reproaching or miſconſtruing of the Government: but on the contrary, by the univerſal Suffrage of all Proteſtant Divines, there is expreſly required, in Caſes of a ſcrupulous Conſcience, an Abhorrence and Deteſtation of all reſerved Senſes, and of all Amphibologies and Equivocations, which are in themſelves unlawful and reprobate, upon that unanſwerable Reaſon, that Juramentum being the higheſt Act of Devotion and Religion, in eo requiritur maxima ſimplicitas; and that a Party is obliged, who has any Scruples of Conſcience, publickly and openly to clear and declare the ſame.

4. Albeit it is not controverted, but that a Legiſlator, impoſing an Oath, or any publick Authority, before whom the Oath is taken, may, after hearing of the Senſe and Explication which a Perſon is willing to put upon it, either reject or accept of the ſame, if it be conceived not to be conſiſtent with the genuine ſenſe of the Oath: yet tho' it were rejected, it was never heard of, or pretended, that the offering of a Senſe does import a Crime, but that notwithſtanding thereof, Habetur pro Recuſante, and as if he had not taken the Oath, and to be liable to the certification of Law, as if he had been a Refuſer.

5. The Pannel having publickly and openly declared the ſenſe in which he was free to take the Oath, it is offered to be proved, that he was allowed, and did accordingly proceed to the taking the Oath, and did thereafter take his Place, and Sit and Vote, during that Sederunt of Privy-Council. So as the pretended Senſe and Explication, which he did then emit and give, can import no Crime againſt him.

6. It is alſo offered to be proved, That before the Pannel was required to take the Oath, or did appear before his Royal Highneſs, and Lords of Privy-Council, to take the ſame, there were a great many Papers ſpread abroad from Perſons, and Miniſters of the Orthodox Clergy; and as the Pannel is informed, ſome thereof preſented to the Biſhops of the Church, in the Name of Synods and Presbyteries, which did, in downright Terms, charge the Teſt and Oath with alledged Contradictions and Inconſiſtencies. And for Satisfaction whereof ſome of the Learned and Reverend Biſhops of the Church did write a learned and ſatisfying Anſwet, called A Vindication of the Teſt, for clearing the Scruples, Difficulties and Miſtakes that were objected againſt it. And which Vindication and Anſwer was exhibited, and read before the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, and allowed to be printed: and from which the Pannel argues.

1. That

1. That it neither is, nor can be pretended in this Libel, that the alledged Explication, wherein he did take the Oath, does propoſe the Scruples of his Conſcience in theſe Terms, which were propoſed by the Authors of theſe Objections, which do flatly and poſitively aſſert, that the Oath and Teſt, do contain Matters of Inconſiſtency and Contradiction, whereas all that is pretended in this Libel, with the moſt abſolute Violence can be put upon the Words, is arguing Implications and Inferences, which neither the Words are capable to bear; nor the Sincerity of the Earl's Intention and Deſign, nor the Courſe of his by-paſt Life can poſſibly admit of. And yet none of the Perſons who were the Authors of ſuch Papers, were ever judged or reputed Criminal or Guilty, and to be proſecuted for the odious and infamous Crimes libelled, of Treaſon, Leaſing-making, Perjury, and the like.

2. The Pannel does alſo argue from the ſaid matter of Fact, that the alledged Explication libelled can neither in his Intention and Deſign, nor in the Words, infer or import any Crime againſt him, becauſe, before his being required, or appearing to take the Oath, there were ſpread abroad ſuch Scruples and Objections, by ſome of the Orthodox Clergy and others: ſo that the Earl can never in any Senſe be conſtrued in his Explication wherein he took the Oath, to have done it animo infamandi, and to declaim againſt the Government: for the Scruples and Objections that were ſpread abroad by others were a fair and rational Occaſion why the Earl in any Senſe or Explication which he offered might have ſaid that he was confident the Parliament never intended to impoſe contradictory Oaths; and this is ſo far from importing the Inſinuation and Inference made by the Libel, that thereby the Parliament were ſo impious as to impoſe contradictory Oaths, as on the contrary, conſidering the Circumſtances forementioned, that there were Papers ſpread abroad, inſinuating; that there were Inconſiſtencies and Contradictions contained therein, the ſaid Expreſſion was an high Vindication of the Honour and Juſtice of the Parliament, againſt the Calumnies and Miſrepreſentations which were caſt upon it, and was alſo a juſt Riſe for the Pannel, for the clearing and exoneration of his own Conſcience, in the various Senſes and Apprehenſions which he found were going abroad as to the ſaid Teſt, humbly to offer his Senſe, in which he was clear and ſatisfied to take the Oath.

7. To the Libel, in ſo far as it is founded upon the Act of Parliament, viz. Act. 130. Par. 8. James VI. declaring, That none ſhould preſume to impugn the Dignity or Authority of the Three Eſtates of Parliament, or procure any invaſion or diminution thereof, under the pain of Treaſon; as alſo, in ſo far as it is pretended in the Libel, That the Pannel, by offering the Senſe and Explication libelled, has aſſumed the Legiſlative Power, which is incommunicable, and has made a Law, or a part of a Law.

It is anſwered, The Libel is moſt groundleſs and irrelevant, and againſt which the Act of Parliament is opponed, which is ſo plain and evident upon the reading thereof, that it neither is nor can be ſubject to the leaſt Cavillation: And the plain meaning whereof is nothing elſe but to impugn the Authority of Parliaments, as if the King and Parliament had not a Legiſlative Power, or were not the higheſt Repreſentative of the King-dom; or that any of the Three Eſtates were not eſſentially requiſit to conſtitute the Parliament. And beſides there is nothing more certain, than that the Occaſion of the ſaid Act, its being made was in Relation to the Biſhops and Clergy: and there is nothing in the pretended Explanation that can be wreſted to import the leaſt Contravention of the ſaid Act, or to be an impugning of the Three Eſtates of Parliament, or a ſeeking any Innovation therein. And it is admired, with what Shadow of Reaſon it can be pretended, that the Pannel has aſſumed a Legiſlative Power, or made a Part of a Law, ſeeing all that is contained in the alledged Explication libelled is only a Declaration of the Earl's Senſe in which he was ſatisfyed to take the Oath, and ſo reſpected none but himſelf, and for the clearing of his own Conſcience, which juſtly indeed the Word of God calls a Law to himſelf, without any incroaching upon the Legiſlative Power. And where was it ever debated, but that a Man in the taking of an Oath, if as to his Apprehenſions he thought any thing in it deſerved to be cleared, might declare the ſame, or that his exhibiting, at the time of the taking of the Oath, his Senſe and Explication wherein he did take it, was ever reputed or pretended to be the aſſuming of a Legiſlative Power, it being the Univerſal Practice of all Nations to allow this Liberty; and which Senſe may be either rejected or accepted, as the Legiſlator ſhall think fit, importing no more but a Parties private Senſe, for the exoneration of his own Conſcience? And as to that Member of the Libel founded upon Act 19. Par. 3. Queen Mary, it contains nothing but a Declaration of the Pain of Perjury, and there is nothing in the Explication libelled, which can in the leaſt be inferred as a Contravention of the ſaid Act, in reſpect if it ſhould be proved, that the Pannel, at the time of the taking of the Oath, did take it in the Words of the ſaid Explication, as his Senſe of the Oath, it is clear that the Senſe being declared at the time of taking the Oath, and allowed as the Senſe wherein it was taken, the Pannel can only be underſtood to have taken it in that Senſe. And altho' publick Authority may conſider whether the Senſe given by the Pannel does ſatisfie the Law or not, yet that can import no more, tho' it was found not to ſatisfie, but to hold the Pannel as a Refuſer of the Oath: but it is abſolutely impoſſible to infer the Crimes of Perjury upon it, being as is pretended by the Libel, the Pannel did only take it with the Declaration of the Senſe and Explication libelled.

8. As the Explication libelled does not at all import all, or any of the Crimes contained in the ſaid Libel, ſo by the common Principles of all Law, where a Perſon does emit Words for the clearing and exoneration of his own Conſcience, altho' there were any Ambiguity, or Unclearneſs, or Involvedneſs in the Tenor or Import of the Expreſſions or Words, yet they are ever to be interpreted, Interpretatione benigna & favorabili, according to the general Principles of Law and Reaſon. And it never was, nor can be refuſed to any Perſon to interpret and put a congruous ſenſe upon his own Words, eſpecially the Pannel being a Perſon of eminent Quality, and who hath given great Demonſtration, and undeniable Evidences of his fixt and unalterable Loyalty to His Majeſty's Intereſt and Service, and, at the Time of emitting the ſaid Explication, was inveſted and entruſted in publick Capacities. And it is a juſt and rational Interpretation and Caution which Sanderſon, that judicious and eminent Caſuiſt, gives, Prælect. 2. That dicta & facta principum, parentum, rectorum, are ever to be looked upon as benignæ Interpretationis, and that Dubia ſunt interpretanda in meliorem partem. And there is nothing in the Explication libelled which, without Detortion and Violence, and in the true Senſe and deſign of the Pannel, is not capable of this benign Interpretation and Conſtruction, eſpecially reſpect being had to the Circumſtances wherein it was emitted and given, after a great many Objections, Scruples, and alledged Inconſiſtencies, were owned, vented and ſpread abroad, which was a riſe to the Earl for uſing the Expreſſions contained in the pretended Declaration libelled.

10. Theſe Words whereby it is pretended the Pannel declares, he was ready to give Obedience as far as he could, firſt, do not in the leaſt Import, that the Parliament had impoſed any Oath which was in it ſelf unlawful: but only the Pannel's Scrupuloſity and Unclearneſs in matter of Conſcience. And it is hoped it cannot be a Crime, becauſe all Men cannot go the ſame length. And if any ſuch thing were argued, it might be argued ten Times more ſtrongly from a ſimple refuſing of the Oath, as if any thing were enjoyned which were ſo hard that it is not poſſible to comply with it: and yet ſuch Implications are moſt irrational and inconſequential, and neither in the Caſe of a ſimple and abſolute refuſing of the Oath, nor in the Caſe of an Explication of the Party's Senſe wherein he is willing to take the Oath, is there any Impeachment of the Juſtice and Prudence of the Legiſlator, who impoſeth this Oath, but ſingly a Declaration, of the Scrupuloſity and Weakneſs of the Party, why he cannot take the Oath in other Terms: and ſuch Explications have been allowed by the Laws and Cuſtoms of all Nations, and are adviſed by all Divines, of whatſoever Principles, for the Solace and Security of a Man's Conſcience.

2. As to that Point of the Explication libelled, That I am confident the Parliament never intended to impoſe contradictory Oaths; it reſpects the former Anſwer, which, conſidering the plain and downright Objections which were ſpread abroad, and made againſt the Oath, as containing Inconſiſtencies and Contradictions, was an high Vindication of the Juſtice and Prudence of the Parliament.

3. As to theſe Words, And therefore I think no body can explain it but for himſelf. The plain and clear meaning is nothing elſe but that the Oath being impoſed by Act of Parliament it was of no private Interpretation; And that therefore every Man who was to take it behooved to take it in that ſenſe which he apprehended to be the genuine Senſe of the Parliament. And it is impoſſible, without impugning common Senſe, that any Man could take it in any other Senſe, it being as impoſſible to ſee with another Man's Eyes as to ſee with his private Reaſon. And a Man's own private Senſe and Apprehenſion of the genuine Senſe was the only proper Way wherein any Man could rationally take the Oath.

And as to theſe Words, That he takes it as far as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf and the Proteſtant Religion. The Pannel neither intended nor expreſt more, but that he did take it as a true Proteſtant, and he hopes all Men have taken it as ſuch.

And as to that Clauſe, wherein the Pannel is made to declare, That he does not bind up himſelf in his Station, in a lawful Way, to wiſh and endeavour any Alteration he thinks to the Advantage of Church or State, not repugnant to the Proteſtant Religion and his Loyalty.

It is anſwered, there is nothing in this Expreſſion that can import the leaſt Crime, or give the leaſt Umbrage for any Miſtake, For,

1. It is moſt certain, it ir impoſſible to elicite any ſuch thing from the Oath, but that it was the Intention of the Parliament, that Perſons, notwithſtanding of the Oath, might concur in their Stations, and in a lawful Way, in any Law to the Advantage of Church and State. And no rational Man ever did, or can take the Oath in other Terms, that being contrary to his Allegiance and Duty to His Sacred Majeſty and Prince.

2. There is nothing in the ſaid Expreſſion which does in the leaſt point at any alteration in the Fundamentals of Government, either in Church or State; but, on the contrary, by the plain and clear Words and Meaning, rather for its perpetuity, ſtability and ſecurity. The Expreſſion being cautioned to the utmoſt ſcrupuloſity, as that it was to be done in a lawful manner; that it was to be to the advantage of Church or State; that it was to be conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and with his Loyalty, which was no other but the Duty and Loyalty of all faithful Subjects; and which he has ſignally and eminently expreſſed upon all Occaſions. So that how ſuch an Expreſſion can be drawn to import all or any of the Crimes libelled paſſeth all Natural Underſtanding.

And as to the laſt words, And this I underſtand as a part of my Oath, which is libelled to be a treaſonable Invaſion, and aſſuming of the Legiſlative Power. It is anſwered, it is moſt unwarrantable; and a Parties declaring the ſenſe and meaning in which he was free to take an Oath does not at all reſpect or invade the Legiſlative Power, of which the Pannel never entertained a Thought, but has an abſolute Abhorrence and Deteſtation of ſuch Practices. But the plain and clear meaning is, that the Senſe and Explication was a Part of his Oath, and not of the Law impoſing the Oath, theſe being as diſtant as the two Poles: and which Senſe was taken off the Earl's Hands, and he accordingly was allowed to take his Place at the Council-Board, and therefore repeats the former general Defences.

And to convince the Lords of Juſtitiary, that there is nothing in the pretended Explication libelled which can be drawn to import any Crime, even of the loweſt Size and Degree, and that there is no Expreſſion therein contained that can be detorted and wreſted to import the ſame, is evident from that learned Vindication publiſhed and ſpread abroad by an eminent Biſhop, and which was read in the Face of the Privy-Council, and does contain Expreſſions of the ſame Nature, and to the ſame Import contained in the pretended Explication libelled as the ground of this Indictment libelled againſt the Pannel. And it is poſitively offered to be proven, that theſe Terms were given in, and read, and allowed to be printed, and (without taking notice of the whole Tenor of the ſaid Vindication, which the Lords of Juſtitiary are humbly deſired to peruſe, and conſider, and compare the ſame with the Explication libelled) the ſame acknowledgeth, that Scruples ples had been raiſed and ſpread abroad againſt the Oath; and alſo acknowledgeth, that there were Expreſſions therein that were dark and obſcure; and likewiſe takes notice, that the Confeſſion ratified Par. 1. James 6. to which the Oath relates, was haſtily made, and takes notice of that Authority that made it, and acknowledges in plain Terms, that the Oath does not hinder any regular Endeavour to regulate or better the eſtabliſh'd Government; but only prohibits irregular Endeavours and Attempts to invert the ſubſtance or Body of the Government; and does likewiſe explain the Act of Parliament anent His Majeſty's Supremacy, that it does not reach the Alteration of the external Government of the Church. And the Pannel and his Proctors are far from inſinuating in the leaſt, that there is any thing in the ſaid Vindication but what is conſiſtent with the exemplary Loyalty, Piety and Learning of the Writer of the ſame. And tho' others perhaps may differ in their private Opinion, as to this Interpretation of the Act of Parliament anent the King's Supremacy, yet it were moſt abſurd and irrational to pretend that whether the miſtake were upon the Interpretation of the Writer, or the Senſe of others, as to that Point, that ſuch Miſtakes or Miſapprehenſions, upon either Hand, ſhould import or infer againſt them the Crimes of Leaſing-making, or depraving His Majeſty's Laws: for if ſuch Foundations were laid, Judges and Lawyers had a dangerous Employment, there being nothing more ordinary than to fall into Differences and Miſtakes of the ſenſe and meaning of the Laws and Acts of Parliament. But ſuch Crimes cannot be inferred, but with and under the Qualifications above-mentioned, of malicious and perverſe Deſigns, joyned with licentious, wicked and reproachful Speeches ſpread abroad, to move Sedition and Diſlike of the Government. And the ſaid Laws were never otherwiſe interpreted, nor extended in any Caſe. And therefore the Explication libelled, neither as taken complexly, nor in the ſeveral Expreſſions thereof, nor in the Deſign of the ingiver of the ſame, can in Law import againſt him all or any of the Crimes libelled.

In like manner the Pannel conjoins with the grounds above-mentioned the Proclamation iſſued forth by His Majeſty's Privy-Council, which acknowledges and proceeds upon a Narrative, that Scruples and Jealouſies were raiſed and ſpread abroad againſt the Act of Parliament enjoyning the Teſt. For clearing and ſatisfaction whereof the ſaid Proclamation was iſſued forth, and is ſince approved by his Sacred Majeſty.

The King's Advocate's Argument and Plea againſt the Earl of Argyle.

HIS Majeſty's Advocate, for the Foundation of his Debate, does repreſent, that His Majeſty, to ſecure the Government from the Rebellious Principles of the laſt Age, and the unjuſt Pretexts made uſe of in this, from Popery, and other Jealouſies; as alſo to ſecure the Proteſtant Religion, and the Crown, called a Parliament; and that the great Security reſolved on by the Parliament was this excellent Teſt, in which, that the old jugling Principles of the Covenant might not be renewed, wherein they ſtill ſwore to ſerve the King in their own Way, the Parliament did poſitively ordain, that this Oath ſhould be taken in the plain genuine meaning of the Words, without any Evaſion whatſoever. Notwithſtanding whereof, the Earl of Argyle, by this Paper, does invent a new Way, whereby no Man is at all bound to it. For how can any Perſon be bound, if every Man will only obey it as far as he can, and as far as he conceives it conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and with it ſelf, and reſerve to himſelf, notwithſtanding thereof, to make any Alteration that he thinks conſiſtent with his Loyalty? And therefore His Majeſty's Advocate deſires to know, to what the Earl of Argyle, or any Man elſe, can be bound by this Teſt? what the Magiſtrate can expect, or what Way he can puniſh his Perjury? For if he be bound no farther than he himſelf can obey, or ſo far as this Oath is conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion or it ſelf, quomodo conſtat, to whom or what he is bound? And who can determine that? Or againſt what Alteration is the Government ſecured, ſince he is Judge of his own Alteration? So that that Oath, that was to be taken without any Evaſion, is evaded in every ſingle Word or Letter; and the Government as inſecure as before the Act was made, becauſe the Taker is no farther bound than he pleaſes. From which it cannot be denied, but his Interpretation deſtroys not only this Act, but all Government, ſince it takes away the Security of all Government, and makes every Man's Conſcience, under which Name there goes ordinarily in this Age Humour and Intereſt, to be the rule of the Taker's Obedience. Nor can it be conceived to what Purpoſe Laws, but eſpecially Oaths, needed to be made, if this were allowed; or how this cannot fall under the 107*th Act, Par.* 7. James 6. whereby it is ſtatuted, That no Man interpret the Statutes otherwiſe than the Maker underſtood. For what can be more contrary to the taking of them in the Maker's Senſe, than that every Man ſhould obey as far as he can, and be allowed to take them in a general Senſe, ſo far as they are conſiſtent with themſelves, and the Proteſtant Religion, without condeſcending wherein they do not agree with the Proteſtant Religion? and that they are not bound not to make any Alteration which they think good for the States? For all theſe make the rule of Obedience in the Taker, whereas the poſitive Law makes it to be in the Maker. Or how could they be puniſhed for Perjury after this Oath? For when he were quarrelled for making Alterations againſt this Oath; and ſo to be perjured, he might eaſily anſwer, that he took this Oath only in ſo far as it was conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and with a Salvo, that he might make any Alteration that he thought conſiſtent with his Loyalty. And as to theſe Points, upon which he were to be quarrelled, he might ſay, he did not think them to be inconſiſtent with his Loyalty, think we what we pleaſed, and ſo needed not be perjured, except he pleaſed to decide againſt himſelf: for in theſe Generals he reſerves to himſelf to be ſtill Judge. And this were indeed a fine Security for any Government. And by the ſame rule that it looſes this Oath, it ſhews a Way of looſing all Oaths and Obedience: and conſequently ſtrikes at the Root of all Laws, as well as this: whereas to ſhun all this, not only this excellent Statute 107. has ſecured all the reſt, but but this is common Reaſon: and in the Opinion of all Divines, as well as Lawyers in all Nations, Verba juramenti intelliguntur ſecundum mentem & Intentionem ejus, cui fit juramentum. Which is ſet down, as the grand Poſition, by Sanderſon, (whom they cite) Pag. 137. and is founded upon that Mother-Law, Leg. 10. cui interrogatus f. f. de interrogationibus in Jure faciendus; and without which no Man can have ſenſe of Government in his Head, or practiſe it in any Nation. Whereas on the other Hand there is no Danger to any tender Conſcience, ſince there was no force upon the Earl to take the Oath, but he took it for his own Advantage, and might have abſtained.

2. It is inferred from the above-written matter of Fact, that the Earl is clearly guilty of Contravention of the 10 Act, Par. 10. James VI. Whereby the Leidges are commanded not to write any purpoſe of Reproach of His Majeſty's Government, or miſconſtrue his Proceedings, whereby any miſliking may be raiſed betwixt His Highneſs, his Nobility, or his People. And who can read this Paper, without ſeeing the King and Parliament reproached openly in it? For who can hear, that the Oath is only taken as far as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf and the Proteſtant Religion, but muſt neceſſarily conclude, that in ſeveral things it is inconſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion? For if it were not inconſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion, why this Clauſe at all but it might have been ſimply taken? For the only Reaſon of hindering it to be taken ſimply, was becauſe of the Inconſiſtency. Ergo there behoved neceſſarily to be an Inconſiſtency. And if there be any Inconſiſtency with the Proteſtant Religion, or any Contradiction in the Oath it ſelf, can there be any thing a greater Reproach on the Parliament, or a greater ground of miſlike to the People? And whereas it is pretended, that all Laws and Subſumptions ſhould be clear, and theſe are only Inferences. It is anſwered, that there are ſome things which the Law can only forbid in general: and there are many Inferences which are as ſtrong and natural, and reproach as ſoon, or ſooner, than the plaineſt Defamations in the World do: for what is openly ſaid of Reproach to the King does not wound him ſo much as many ſeditious Inſinuations have done in this Age and the laſt: So that whatever was the Earl's Deſign (albeit it is always conceived to be unkind to the Act, againſt which himſelf debated in Parliament,) yet certainly the Law in ſuch Caſes is only to conſider what effect this may have amongſt the People: And therefore the Acts of Parliament that were to guard againſt the miſconſtruing of His Majeſty's Government, do not only ſpeak of what was deſigned, but where a diſliking may be cauſed; and ſo judgeth ab effectu: And, conſequentially to the ſame emergent Reaſon, it makes all things tending to the raiſing of diſlike to be puniſhable by the Act 60. Parl. 6. Queen Mary; and the 9 Act Parl. 20. James VI. So that the Law deſigned to deter all Men by theſe indefinite and comprehenſive Expreſſions: And both in this and all the Laws of Leaſing-making, the Judges are to conſider what falls under theſe general and comprehenſive Words, nor could the Law be more ſpecial here, ſince the Makers of Reproach and Slander are ſo various that they could not be bound up or expreſt in any Law: but as it evidently appears, that no Man can hear the Words expreſt, if he believe this Paper, but he muſt think the Parliament has made a very ridiculous Oath, inconſiſtent with it ſelf and the Proteſtant Religion, the Words allowing no other Senſe, and having that natural Tendency; even as if a Man would ſay, I love ſuch a Man only in ſo far as he is an honeſt Man, he behoved certainly to conclude, that the Man was not every Way honeſt; ſo if your Lordſhips will take meaſures by other Parliaments, or your Predeceſſors, ye will clearly ſee, that they thought leſs than this a defaming of the Government, and miſconſtruing His Majeſty's Proceedings. For in Balmerino's Caſe the Juſtices find an humble Supplication made to the King himſelf to fall under theſe Acts now cited. Albeit as that was a Supplication, ſo it contained the greateſt Expreſſions of Loyalty, and offers of Life and Fortune that could be expreſt, yet becauſe it inſinuates darkly, that the King in the preceeding Parliament had not favoured the Proteſtant Religion, and they were ſorry he ſhould have taken Notes with his own Hands of what they ſaid, which ſeems to be moſt innocent, yet he was found guilty upon thoſe ſame very Acts. And the Parliament 1661. found his Lordſhip himſelf guilty of Leaſing-making, tho' he had only written a Letter to a private Friend, which requires no great Care nor Obſervation, (but this Paper which was to be a Part of his own Oath does) becauſe after he had ſpoken of the Parliament in the firſt Part of this Letter, he thereafter added, that the King would know their Tricks: which Words might be much more applicable to the private Perſons therein deſigned, than that the Words now inſiſted on can be capable of any ſuch Interpretation. And if either Interpretations, upon pretext of exonering of Conſcience, or otherwiſe, be allowed, a Man may eaſily defame as much as he pleaſes: and have we not ſeen the King moſt defamed by Covenants entered into upon Pretence to make him great and glorious, by Remonſtrances made to take away his Brother and beſt Friend, upon Pretence of preſerving the Proteſtant Religion, and His Sacred Perſon? and did not all who rebelled againſt him in the laſt Age declare, that they thought themſelves bound in duty to obey him, but ſtill as far as that could conſiſt with their Reſpect to the Proteſtant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties, which made all the reſt ineffectual? And whereas it is pretended, that by theſe Words, I take the ſame in as far as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf and the Proteſtant Religion, nothing more is meant, but that he takes it as a true Proteſtant: His Majeſty's Advocate appeals to your Lordſhips, and all the Hearers, if upon hearing this Expreſſion they ſhould take it in this ſenſe, and not rather think that there is an Inconſiſtency. For if that were poſſible to be the ſenſe, what need he ſay at all, as far as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf? Nor had the other Part, as far as it is conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, been neceſſary. For it is either conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, or otherwiſe they were Enemies to the Proteſtant Religion, that made it. Nor are any Lawyers or others in danger, by pleading or writing: For theſe are very different from, and may be very eaſily pleaded without defaming a Law, and an Oath, when they go to take it. But if any Lawyer ſhould ſay, in pleading or writing, that the Teſt was inconſiſtent, or, which is all one, that it were not to be taken by any any Man, but ſo far as it was conſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion, no doubt this would be a Crime even in pleading, tho' pleading has a greater Allowance than deliberate ſwearing has. And as there is nothing wherein there is not ſome Inconveniency, ſo the Inconveniency of defaming the Government is much greater than that of any private Man's Hazard, who needs not err except he pleaſe.

Whereas it is pretended, that before the Earl gave in this Explication, there were other Explications ſpread abroad, and Anſwers read to them in Council, and that the Council it ſelf gave an Explication. It was anſwered, that if this Paper be Leaſing-making, or miſconſtruing His Majeſty's Proceedings, and treaſonable, as is contended, then a thouſand of the like Offences cannot excuſe it. And when the King accuſed Noblemen, Miniſters, and others, in the Year 1661. for going on in the Rebellions of that Age, firſt with the Covenanters, and then with the Uſurpers, it was found no Defence, that the Nation was over-grown with thoſe Crimes, and that they were thought to be duties in thoſe Days, yea, this were to invite Men to offend in Multitudes. And albeit ſometimes theſe who follow the Examples of Multitudes may thereby pretend this as an Excuſe to many, yet this was never a formal Defence againſt Guilt, nor was ever the chief of the Offenders favourable on that Head. And it is to be preſumed, that the Earl of Argyle would rather be followed by others, than that he would follow any Example. But His Majeſty's Advocate does abſolutely decline to debate a Point that may defame a conſtant and ſtanding Act of Parliament, by leaving upon record a Memory of its being oppoſed. Nor were this Relevant, except it could be ſaid, the Council had allowed ſuch Explications which reflected upon the King and the Government: for the writing an Anſwer is no Allowance, but a condemning: nor can the Council allow any more than they can remit: and tho' it may juſtly be denied that the Council heard even the Earl's own Explanation, yet the hearing or allowing him to ſit is no relevant Plea, becauſe they might very juſtly have taken a time to conſider how far it was fit to accuſe upon that Head. And it is both juſt and fit for the Council to take time; and by expreſs Act of Parliament the Negligence of the King's Officers does not bind them. For if this were allowed, leading Men in the Council might commit what Crimes they pleaſed in the Council, which certainly the King may quarrel many Years after. And tho' all the Council had allowed him that Day, any one Officer of State might have quarrelled it the next Day. As to the Opinion of Bellarmine, Sanderſon, and others, it is ever contended, that the Principles of the Covenant agree very well with thoſe of the Jeſuits, and both do ſtill allow Equivocations and Evaſions: but no ſolid, Orthodox Divine ever allowed, that a Man who was to ſwear without any Evaſion ſhould ſwear ſo as he is bound to nothing, as it is contended the Earl is not, for the Reaſons repreſented. And as they ſtill recommend, that when Men are not clear they might abſtain, as the Earl might have done in this Caſe, ſo they ſtill conclude, that Men ſhould tell in clear Terms, what the Senſe is by which they are bound to the State: whereas the Earl here tells only in the general, and in moſt ambiguous Terms, that he takes it as far as he can obey, and as far it is conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and that he takes it in his own ſenſe, and that he is not bound by it from making Alterations, but as far as he thinks it for the Advantage of Church or State: which ſenſe is a thouſand times more doubtful than the Teſt, and is in effect nothing but what the Taker pleaſes himſelf.

As to the Treaſon founded on, His Majeſty's Advocate founds it firſt upon the fundamental and common Laws of this and all Nations, whereby it is Treaſon for any Man to make any Alteration he ſhall think for the Advantage of Church or State: which he hopes is a Principle cannot be denied in the general. And whereas it is pretended, that this cannot be underſtood of mean Alterations, and of Alterations to be made in a lawful Way: it is anſwered, that as the thing it ſelf is Treaſon; ſo this Treaſon is not taken off by any of theſe Qualifications; becauſe he declares, he will wiſh and endeavonr any Alteration he thinks fit: and any Alteration comprehends all Alterations that he thinks fit: nam propoſitio indefinita æquipollet univerſali. And the Word any is general in its own Nature, and is in plain Terms a reſerving to himſelf to make Alterations, both great and ſmall. And the Reſtriction is not, all Alterations that the King ſhall think fit, or are conſiſtent with the Laws and Acts of Parliament; but he is ſtill to be Judge of this, and his Loyalty is to be the Standard. Nor did the Covenanters in the laſt Age, nor do theſe who are daily executed, decline that they are bound to obey the King, ſimply, but only that they are bound to obey him no otherwiſe than as far as his Commands are conſiſtent with the Law of God, of Nature, and of this Kingdom, and with the Covenant: and their Treaſon lies in this. And when it is asked them, who ſhall be judge in this, they ſtill make themſelves Judges. And the Reaſon of all Treaſon being, that the Government is not ſecure, it is deſired to be known, what Way the Government can be ſecured after this Paper, ſince the Earl is ſtill Judge how far he is obliged, and what is his Loyalty. And if this had been ſufficient, the Covenant had been a very excellent Paper: for they are there bound to endeavour, in their ſeveral Stations, to defend the King's Perſon: but when the King challenged them, how they came to make War againſt him? their great Refuge was, that they were themſelves ſtill Judges as to that. And for illuſtrating this Power, the Lords of Juſtitiary are deſired to conſider, quid Juris, if the Earl, or any Man elſe ſhould have reſerved to himſelf in this Oath a Liberty to riſe in Arms, or to oppoſe the lineal Succeſſion, tho' he had added in a lawful manner: for the thing being in it ſelf unlawful, this is but ſhamm, and Proteſtatio contraria facto. And if theſe be unlawful, notwithſtanding of ſuch Additions, ſo much more muſt this general Reſervation, of making any Alterations, likewiſe be unlawful, notwithſtanding of theſe Additions: for he that reſerves the general Power of making any Alteration, does, a fortiori, reſerve Power to make any Alteration, tho' never ſo fundamental. For all Particulars are included in the general; and whatever may be ſaid againſt the Particulars may much more ſtrongly be ſaid againſt the General.

2. The

2. The 130*th Act. Par.* 8. James VI. is expreſly founded on, becauſe nothing can be a greater Diminution of the Power of the Parliament, than to introduce a Way or Mean whereby all their Acts and Oaths ſhall be made inſignificant and ineffectual, as this Paper does make them, for the Reaſons repreſented. Nor are any of the Eſtates of Parliament ſecure at this rate, but that they who reſerved a general Power to make all Alterations, may, under that General, come to alter any of them.

3. What can be a greater impugning of the Dignity and Authority of Parliaments, than to ſay, that the Parliament has made Acts for the Security of the Kingdom, which are in themſelves ridiculous, inconſiſtent with themſelves and the Proteſtant Religion?

And as to what is anſwered againſt invading the King's Prerogative, and the Legiſlative Power in Parliaments, in adding a Part to an Oath or Act, is not relevantly inferred, ſince the ſenſe of theſe Words, and this I underſtand as a Part of my Oath, is not to be underſtood as if any thing were to be added to the Law, but only to the Oath, and to be an Interpretation of the Oath. It is replied, that after this, no Man needs to add a Caution to the Oath in Parliament. But when he comes to take the Oath, do the Parliament what they pleaſe, he will add his own Part. Nor can this Part be looked upon as a ſenſe: for if this were the ſenſe before this Paper, he needed not underſtand it as a Part of it, for it wanted not that Part. And in general, as every Man may add his own Part, ſo the King can be ſecure of no Part. But your Lordſhips of Juſtitiary are deſired to conſider, how dangerous it would be in this Kingdom, and how ill it would ſound in any other Kingdom, that Men ſhould be allowed to reſerve to themſelves Liberty to make any Alteration they thought fit in Church or State, as to the Legality of which, they were themſelves to be Judges: and how far, from Degree to Degree, this at laſt may come to abſolute Anarchy, and how ſcandalous a thing, as well as unſecure, this new Way may look in an Age wherein we are too much tracing the Steps of our rebellious Progenitors in the laſt, whoſe great Defection and Error was, that they thought themſelves, and not the King the Authors of Reformation in Church and State. And no Man ever was barred by that, that the Way he was upon was not a lawful Way: for if it be allowed to every Man to take his own Way, every Man will think his own Way to be the lawful Way.

As to the Perjury, it is founded on this, firſt, That Perjury may be committed, not only by breaking an Oath, but even in the ſwearing of it, viz. to ſwear it with ſuch Evaſions as make the Oath ineffectual: for which Sanderſon is cited, Pag. 138. Alterum Perjurii genus eſt novo aliquo excogitato Commento Juramenti vim declinare, aut eludere, & Jurans tenetur ſub pœna Perjurii implere Secundum Intentionem deferentis; both which are here. For rhe Earl being bound by the very Oath, to ſwear in the genuine meaning, without any evaſion, he has ſworn ſo as he has evaded every Word, there being not one Word to which it can be ſaid particularly he is bound, as is ſaid. And it is undeniable, that he has not ſworn in the ſenſe of the Makers of the Law, but in his own ſenſe, which is Perjury, as is ſaid. And conſequentially, whatever ſenſe may be allowed in ambiguous Caſes, yet there can be none where the Paper clearly bears Generals: and where he declares, that he takes it in his own ſenſe, His Majeſty's Advocate declares, he will not burden himſelf, that Copies were diſperſt, tho' it is certain, ſince the very Paper it ſelf by the giving in is chargeable with all that is above charged upon it.

Sir John Dalrymple's Defence and Plea for the Earl of Argyle, by Way of Reply upon the King's Advocate.

SIr John Dalrymple replies for the Pannel, That ſince the ſolid Grounds of Law adduced in the Defences have received no particular Anſwers, in relation to the common conſent of all Caſuiſts, viz. That a Party who takes an Oath is bound in Conſcience to clear and propoſe the Terms and Senſe in which he does underſtand the Oath; Nor in relation to the ſeveral Grounds adduced concerning the legal and rational interpretation of dubious Clauſes. And ſince theſe have received no Anſwers, the Grounds are not to be repeated: but the Proctors for the Pannel do farther inſiſt on theſe Defences.

1. Its is not alledged, that any Explanation was given in by the Pannel to any Perſon, or any Copy ſpread, before the Pannel did take the Teſt in Council: ſo that it cannot be pretended, that the many Scruples that have been moved concerning the Teſt, did ariſe from the Pannel's Explication: but on the contrary, all the Objections that are anſwered, and obviated in the Pannel's Explication, were not only privately muttered, or were the thoughts of ſingle or illiterate Perſons, but they were the difficulties propoſed by Synods and Presbyteries, long before the Pannel came from home, or was required to take the Teſt: ſo that the general Terms of the Acts of Parliament founded upon in the Libel are not applicable to this Caſe: for as theſe Laws, in relation to Leaſing-makers, are only relative to atrocious wilful Inſinuations, or Miſconſtructions of His Majeſty's Perſon or Government, or the open depraving of his Laws, ſo the reſtrictive Clauſe, whereby Sedition or Miſconſtructions may be moved, raiſed, or engendered betwixt His Majeſty and his Leidges, cannot be applied to this Caſe, where all theſe Apprehenſions and Scruples were on Foot, and agitated long before the Pannel's Explanation.

As it cannot be pretended, that any new Duſt was raiſed by the Pannel's Explanation, ſo it is poſitively offered to be proved, that there is not one Word contained in this Explanation, but that either theſe individual Words, or much worſe, had been publickly propoſed, and verbatim read in Council, without the leaſt Diſcouragement, or the leaſt Objection made by any Member of the Council. And where a Writing, ex propoſito read in ſo high a Court, was univerſally agreed upon, without the Alteration of a Syllable, how can it be pretended, that any Perſon thereafter uſing the ſaid individual Terms in any Explanation, and far eaſier Terms, that they ſhall incur the high and infamous Crimes libelled? And the Queſtion is not here, whether the Council was a proper Judicature to have propoſed, or impoſed a ſenſe, or allowed any Explanation of the Teſt to be be publiſhed; but that is impoſſible that a Senſe they allowed, or being publickly read before them, and which the King's Advocate did not controll, that this ſhould import Treaſon, or any Crime: and tho' the Pannel's Advocate will not purſue or follow the Reply that has been made to this Point yet certainly no Man of ſober Senſe will think that it is fit to inſinuate that ſo high a Judicature might have authorized or acquieſced in ſuch Explanations as the Leidges thereafter ſhould be entrapped to have uſed.

If the Pannel had officiouſly or ultroneouſly offered a Senſe or Explanation of His Majeſty's Laws, which the Laws themſelves could not have born, it might juſtly have been alledged, that he was extra ordinem, and medling in a Matter he was not concerned in but where the Act of Council did enjoyn, and he was required and cited to that effect, it could neither be conſtructed as oſtentation, or to move or encourage Scruples or Reſiſtance, but it was abſolutely neceſſary, either for to have refuſed the Teſt, or elſe to have declared what he thought to be the true and genuine meaning of it. And there being ſo many Objections publickly moved and known, his Explanation was nothing elſe but to clear, that he did not look upon theſe Scruples and Objections moved by others as well founded and rational in themſelves; and therefore he was able to take the Teſt in that Senſe the Council had heard or allowed. And it is not controverted, that the ſenſe of the Legiſlator is the genuine ſenſe both of Laws and Oaths: and if a Perſon were only interpreting the meaning of either a Law or an Oath impoſed, he ſhould deprave and miſconſtruct the Law and Oath, if he rendered it wittingly and willingly in Terms inconſiſtent with the meaning of the Impoſer: but there is a great Difference betwixt taking of Oaths, and interpreting Oaths; for when a Man comes to take an Oath, except his particular ſenſe did agree with the genuine meaning of the Impoſer, he cannot take that Oath, tho' he may very well interpret and declare what is the ſenſe of the Legiſlator, which he may know, and yet perhaps not be able to take the Oath.

And therefore when there is any doubtfulneſs in an Oath, and a Party is bound to take it, if then he gives in an Explication of the ſenſe which he in his private Judgment doth apprehend to be the genuine meaning, if that private ſenſe be diſconform to the Legiſlator's ſenſe in the Oath, then the Impoſer of the Oath, or he that has Power to offer it to the Party, if he conſider the Party's ſenſe diſconform, he ought to reject the Oath, as not fulfilling the Intent of the Law impoſing it.

But it is impoſſible to ſtate that as a Crime, that a Party ſhould neither believe what is propoſed in the Oath, nor be able to take it; and he can run no farther Hazard, but the Penalty impoſed upon the Refuſer. And therefore in all Oaths there muſt be a concourſe both of the ſenſe impoſed by Authority, and of the private Senſe, Judgment, or Conſcience of the Party. And therefore if a Party ſhould take an Oath in the Senſe propoſed by Authority contrary to his own Senſe, he were perjured: hereby it is evident that the Senſe of Authority is not ſufficient, without the Acquieſcence and Conſent of the private Perſon. And therefore it is very ſtrange, why that Part of the Pannel's Explanation ſhould be challenged, that he takes it in his own Senſe, the poſterior Words making it as plain as the Light, that that ſenſe of his own is not what he pleaſes to make of the Oath, for it bears expreſly, that no body can explain it but for himſelf, and reconcile it as it is genuine, and agrees in its own ſenſe: ſo that there muſt be a Reconciliation betwixt his own ſenſe and the genuine ſenſe, which upon all Hands is acknowledged to be the ſenſe of Authority. And if the Pannel had been of theſe lax and debauch'd Principles, that he might have evaded the meaning and energy of the Oath, by impoſing upon it what Senſe he pleaſed, certainly he would have contented himſelf in the general Refuge of Equivocation, or mental Reſervation, and he would never have expoſed his ſenſe to the World, in which he took this Oath, whereby he became abſolutely fixed and determined to the Oath, in that particular ſenſe and ſo had no latitude of ſhuffling off the Energy or Obligation of the Oath. And it is likewiſe acknowledged, that the Caſes alledged in the Reply are true, viz. That the Perſon is guilty of Perjury, ſi aliquo novo Commento he would elude his Oath, or who doth not fulfil the Oath in the ſenſe of the Impoſer. But that does not concern this Caſe: for in the foreſaid Citation, a Perſon, after he has taken an Oath, finding out ſome new conceit to elude it he is perjured: but in this Caſe the Pannel did at, and before his taking the Teſt, declare the Terms in which he underſtood it; ſo that this was not novo aliquo Commento to elude it. And the other Caſe, where a Party takes it in the ſenſe of Authority, but has ſome ſubterfuge, or concealed Explanation, it is acknowledged to be Perjury. But in this Caſe there was no concealed Explanation, but it was publickly expreſt, and an Explanation given, which the Pannel deſigned, and underſtood as the meaning of Authority, and had ground to believe he was not miſtaken, ſince upon that Explanation he was received and allowed to ſit and vote in Council.

And as to that Part of the Reply, that explains the Treaſon, there can be no Treaſon in the Pannel's Caſe, becauſe the expreſs Act of Parliament founded upon doth relate only to the Conſtitution of the Parliament: and I am ſure His Majeſty's Advocate cannot ſubſume in theſe terms: and therefore in the Reply he recurs to the general Grounds of the Law, that the uſurping of His Majeſty's Authority, in making a Part of the Law, and to make Alterations in general, and without the King, are high and treaſonable Words or Deſigns, and ſuch as the Party pleaſes, and ſuch Deſigns as have been practiſed in the late Times. And that even the Adjection of fair and ſafe Words, as in the Covenant, does not ſecure from treaſonable Deſigns; and that it was ſo found in Balmerino's Caſe, tho' it bear a fair Narrative of an humble Supplication.

It is replied, that the Uſurpation of making of Laws is undoubtedly treaſonable, but no ſuch thing can be pretended or ſubſumed in this Caſe: for albeit the Pannel declares his Explanation to be a Part of his Oath, yet he never meaned to impoſe it as a Part of the Law, or that this Explanation ſhould be a thing diſtinct, or a ſeparate Part even of his Oath, for his Explanation being exegetik of the ſeveral Parts of the Oath, it is no diſtinct thing from the Oath, but declared to be a Part of the Oath de natura rei. And it was never pretended, that he that alledged any thing to be de natura rei, did ſay, that that was diſtinct and ſeparate, which were a Contradiction. And therefore the Argument is retorted, the Pannel having declared, this Explanation was, de natura rei, implied in the Oath, he neceſſarily made this Explanation no Addition or Extention of the Oath. So that for all this Explanation, the Oath is neither broader nor longer than it was.

And as to theſe Words, I do not mean to bind up my ſelf in my Station, and in a lawful Way, to wiſh and endeavour any Alteration I think to the Advantage of Church or State, not repugnant to the Proteſtant Religion, and my Loyalty. It is a ſtrange thing how this Clauſe can be drawn in queſtion, as treaſonable, when it may with better Reaſon be alledged, that there is no good Subject but is bound to ſay it. And albeit the Words to endeavour in my Station, be Words contained in the Covenant, yet that is no Reaſon, why two Words in the Covenant may not be made uſe of in another very good and loyal Senſe. And there is no Man that ſhall have the honour either to be entruſted by His Majeſty in his Council, or any other Judicature, or to be a Member of Parliament, but he is bound by his Loyalty to ſay the ſame thing. And there was never a Clauſe more cautiouſly expreſt, for the Words run, to endeavour any Alteration I ſhall think to the Advantage of Church and State. And tho' that was ſufficient, yet the Clauſe is ſo cautiouſly conceived, that it contains another Reſtriction, not repugnant to Religion and his Loyalty. So that except it could be alledged, that a Man by lawful means, to the Advantage of Church and State, conſiſtent with his Religion and Loyalty, could make treaſonable Alterations, and Invaſions upon the Government and Monarchy, which are the higheſt Contradictions imaginable, there can be nothing againſt the Pannel. And albeit the Clauſe, any Alterations, might, without the Reſtrictions and Qualifications foreſaid, be generally extended, yet the preceeding Words of lawful Way, and the rational Interpretation of the Emiſſion of Words, eſpecially before a ſolemn Judicatory, leaves no Place or Shadow to doubt, that theſe Alterations were no fundamental or treaſonable Alterations, but ſuch as the frailty of humane Affairs and Conſtitutions, and Viciſſitude of Things and Circumſtances, do conſtantly require in the moſt exact Conſtitutions under Heaven. And the Clauſe does not ſo much as import, that there is a preſent Neceſſity of Alteration, but it was a neceſſary and rational Proſpect, that albeit at preſent all things under Heaven had been done to ſecure the Religion and Government, yet there might occur Caſes that would require new Helps, Alterations, and Remedies. And it is not pretended in this Caſe for the Pannel, that he deſires to alleviate, or take off Words truly treaſonable, or having an ill Deſign, by the mixing of fair and ſafe, dutiful and ſubmiſſive Expreſſions, which indeed are Proteſtations contrariæ facto. For there is nothing in his Explanation, that either in his Deſign, or in the Words themſelves, being rationally and naturally interpreted, can infer the Crimes libelled, or any of them. And the Pannel's known Principles, and known Practices, do not only clear that Loyalty that he has profeſt before the Lords of Juſtitiary, and inſtructed by unqueſtionable Documents, but they put him far from the Suſpicion of theſe damnable Principles related in the Reply, of which the whole tract of his Life hath been an intire Evidence of his Abhorrency and Deteſtation. And in the laſt Place, it is thought ſtrange, why that ſhould be repreſented as an Affront or Diſgrace to the Government, that the Parliament impoſed a Teſt which the Pannel is not able to take ſimply. And it is not pretended, that he hath defamed, written or ſpoken againſt the Teſt it ſelf, or for the Inconvenience of it; but only that he hath not been able to ſee the good Ground upon which it may be ſimply taken. And this were to condemn him for Want of Sight or Senſe, when the Law hath puniſhed no Man for not taking the Teſt, but only turned him out of the Government. And it is as ſtrange an Inference, that becauſe the Pannel declares, he believes the Parliament meaned no Contradiction and would take the Teſt, in as far as it is conſiſtent, that therefore he ſaid, the Parliament impoſed Contradictions: which is ſo far from a rational Induction, that the Contradiction of theſe Subſumptions, in all congruity of Language and Senſe, is neceſſarily true. And therefore the laſt Part of that Clauſe, in ſo far as it is conſiſtent, is a Conſequence inferred upon the former: viz. I believe the Parliament deſigned to impoſe no Contradictions: ergo, I take the Teſt as conſiſtent, and in ſo far as it muſt be conſiſtent, if the Parliament did not impoſe Contradictions, as certainly they have not; and to convince the World, that in this Senſe this Explanation is receivable, it was propoſed in Council, and allowed, and therefore without the higheſt Reflection, it cannot now be quarrelled.

Sir George Lockhart's ſecond Plea for the Earl of Argyle, by way of Reply upon the King's Advocate.

SIr George Lockhart duplies, That the Defender repeats and oppones his former Defences, which are no ways elided, nor ſatisfied by the Reply made by His Majeſty's Advocate. And altho' it be eaſy for the King's Advocate, out of his Zeal, to pretend and argue Crimes of the higheſt Nature upon Inferences and Conſequences, neither conſiſtent with the Pannel's Deſign, nor with his Words and Expreſſions; yet there cannot be a more dangerous Foundation laid, for the ſecurity and intereſt of the Government, and the ſecurity and protection of the Subjects, than that Crimes ſhould be inferred but from clear, evident, and expreſs Laws, and plain, palpable Contravention of theſe Laws: It being both againſt the Laws of God and Man, that a Man ſhould be made an Offender for a Word, and eſpecially for Expreſſions which, according to Senſe and Reaſon, and conſidering the Time and Place where they were ſpoken by the Pannel, viz. as a Member of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, and in Preſence of His Royal Highneſs, and the Members of Council, and when required to take the Teſt, were ſafe and innocent: and it were againſt all Law and Reaſon, to ſuppoſe that the Pannel either did, or deſigned to do any thing which may, or did import the Crimes libelled againſt him. And whereas it is pretended, that the Oath required and impoſed by Act of Parliament was for the Security of the Government; and that the Pannel by his Explication does evade the Oath, by taking it only ſo far as it is conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and his own Loyalty, whereof he was Judge. It is anſwered, that the Pretence is moſt unwarrantable, and the Security of His Majeſty's Government is not at all endangered (as God forbid it ſhould,) tho' the Pannel, and a Thouſand more had ſimply refuſed the Teſt, or had taken it in a Senſe which does not ſatisfie the Law; it being competent to publick Authority to conſider, whether the Pannel's Oath, in the Terms of the Explication wherein he did take it, does ſatisfie the Act of Parliament or not; and if not, there can be no rational Conſequence inferred thereupon, but that he is holden as a Refuſer of the Oath, and liable to the Certification of the Act of Parliament, of not aſſuming and continuing in any publick Truſt: and no more was intended or deſigned by the Act of Parliament it ſelf, than ſtrictly to make the Oath in the true and genuine ſenſe and meaning of the Parliament, an indiſpenſible Qualification of Perſons admitted to publick Truſt. So that it is not at all material to diſpute, whether the Pannel's Explication can be looked upon as a full Satisfaction of the Act, which whether it ſhould or not, it can import no Crime againſt him, it not being conſiſtent with Senſe and Reaſon, that a Perſon who abſolutely refuſeth the Teſt, upon the Scrupuloſity of his Conſcience, albeit he be not capable of publick Truſt, ſhould be, notwithſtanding, looked upon as guilty of no Crime: and yet another who was willing to go a greater Length, albeit he did demur and ſcruple as to the full Length, that he ſhould be reputed criminal and guilty of a Crime.

does

2. The Pannel repeats and conjoins with this the Grounds above-mentioned, contained in his Defences, viz. That neither the Crimes libelled, nor any other Crime, were ever pretended or made uſe of againſt any others, who did ſpread abroad Objections of an high Nature, which yet were ſo favourably looked upon, as to be conſtrued only to proceed from Scrupuloſity of Conſcience, as alſo the Satisfaction endeavoured is in ſuch Terms, and by ſuch Condeſcenſions, as do take in, and juſtifie the whole Terms of the Explication libelled.

It is of great Moment, and whereof the Lords of Juſtitiary are deſired to take ſpecial Notice, both for clearing the abſolute Innocence of the Pannel's meaning and intention, and to take off all poſſible Miſconſtruction that can be wreſted or detorted from the Tenor and Expreſſions of the libelled Explication, that the Pannel was put to, and required to take the Oath, before the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council did paſs and publiſh their Proclamation explaining the Oath, and declaring the genuine ſenſe and meaning thereof, namely, that it did not tye to the whole Articles of the Confeſſion of Faith, ratified by Act of Parliament, James 6. and which, as to ſeveral Articles thereof, had occaſioned the Scruples, and Difficulties, and alledged Inconſiſtency and Contradiction betwixt the laſt Part of the Oath and the ſaid Confeſſion, and betwixt ſome of theſe Articles, and the Currant of the Proteſtant Doctrine, received and contained in the Syntagma of the Proteſtant Confeſſions. And therefore if the Pannel at that Time did think fit, for the clearing and exoneration of his own Conſcience, to uſe the Expreſſions in the Explication libelled, and yet with ſo much Duty and Confidence of the Parliament's Juſtice, as to their meaning and Intention, that the Parliament never intended to impoſe contradictory Oaths; and that he did take it ſo far as it was conſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion, not knowing then, whether the whole Confeſſion was to be reputed a Part of the Oath, and doubting there anent; and which the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council and His Sacred Majeſty by His Approbation ſince, have thought a Difficulty of ſo great Moment as it was fit to clear the ſame by a publick Proclamation; how now is it poſſible, that any Judicatory under Heaven, which proceeds upon the ſolid Grounds of Law and Reaſon, and who (it cannot be doubted) will have a juſt Regard to the intrinſick Principles of Juſtice, and to all Mens Security, that they can now believe all, or any of the Crimes libelled, ſhould be in the leaſt inferred from all, or any of the Expreſſions contained in the ſaid Explication? But that on the contrary it was a warrantable Allowance, and Chriſtian Practice, condemned by the Law and Cuſtom of no Nation, that having Scruples in the Matter of an Oath which ſhould be taken in Truth, Judgment and Righteouſneſs, and upon full Deliberation, and with a full Aſſurance and Sincerity of Mind, that he did plainly, openly, and clearly declare the Senſe in which he was willing to take it; and if Authority did allow it as the genuine Senſe of the Oath, the Pannel to be holden as a Taker of the Oath: and if upon farther Conſideration, Authority think not, that habetur pro Recuſante, and a Refuſer of the Oath, but no ways to be looked upon as a Criminal or guilty Perſon.

And the Pannel repeats and conjoins with this Point of the Reply, that Point in his Defence whereby he poſitively offers to prove, 1. That his Explication, and the ſenſe wherein he took the Oath, was heard, and publickly given and received in Council, and the Pannel thereafter allowed to take his Place, and ſit and vote in that Sederunt.

2. The Pannel alſo offers poſitively to prove, That the tenor and terms of his Senſe and Explication wherein he did take the Oath, is contain'd in that ſolid, learned, and pious Vindication, written by the Biſhop of Edenburgh, in anſwer to the Objections and alledged Inconſiſtencies and Contradictions in the Oath, and which Vindication was publickly read in Council, and ſo far approved, that it was allowed to be printed and publiſhed, and was accordingly diſperſed and ſpread abroad. And it is not of the leaſt import, that the Proclamation of the Lords of Privy-Council, altho' it does only allow the ſame to be taken by the Clergy, yet at the ſame time they expreſly declare the genuine ſenſe and meaning of the Parliament not to comprehend the whole Articles of the Confeſſion, which was not cleared before the Pannel's taking his Oath.

And whereas it is pretended, That the Acts of Parliament libelled upon, againſt Leaſing-makers, depravers of His Majeſty's Laws, do obtain and take place, where-ever there are any Words or Expreſſions that have a tendency in themſelves, or by a natural Conſequence, and rational Inferences, to reflect upon the Government, or miſconſtrue His Majeſty's Proceedings; and that the Explication libelled is ſuch, and that it was found ſo in the Caſe of Balmerino, albeit it was drawn up by Way of humble Petition and Addreſs to his Majeſty, and with great Proteſtations and Expreſſions of Loyalty. It is anſwered, the Acts of Parliament libelled upon are opponed, and the 43d Act, Par. 8. James 6. and the other Acts, making the depraving of His Majeſty's Laws to be Crimes, do expreſly require, that Speeches ſo judged be perverſe and licentious Speeches, ex natura ſua probroſa and reproachful, and ſpoke animo defamandi, and which could not receive any other rational Conſtruction, which cannot in the leaſt be applied to, or ſubſumed upon the Words, or Explication given in by the Pannel. And Law and Reaſon never infers or preſumes a Crime, where the thing is capable of a fair and rational Conſtruction, and where it was done palam and publickly, and in preſence of His Majeſty's High Commiſſioner, and Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, whereof the Pannel had the Honour to be a Member, Perſons committing and deſigning to commit Crimes making uſe of Times, and Places, and Companies of another Nature, on whom their Suggeſtions and Inſinuations may prevail. But it is a Violence to the common Reaſon of Mankind, to pretend, that a Perſon of the Pannel's Quality, having the Honour to ſerve His Majeſty in moſt eminent Capacities, and devoted to His Majeſty's Intereſt and Service, beyond the ſtricteſt Ties of Duty and Allegiance, by the tranſcendent Favours he had received, that the Pannel in thoſe Circumſtances, and in Preſence of his Royal Highneſs and Lords of Privy-Council, ſhould deſign to declame, and de facto, declame againſt, and defame His Majeſty's Government: to ſuppoſe this is abſolutely contradictory to the common Principles and Practices of Law, and common Topiks of Reaſon.

And as to Balmerino's Caſe, it is anſwered, that the Lords of Juſtitiary are humbly deſired to call for, and peruſe the ſaid Petition, and Books of Adjournal, which was certainly a defamatory Libel of His Majeſty's Father, of bleſſed Memory, and of the States of Parliament in the higheſt Degree, bearing expreſly, that there was nothing deſigned but an Innovation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Subverſion and over-turning the Liberties and Priviledges of the Parliament, and the Conſtituions of the Articles, and other things of that kind, which made certainly of it ſelf a moſt villanous and execrable Libel, containing the higheſt Crimes of Treaſon and Perduellion, and was not capable of any good Senſe or Interpretation, but was abſolutely pernicious and deſtructive: ſo that it is in vain to pretend, that the ſaid Libel did contain Prefaces and Proteſtations of Loyalty, which no Law regards, even in ſimplici injuria & maledicto, tho' committed by a private Perſon, cum præfatione ſalvo honore, or the like, and which were certainly ridiculous to ſuſtain in a Libel concerning Crimes of Treaſon.

And whereas it is pretended, That tho' others were guilty of theſe Crimes, it does not excuſe the Earl: and that the Lords of Privy-Council cannot remit Crimes; and the negligence of the King's Officers cannot prejudge his Intereſt. It is anſwered, The Pannel is very confident, that neither the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, conſiſting of Perſons of eminent Loyalty and Judgment, nor His Majeſty's Officers, were capable of any ſuch Eſcape as is pretended: and if the tenor of the Pannel's Explication did in the leaſt import the high and infamous Crimes libelled, as beyond all peradventure it does not, it were ſtrange, how the ſame being contained in the foreſaid Vindication, and the whole Clauſes thereof juſtified, that this ſhould have been looked on as no Crime, and allowed to be publiſhed. And the Pannel neither does, nor needs to make farther uſe thereof, but to convince all diſ-intereſted Perſons, that his Explication can import no Crime.

And whereas it is pretended, that the Crime of Treaſon is inferred from the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, and from that Clauſe of the Pannel's Explication, whereby he declares, he is not bound up by any thing in this Oath not to endeavour any Alteration in a lawful way: which being an indefinite Propoſition is equipollent to an univerſal, and is upon the matter coincident with a Clauſe which was rebellious in its Conſequences, contained in the ſolemn League and Covenant. It is anſwered, that it is ſtrange, how ſuch a plain and innocent Clauſe, whereby, beyond all queſtion, he does expreſs no more than was naturally imported in the Oath it ſelf, whether expreſt or not, ſhould be made a Foundation to import the Crime of Treaſon, which no Lawyer ever allowed, except where it was founded upon expreſs Law & Luce Meridiana Clarior: and indeed if ſuch Stretches and Inferences can make Men guilty of Treaſon no Man can be ſecure. And the Words in the Pannel's Declaration are plain and clear (yet non ſunt cavillanda) and import no more, but that, in his Station, and in a lawful Way, and conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and his Loyalty, he might endeavour any Alteration to the Advantage of Church and State. And was there ever any loyal or rational Subject, that does, or can doubt, that this is the natural Import of the Oath? And indeed it were a ſtrange Oath, if it were capable of another Senſe, and being deſigned for the Security of the Government, ſhould bind up Mens Hands to concur for its Advantage. And how was it poſſible, that the Pannel, or any other in the Capacity of a Privy-Councellor, or a Member of the Parliament, would have ſatisfied his Duty and Allegiance in other Terms? And whereas it is pretended that there was the like Caſe in the pretended League and Covenant, it is anſwered, the Aſſertion is evidently a Miſtake; and tho' it were, the Argument is altogether inconſequential: for that League and Covenant was treaſonable in it ſelf, as being a Combination entered into without His Majeſty's Authority, and was treaſonable in the Gloſſes that were put upon it, and was impoſed by abſolute Violence on the Subjects of this Kingdom, and how can the Pannel be in the leaſt ſuppoſed to have had any Reſpect to the ſaid League and Covenant, when he had ſo often taken the Declaration, diſowning and renouncing it, as an unlawful and ſinful Oath, and concurred in the many excellent Laws and Acts of Parliament made by His Majeſty, condemning the ſame as ſeditious and treaſonable? And whereas it is pretended, that the Pannel is guilty of Perjury, having taken the Oath in another Senſe than was conſiſtent with the genuine Senſe of the Parliament, and that by the Authority cited he doth commento eludere Juramentum, which ought always to be taken in the Senſe of him that impoſeth the Oath: it is anſwered, the Pretence is moſt groundleſs, and Perjury never was, nor can be inferred, but by the Commiſſion,

on, or Omiſſion of ſomething directly contrary to the Oath. And altho' it is true, that where an Oath is taken, without any Declaration of the expreſs Senſe of the Perſons who take it, it obliges ſub pœna Perjurii, in the Senſe, not of the Taker, but of the Impoſer of the Oath, becauſe expreſſing no Senſe, Law and Reaſon preſumes there is a full Acquieſcence in the ſenſe and meaning of the Impoſer of the Oath: and then if an Oath be not ſo taken, he that takes it is guilty of Perjury. Yet there was never Lawyer nor Divine, Popiſh or Proteſtant, but agree in this, that whatever be the Tenor of the Oath, if before the taking thereof, the Party in expreſs Terms does publickly and openly declare the Senſe in which he takes it, it is impoſſible it can infer the Crime of Perjury againſt him in any other Senſe, this not being Commentum excogitatum, after the taking of the Oath. And if this were not ſo, how is it poſſible in Senſe and Reaſon, that ever any Explication or Senſe could ſolve the Scruples of a Man's Conſcience? For it might be always pretended, that notwithſtanding of the expreſs Senſe wherein he took it, he ſhould be guilty of Perjury from another Senſe. And that this is the irrefragable Opinion of all Divines, of whatever Perſwaſion, is not only clear from the Authority above-mentioned, even thoſe who allow of reſerved Senſes, but more eſpecially by the univerſal Suffrage of all Proteſtant Divines, who tho' they do abominate all Thoughts of Subterfuges or Evaſions, after taking of the Oath, yet they do always allow and adviſe for the Safety and Security of a doubting and ſcrupulous Conſcience, that they ſhould expreſs and declare, before the taking of the Oath, the true ſenſe and meaning wherein they have Freedom to take it; and for which Sanderſon de Juramento is cited Prelect. 6. Sect. 10. pag. 75. where his Words are, ſane ut inter Jurandum omnia rectè fiant, expedit ut de verborum ſenſu inter omnes partes quarum intereſt liquido conſtet, quod veteribus dictum, liquido Jurare. And an Oath being one of the higheſt Acts of Devotion, containing Cultum Latriæ, there is nothing more conſonant to the Nature of all Oaths, and to that Candor, Ingenuity, and Chriſtian Simplicity, which all Law and Religion requires in ſuch Caſes.

The King's Advocate's Third Plea againſt the Earl of Argyle.

HIs Majeſty's Advocate conceives he has nothing to anſwer, as to depraving, Leaſing-making, and miſinterpreting, &c. ſave that this Oath was only deſigned to exclude Recuſants; and conſequently the Pannel may thereby be debarred from his Offices, but not made guilty of a Crime. To which he Triplies, 1. If ever the Earl had ſimply refuſed, that had been true, but that did not at all excuſe from defaming the Law, for a defamer is not puniſhed for refuſing, but for defaming.

2. If he had ſimply refuſed the Government had been in no more hazard, but if Men will both retain their Places, and yet take the ſame in ſuch Words as ſecure not the Government, it were ſtrange to think, that the deſign of the Law being to ſecure againſt Mens poſſeſſing who will not obey, that yet it ſhould allow them poſſeſſion who do not obey. Nor is the Refuſer here in a better Caſe than the Earl, and others, who offered to obey, becauſe it is the defaming the Law, as ridiculous and inconſiſtent with that Proteſtant Religion, and Leaſing-making betwixt the King, the Nobility, and the People, the miſconſtruing, and miſrepreſenting, as hath been formerly urged, that puts the Earl in a worſe condition. And all thoſe Arguments might be as well urged for any who had uncontrovertedly contravened theſe Acts, as for the Pannel.

Whereas it is pretended, That the King emitted a Proclamation to ſatisfy Diſſenters, it is anſwered, That the Proclamation was deſigned for none who had been Members of Parliament, and ſo ſhould have known the ſenſe; but it was deſigned for meer Ignorants, not for ſuch as had defamed the Law, which is ſtill here charged upon the Pannel.

As to the Article of Treaſon, it is conceived, That it is unanſwerably founded upon the Common-Law, diſcharging all Men to make alteration of the Government. As to which there needs no expreſs Statute, that being the very eſſence of Government, and needing no Laws. Like as it falls poſitively under all the Laws that diſcharge the aſſuming the Royal or Legiſlative Power; for to alter the Government is inſeparably united to the Crown. Like as the Subſumption is as clear, the expreſs Words not bearing, That the Earl reſerves to himſelf a Power to propoſe to His Majeſty any Alterations, or to concur to ſerve His Majeſty in making Alterations; but owning in moſt general and arbitrary Terms, to wiſh and endeavour any Alteration he ſhould think fit for the advantage of Church or State, and not determining any thing that could bind him otherwiſe than according to his own pleaſure: For the word [lawful] is ſtill ſubjected to himſelf, and has ſubjoined to it, as he ſhould think fit, which governs the whole Propoſition; and in that ſenſe, and as the Words are here ſet down, the greateſt Rebel in Scotland will ſubſcribe that Explanation: For there is no Man but will reſtrict himſelf to a lawful Obedience, providing he be judge of the lawfulneſs. And ſeeing all Oaths propoſed for the Security of Government require a certain depending upon the Legiſlator, and not upon the Taker, it is impoſſible that that end could be attained by any qualification, how ſpecial ſoever, which is made to depend abſolutely upon the Taker, and not upon the Legiſlator. And we have often ſeen, how little Security there is in thoſe ſpecious Words, the very Covenant it ſelf having not only the very Words above-repeated, but atteſting all the World to be Witneſſes to their Loyalty and Sincerity. And as to the former Inſtances, viz. riſing in Arms, or oppoſing the lawful Succeſſor, there is no Covenanter in Scotland, but will ſay, he will do neither, but in a lawful Way, and in his Station, and in a Way conſiſtent with his Loyalty, for a Man were mad to ſay otherwiſe: but yet when they come to explain this, they will only do it as they think fit, and will be Judges themſelves; and then will tell us, that defenſive Arms are lawful, and that no Popiſh Succeſſor ſhould ſucceed, nor no Succeſſor unleſs he ſubſcribe the Covenant. And whereas it is pretended, that no Clauſe in the Teſt doesexclude a Man from making Alterations; it is anſwered, that the Alterations which the

Teſt

Teſt allows are none at all but in Subordination to Authority. And as to the two Points above-mentioned, it excludes all Alterations as to theſe Points. And as to the making fundamental Alterations, this Reſervation allows to make any Alteration, and conſequently fundamental Alterations; to preclude which Libertiniſme this excellent Law was invented.

Whereas it is pretended, that the Pannel deſigns not to add any thing as a Part of the Law, but as a Part of his Oath, it is duplied, ſince the Oath is a Part of the Law, whoever adds to the Oath, adds to the Law.

Whereas it is pretended, that the Crime of Perjury cannot be inferred here, becauſe all Divines allow, that the Taker of an Oath is ſtill allowed to declare in what ſenſe he takes the Oath; and that this is clear from Sanderſon, Pag. 175. It is triplied, that where there are two dubious Senſes, Lawyers and Divines allow, that the Taker ſhould clear himſelf, which of the Two he ſhould take; which is very juſt, becauſe to which ſoever of the two he determines himſelf, the Legiſlator in that Caſe is ſure of him. But here it is not pretended, that there are two Senſes; nor does the Pannel declare in which of the two he takes it, or in what clear ſenſe at all he takes it, which is indeed liquido Jurare. But here the Pannel neither condeſcends, what particular Clauſe of the Teſt is unclear; nor after he has condeſcended upon the Articles, does he condeſcend upon the ſenſe, but in general myſterious Words, where he can neither be followed, nor found out, he only takes it in ſo far as it is conſiſtent with it ſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion, reſerving the ſquaring all by his own Loyalty, as he did in the beginning declare, that he took it in his own ſenſe, by which general ſenſe, neither is the Government ſecure of any thing it does enjoin; nor could he be puniſhed if he tranſgreſſed. Nor can it be doubted, but Perjury may be inferred by any equivocal or evading ſenſe, inter Jurandum, as well as by breaking an Oath afterwards: Which is very clear from Sanderſon, Pag. 138. The words whereof are, alterum Perjurii genus eſt inter Jurandum detorquere verba; and which is farther clear by the 28th Page; but above all, from the Principles of Reaſon, and the neceſſity of Commerce and Government: For if Men may adhibit ſuch Gloſſes, even whilſt they ſwear, as may make the Oath uſeleſs, what way will either Government or Commerce be maintained? And he deceives as much that deceives in ſwearing ſalvis verbis, as he who after he has ſworn, does break the Oath, nay and more too, becauſe the breaking may come from Forgetfulneſs, or other Accidents: but the evading by general Clauſes, which bind no Man, does from the firſt Inſtance originally make all Oaths uſeleſs and dangerous, and that this Interpretation eludes the Oath abſolutely is very clear from what hath been formerly debated. For it may be argued, that the Earl broke the Oath in ſo far as the firſt Day he ſwears the Oath, which bears to be without any Evaſion (and muſt be ſo, notwithſtanding of whatever he could ſay;) and the next Day he gives in this Evaſion, which is a down-right Violation of that Oath, and inconſiſtent with it. Nor was this Oath forced, but voluntarily emitted, to keep his own Places. And it was the greater Crime that it was done in the Council, becauſe that was to make it the more publick, and conſequently the more to miſrepreſent the Government.

After this debate, which, according to the Cuſtom of the Court, was verbatim dictat by the Advocates of either ſide, and written by the Clerk, and ſo took up much time, and the Court having ſate, at leaſt twelve Hours, without Intermiſſion, it adjourned till the next Day being Tueſday the 13th of December, at two of the Clock in the Afternoon: and then the Earl being again brought to the Bar, the following Interloquutour (that is Judgment and Sentence) of the Lords of Juſtitiary, on the foregoing Debate, was read, and pronounced in open Court.

Edenburgh, December 12. 1681.

The Interloquutour of the Lords of Juſtitiary.

THE Lords, Juſtice General, and Commiſſioners of the Juſtitiary, having conſidered the Libel and Debate, they ſuſtain the Defence proponed for the Earl of Argyle, the Pannel, in relation to the Perjury libelled, viz. That he emitted this Explanation at, or before his taking the Teſt, firſt before His Royal Highneſs, His Majeſty's High Commiſſioner, and the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy Council, relevant, to elude that Article of the Libel.

The Lords ſuſtain the Libel, as being founded upon the common Law, and Explication libelled, and upon Act 130. Parl. 8. James VI. to infer the Pain of Treaſon.

They likewiſe ſuſtain the Libel, as founded upon the 10 Act, Parl. 10. James VI. to infer the Pain of Death; and likewiſe ſuſtain that Part of the Libel anent Leaſing-making, and Leaſing-telling, to infer the particular Pains mentioned in the ſeveral Acts libelled.

And repel the whole other Defences, Duplies, and Quadruplies, and remits the Libel, with the Defences anent the Perjury, to the Knowledge of an Aſſize.

Thereafter the Aſſize, that is the Jury, being conſtitute and ſworn, viz.

Liſt of the Aſſizers.

Marquiſs Montroſs,	Lord Lindoors,
E. Middleton,	Lord Sinclare,
E. Airlie,	Lord Bruntiſland,
E. Perth, P. C.	Laird of Goſfoord,
E. Dalhouſie,	Laird of Claverhouſe,
E. Roxburgh, P. C.	Laird of Balnamoon,
E. Dumfries,	Laird of Park Gordon.
E. Linlithgow, P. C.

HIS Majeſty's Advocate adduced four Witneſſes, to prove the Points of the Indictment, remitted to the Knowledge of the Aſſize, viz. John Drummond of Lundie, then Governor of the Caſtle of Edenburgh, now Treaſurer-depute, Sir William Paterſon, and Mr. Patrick Menzies, Clerks of the Privy-Council, and H. Stevenſon, their under-Clerk: who deponed, that on the 4th of November, the Earl did give in an unſubſcribed Explanation of the Teſt, which he refuſed to ſign; One of the Witneſſes alſo adding, that he heard him him make the ſame Explanation, the Day before, in Council, and that it was there accepted.

Then His Majeſty's Advocate asked, if the Earl would make uſe of his Exculpation for eliding the Perjury libelled, to wit, that he had emitted the ſame Explanation, before taking the Teſt, in Preſence of His Royal Highneſs, and the Council. To which the Earl anſwered, that, ſeeing they had ſuſtain'd the Libel, as to the alledged Treaſon, he would not trouble them about the Perjury: eſpecially the Matter of Fact, referred by the Interloquutour to his Probation, being of it ſelf ſo clear and notour.

Upon this ſilence, the Advocate, taking Inſtruments, Proteſts, for an Aſſize of Error, in Caſe the Aſſizers ſhould aſſoil or acquit. Whereupon the Aſſize removing was incloſed: and, after ſometime, returned their Verdict, which was read in open Court of this tenour.

The Verdict of the Aſſize.

THE Aſſize having elected, and choſen the Marquis of Montroſe, to be their Chancellor, they all in one Voice find the Earl of Argyle guilty, and culpable of the Crimes of Treaſon, Leaſing-making, and Leaſing-telling, and find, by Plurality of Votes, the ſaid Earl innocent and not guilty of Perjury.

And then the Court again adjourned: and the Privy-Council wrote the following Letter to His Majeſty.

Halyrudhouſe, December 14. 1681.

The Council's Letter to the King, deſiring leave to pronounce Sentence againſt the Earl of Argyle.

May it pleaſe your ſacred Majeſty,

IN obedience to your Majeſty's Letter, dated the 15th of November laſt, we ordered your Majeſty's Advocate to inſiſt in that Proceſs, raiſed at your Inſtance, againſt the Earl of Argyle: and having allowed him a long time for his Appearance, and any Advocates he pleaſed to employ, and Letters of Exculpation, for his Defence; He, after full Debate, and clear Probation, was found guilty of Treaſon, Leaſing-making betwixt your Majeſty, your Parliament, and your People, and the reproaching of your Laws and Acts of Parliament. But becauſe of your Majeſty's Letter, ordaining us to ſend your Majeſty a particular Account of what he ſhould be found guilty of, before the pronouncing of any Sentence againſt him, we thought it our Duty to ſend your Majeſty this Account of our, and your Juſtices Proceedings therein; and to ſignifie to your Majeſty, with all Submiſſion, that it is uſual, and moſt fit for your Majeſty's Service and the Advantage of the Crown, that a Sentence be pronounced, upon the Verdict of the Aſſize, without which the Proceſs will be ſtill imperfect. After which, your Majeſty may, as you in your Royal Prudence, and Clemency ſhall think fit, ordain all farther Execution to be ſiſted, during your Majeſty's Pleaſure: which ſhall be dutifully obeyed by

Your Majeſty's moſt Humble, Moſt Faithful,
and moſt Obedient,
Subjects and Servants.

The King's Anſwer to the Council's Letter.

18 Decemb. 1681.

C. R.

MOſt dearly, &c. having this Day received your Letter, of the 14. inſtant, giving an Account that our Advocate having been ordered by you to inſiſt in that Proceſs raiſed at our inſtance againſt the Earl of Argyle, he was, after full Debate and clear Probation, found guilty of Treaſon, and Leaſing-making, betwixt us, our Parliament, and our People, and the reproaching our Laws and Acts of Parliament: We have now thought fit, notwithſtanding of what was ordered by us in our Letter to you of the 15. of November laſt, hereby to authorize you to grant a Warrand to our Juſtice General, and the remanent Judges of our Juſtice Court, for proceeding to pronounce a Sentence, upon the Verdict of the Jury, againſt the ſaid Earl; nevertheleſs it is our expreſs Pleaſure, and we do hereby require you, to take care, that all Execution of the Sentence be ſtopped, until we ſhall think fit to declare our further Pleaſure in this Affair: for doing whereof, &c.

Which Anſwer being read in Council on the Thurſday, and the Court of Juſtitiary, according to its laſt Adjournment, being to meet upon the Fryday, after a little heſitation in Council whether the Court of Juſtitiary could proceed to the Sentence of Forfaulture againſt the Earl he being abſent, it was reſolved in the Affirmative; and what were the Grounds urged, either of Heſitation or Reſolution, I cannot preciſely ſay, there being nothing on record that I can learn. But that you may have a full and ſatisfying Account, I ſhall briefly tell you what was ordinarly diſcourſed, a Part whereof I alſo find in a Petition given in by the Counteſs of Argyle to the Lords of Juſtitiary, before pronouncing Sentence, but without any Anſwer or Effect. It was commonly ſaid, that by the old Law, and Cuſtom, the Court of Juſtitiary could no more in the Caſe of Treaſon then of any other Crime proceed further againſt a Perſon not compearing, and abſent, then to declare him Out-Law, and Fugitive: and that, albeit it be ſingular, in the Caſe of Treaſon that the Trial may go on, even to a final Sentence, tho' the Party be abſent, yet ſuch Trials were only proper, to and always reſerved for Parliaments: and that ſo it had been conſtantly obſerved until after the Rebellion in the Year 1666: but there being ſeveral Perſons notourly engaged in that Rebellion, who had eſcaped, and thereby withdrawn themſelves from Juſtice, it was thought, that the want of a Parliament, for the time, ought not to afford them any Immunity; and therefore it was reſolved by the Council, with Advice of the Lords of Seſſion, that the Court of Juſtitiary ſhould ſummond, and proceed to Trial, and Sentence, againſt theſe Abſents, whether they compeared or not, and ſo it was done: only becauſe the thing was new and indeed an Innovation of the old Cuſtom, to make all ſure, in the firſt Parliament held thereafter, in the Year 1669, it was thought fit to confirm theſe Proceedings of the Juſtitiary, in that Point, and alſo to make a perpetual Statute, that, in Caſe of open Rebellion, and riſing in Arms againſt the King, and Government, the Treaſon, in all time coming, might by an Order from his Majeſty's Council be tried, and the Actors proceeded againſt by the Lords of Juſtitiary, even to final Sentence, whether the Traitors comcompeared or not. This being then the preſent Law, and Cuſtom, it is apparent in the firſt Place that the Earl's Caſe, not being that of an open Rebellion, and riſing in Arms, is not at all comprehended in the Act of Parliament, ſo that it is without Queſtion that, if in the beginning he had not entered himſelf Priſoner, but abſented himſelf, the Lords of Juſtitiary could not have gone further, then, upon a Citation, to have declared him fugitive. But others ſaid that the Earl having both entered himſelf Priſoner, and compeared, and after Debate having been found guilty, before he made his Eſcape, the Caſe was much altered. And whether the Court could, notwithſtanding of the Earl's intervening Eſcape, yet go on to Sentence was ſtill debatable: for it was alledged for the Affirmative that ſeeing the Earl had twice compeared, and that, after Debate, the Court had given Judgment, and the Aſſize returned their Verdict, ſo that nothing remained but the pronouncing of Sentence, it was abſurd to think that it ſhould be in the Power of the Party, thus accuſed, and found guilty, by his Eſcape to fruſtrate Juſtice, and withdraw himſelf from the Puniſhment he deſerved. But on the other Hand it was pleaded for the Earl; that firſt, it was a fundamental Rule, that until once the Cauſe were concluded no Sentence could be pronounced: nixt that it was a ſure Maxime in Law, that in criminal Actions there neither is nor can be any other Concluſion of the Cauſe then the Party's Preſence and Silence; ſo that, after all that had paſt, the Earl had ſtill Freedom to add what he thought fit, in his own Defence, before pronouncing Sentence, and therefore the Lords of Juſtitiary could no more proceed to ſentence againſt him being eſcaped then if he had been abſent from the beginning, the Cauſe being in both Caſes equally not concluded and the Principle of Law uniformly the ſame, viz. that in Criminals (except in Caſes excepted) no final Sentence can be given in Abſence: for, as the Law, in Caſe of Abſence from the beginning, doth hold that juſt Temper as neither to ſuffer the contumacious to go altogether unpuniſhed, nor, on the other Hand, finally to condemn a Party unheard. And therefore doth only declare him fugitive, and there ſtops: ſo in the Caſe of an Eſcape, before Sentence, where it cannot be ſaid the Party was fully heard, and the Cauſe concluded, the Law doth not diſtinguiſh, nor can the Parity of Reaſon be refuſed. Admitting then that the Cauſe was ſo far advanced, againſt the Earl, that he was found Guilty; yet, 1. This is but a declaring of what the Law doth as plainly preſume againſt the Party abſent from the beginning, and conſequently, of it ſelf can operate no further. 2ly, The finding of a Party Guilty is no Concluſion of the Cauſe. And 3ly, As it was never ſeen, nor heard, that a Party was condemned in Abſence, (except in excepted Caſes) whereof the Earl's is none, ſo he having eſcaped and the Cauſe remaining thereby unconcluded, the general Rule did ſtill hold, and no Sentence could be given againſt him.

It was alſo remembred that the Dyets and Days of the juſtice Court are peremptour; and that in that Caſe, even in Civil far more in Criminal Courts and Cauſes, a Citation to hear Sentence is conſtantly required: which induced ſome to think, that at leaſt the Earl ſhould have been lawfully cited to hear Sentence, before it could be pronounced. But it is like this Courſe, as confeſſing a Difficulty, and occaſioning too long a Delay, was therefore not made uſe of. However, upon the whole, it was the general Opinion, that ſeeing the denouncing the Earl Fugitive would have wrought much more in Law then all that was commonly ſaid, at firſt, to be deſigned againſt him: and that his Caſe did appear every way ſo favourable, that impartial Men ſtill wondered how it came to be at all queſtioned, it had been better to have ſiſted the Proceſs, with his Eſcape, and taken the ordinary Courſe of Law, without making any more Stretches.

But as I have told you, when the Fryday came, the Lords of Juſtitiary, without any Reſpect, or Anſwer given to the Petition above-mentioned, given in by the Counteſs of Argyle to the Court for a Stop, pronounced Sentence, firſt in the Court, and then cauſed publiſh the ſame, with all Solemnity, at the Mercat Croſs of Edenburgh.

FOr as much as it is found by an Aſſize that Archibald Earl of Argyle is guilty and culpable of the Crimes of Treaſon, Leaſing-making, and Leaſing-telling, for which he was detained within the Caſtle of Edinburgh, out of which he hes now ſince the ſaid Verdict made his Eſcape: therefore the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſtitiary diſcern and adjudge the ſaid Archibald Earl of Argyle to be execute to the Death, demained as a Traitor, and to underly the Pains of Treaſon, and other Puniſhments appointed by the Laws of this Kingdom, when he ſhall be apprehended, at ſuch a Time, and Place, and in ſuch Manner as his Majeſty in his Royal Pleaſure ſhall think fit to declare and appoint: and his Name, Memory, and Honours, to be extinct: and his Arms to be riven forth, and delete out of the Books of Arms, ſwa that his Poſterity may never have Place nor be able hereafter to bruick or joyſe any Honour, Offices, Titles, or Dignities, within this Realm in time coming and to have forfaulted, amitted, and tint, all and ſundry his Lands, Tenements, Annual-rents, Offices, Titles, Dignities, Tacks, Steedings, Rowmes, Poſſeſſions, Goods, and Geere what ſumever pertaining to him, to our Sovereign Lord, to remain perpetually with his Highneſs in Property. Which was pronounced for Doom— 23 December 1681.

After the reading and publiſhing whereof, the Earl's Coat of Arms, by Order of the Court, was alſo torn, and ranverſed, both in the Court, and at the Mercat Croſs: albeit ſome thought that this was rather a Part of the Execution, which His Majeſty's Letter diſcharges, then a neceſſary Solemnity, in the Publication, and the Advocate himſelf ſays, p. 61. of his printed Criminals, that it ſhould only be practiſed in the Crime of Perduellion but not in other Treaſons.
